PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS
FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, October 2, 1917.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee at a time that is testing the foundations of our Christian civilization to seek Thy guidance and blessing. We know that there is no unity of counsel or of action except that which is found in the moral center of mankind. We pray that these Thy servants who must direct the great currents of thought and shape and mold the policy of the Nation may do so with a conscience void of offense toward God and man, and with the assurance that Thy blessing is resting upon them from day to day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented petitions of sundry citizens of Fort Snelling and St. Paul, Minn.; of W. H. Carey, president of the Grand Rapids Chapter of the Wisconsin Loyalty Legion; and of the Chelan County, State of Washington, Council of Patriotic Service, relative to the public utterances of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. KELLOGG. I send to the desk certain petitions for reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

Petitions from sundry citizens of Duluth, Minn.; from C. E. Wallace, of Duluth, Minn.; from sundry citizens of St. Paul, Minn.; from the Otter Tail County Public Safety Association, of Fergus Falls, Minn.; from W. H. Woodbury and sundry other citizens of Duluth, Minn.; and from Henry I. Cohen, president of the Chamber of Commerce, of Brainerd, Minn.

Mr. STERLING. I send to the desk certain letters and a copy of a resolution adopted by the Aberdeen Rotary Club, of South Dakota. I move that they be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OVERMAN presented a petition of the Caldwell County Council of Defense, of North Carolina, relative to the public utterances of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. KNOX presented a petition of sundry citizens of Coraopolis, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Local Branch No. 1, Glass Bottle Blowers' Association, of Pittsburgh, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called soldiers and sailors' insurance bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of sundry organizations in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation authorizing the drafting of aliens, except alien enemies, into the military service of the United States, which were ordered to lie on the table.

CONFEDERATE VETERANS' REUNION.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I present a copy of the proceedings of the Twenty-seventh Annual Reunion of the United Confederate Veterans, the Eighteenth Annual Convention of the Confederate Southern Memorial Association, and of the Twenty-second Annual Reunion of the Sons of Confederate Veterans, held in the city of Washington, D. C., June 4 to 7, 1917, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Printing for action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 5839) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, in Aitkin County, Logan Township, State of Minnesota, and I submit a report (No. 140) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAWS.

Mr. ASHURST. From the Committee on the Judiciary I am authorized to report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2916) to amend sections 24 and 256 of the Judicial Code, relating to the jurisdiction of the district courts, so as to save to claimants the rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any State, and I submit a report (No. 139) thereon.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill just reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if there is anything in the bill touching the question of the salaries of officers of courts of the United States?

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, no. Mr. President, I can explain in a moment what the bill is, and I think I ought to do that before consent is granted.

The bill was introduced by the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. I present it in his behalf. It is intended to enable longshoremen, stevedores, and others who are engaged in maritime occupations to receive the benefit and advantage of the workmen's compensation laws of the various States.

Under the section of the Judicial Code, to which reference is made in the bill, exclusive jurisdiction over all matters pertaining to maritime relations is conferred upon the courts of the United States. There is in the Judicial Code this saving clause:

> Saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it.

In a case which arose in New York between the Southern Pacific Railroad Co. and a claimant under the workmen's compensation law the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the procedure under these compensatory laws is not a common-law procedure and does not give a common-law remedy, and that therefore the right of such compensation is not reserved in the code as it now is.

The entire change proposed is found in these words: After "saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it," then there is inserted "and to claimants the rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any State." That is the whole change made.

The bill was submitted to the Judiciary Committee and was unanimously approved by the committee. I think no one can even suggest any reason why a stevedore or a longshoreman who suffers an accident may not properly have the benefit of the workmen's compensation law of the State in which he lives and is working.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That clause 3 of section 24 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:
> "Third. Of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it, and to claimants the rights and remedies under the workman's compensation law of any State; of all seizures on land or waters not within admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; of all prizes brought into the United States; and of all proceedings for the condemnation of property taken as prize."
> SEC. 2. That clause 3 of section 256 of the Judicial Code is hereby amended to read as follows:
> "Third. Of all civil causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in all cases the right of a common-law remedy where the common law is competent to give it, and to claimants the rights and remedies under the workmen's compensation law of any State."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

S. 2816. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Gainesville Red River Bridge Co. to construct a bridge across Red River; and

S. 2823. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Elgin, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Fox River at Elgin.

WAR REVENUE—CONFERENCE REPORT (S. DOC. NO. 115).

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to House bill 4280, known as the war-revenue bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the report read?

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask for the reading of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report.

The Secretary proceeded to read the conference report and read to the end of section 211.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the reading of the report down to section 211 includes that portion of the report which defines capital and the methods by which capital is to be ascertained. I asked for the reading of the report because I thought it would be of interest to the Senate; and as the portion of the report relating to capital is, in my view, perhaps the most important part of the report, so far as the changes that are made are concerned, and as the reading of the report does not appear to have held the attention of the Senate, many Senators having absented themselves, I will not ask to have the balance of the report read in the Senate Chamber, but will ask to have it printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is no further objection, the remainder of the report will not be read.

The conference report entire is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "Eight," inserted by said amendment, insert the words "Seven"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 17: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 17, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "and (c) the provisions of subdivision (c) of section 9 of such act, as amended by this act, requiring the normal tax of individuals on income derived from interest to be deducted and withheld at the source of the income shall not apply to the new 2 per cent normal tax prescribed in section 1 of this act until on and after January 1, 1918, and thereafter only one 2 per cent normal tax shall be deducted and withheld at the source under the provisions of such subdivision (c), and any further normal tax for which the recipient of such income is liable under this act or such act of September 8, 1916, as amended by this act, shall be paid by such recipient"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Such contributions or gifts shall be allowable as deductions only if verified under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.'"

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 37: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 200. That when used in this title—

"The term 'corporation' includes joint-stock companies or associations and insurance companies;

"The term 'domestic' means created under the law of the United States, or of any State, Territory, or District thereof, and the term 'foreign' means created under the law of any other possession of the United States or of any foreign country or Government;

"The term 'United States' means only the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the District of Columbia;

"The term 'taxable year' means the 12 months ending December 31, excepting in the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year, in which case it means such fiscal year. The first taxable year shall be the year ending December 31, 1917, except that in the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year, it shall be the fiscal year ending during the calendar year 1917. If a corporation or partnership, prior to March 1, 1918, makes a return covering its own fiscal year, and includes therein the income received during that part of the fiscal year falling within the calendar year 1916, the tax for such taxable year shall be that proportion of the tax computed upon the net income during such full fiscal year which the time from January 1, 1917, to the end of such fiscal year bears to the full fiscal year; and

"The term 'prewar period' means the calendar years 1911, 1912, and 1913, or, if a corporation or partnership was not in existence or an individual was not engaged in a trade or business during the whole of such period, then as many of such years during the whole of which the corporation or partnership was in existence or the individual was engaged in the trade or business.

"The terms 'trade' and 'business' include professions and occupations.

"The term 'net income' means in the case of a foreign corporation or partnership or a nonresident alien individual, the net income received from sources within the United States.

"SEC. 201. That in addition to the taxes under existing law and under this act there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the income of every corporation, partnership, or individual, a tax (hereinafter in this title referred to as the tax) equal to the following percentages of the net income:

"Twenty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of the deduction (determined as hereinafter provided) and not in excess of 15 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year;

"Twenty-five per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 15 per cent and not in excess of 20 per cent of such capital;

"Thirty-five per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 20 per cent and not in excess of 25 per cent of such capital;

"Forty-five per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 25 per cent and not in excess of 33 per cent of such capital; and

"Sixty per cent of the amount of the net income in excess of 33 per cent of such capital.

"For the purpose of this title every corporation or partnership not exempt under the provisions of this section shall be deemed to be engaged in business, and all the trades and businesses in which it is engaged shall be treated as a single trade or business, and all its income from whatever source derived shall be deemed to be received from such trade or business.

"This title shall apply to all trades or businesses of whatever description, whether continuously carried on or not, except—

"(a) In the case of officers and employees under the United States, or any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or any local subdivision thereof, the compensation or fees received by them as such officers or employees;

"(b) Corporations exempt from tax under the provisions of section 11 of Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended by this act, and partnerships and individuals carrying on or doing the same business, or coming within the same description; and

"(c) Incomes derived from the business of life, health, and accident insurance combined in one policy issued on the weekly premium payment plan.

"SEC. 202. That the tax shall not be imposed in the case of the trade or business of a foreign corporation or partnership or a nonresident alien individual, the net income of which trade or business during the taxable year is less than $3,000.

"SEC. 203. That for the purposes of this title the deduction shall be as follows, except as otherwise in this title provided—

"(a) In the case of a domestic corporation, the sum of (1) an amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital for the taxable year which the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business during the prewar period was of the invested capital for the prewar period (but not less than 7 or more than 9 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year), and (2) $3,000.

"(b) In the case of a domestic partnership or of a citizen or resident of the United States, the sum of (1) an amount equal to the same percentage of the invested capital for the taxable year which the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business during the prewar period was of the invested capital for the prewar period (but not less than 7 or more than 9 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year), and (2) $6,000.

"(c) In the case of a foreign corporation or partnership or of a nonresident alien individual, an amount ascertained in the same manner as provided in subdivisions (a) and (b), without any exemption of $3,000 or $6,000.

"(d) If the Secretary of the Treasury is unable satisfactorily to determine the average amount of the annual net income of the trade or business during the prewar period, the deduction shall be determined in the same manner as provided in section 205.

"SEC. 204. That if a corporation or partnership was not in existence, or an individual was not engaged in the trade or business, during the whole of any one calendar year during the prewar period, the deduction shall be an amount equal to 8 per cent of the invested capital for the taxable year, plus in the case of a domestic corporation $3,000, and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States $6,000.

"A trade or business carried on by a corporation, partnership, or individual, although formally organized or reorganized on or after January 2, 1913, which is substantially a continuation of a trade or business carried on prior to that date, shall, for the purpose of this title, be deemed to have been in existence prior to that date, and the net income and invested capital of its predecessor prior to that date shall be deemed to have been its net income and invested capital.

"SEC. 205. (a) That if the Secretary of the Treasury, upon complaint finds either (1) that during the prewar period a domestic corporation or partnership, or a citizen or resident of the United States, had no net income from the trade or business, or (2) that during the prewar period the percentage, which the net income was of the invested capital, was low as compared with the percentage, which the net income during such period of representative corporations, partnerships, and individuals, engaged in a like or similar trade or business, was of their invested capital, then the deduction shall be the sum of (1) an amount equal to the same percentage of its invested capital for the taxable year which the average deduction (determined in the same manner as provided in section 203, without including the $3,000 or $6,000 therein referred to) for such year of representative corporations, partnerships, or individuals, engaged in a like or similar trade or business, is of their average invested capital for such year plus (2) in the case of a domestic corporation $3,000, and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States $6,000.

"The percentage which the net income was of the invested capital in each trade or business shall be determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in accordance with regulations prescribed by him, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. In the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year, the percentage determined by the calendar year ending during such fiscal year shall be used.

"(b) The tax shall be assessed upon the basis of the deduction determined as provided in section 203, but the taxpayer claiming the benefit of this section may at the time of making the return file a claim for abatement of the amount by which the tax so assessed exceeds a tax computed upon the basis of the deduction determined as provided in this section. In such event, collection of the part of the tax covered by such claim for abatement shall not be made until the claim is decided, but if in the judgment of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, the interests of the United States would be jeopardized thereby he may require the claimant to give a bond in such amount and with such sureties as the commissioner may think wise to safeguard such interests, conditioned for the payment of any tax found to be due, with the interest thereon, and if such bond, satisfactory to the commissioner, is not given within such time as he prescribes, the full amount of tax assessed shall be collected and the amount overpaid, if any, shall upon final decision of the application be refunded as a tax erroneously or illegally collected.

"SEC. 206. That for the purposes of this title the net income of a corporation shall be ascertained and returned (a) for the calendar years 1911 and 1912 upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in section 38 of the act entitled 'An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, and encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes,' approved August 5, 1909, except that income taxes paid by it within the year imposed by the authority of the United States shall be included; (b) for the calendar year 1913 upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in Section II of the act entitled 'An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' approved October 3, 1913, except that income taxes paid by it within the year imposed by the authority of the United States shall be included, and except that the amounts received by it as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of other corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, subject to the tax imposed by Section II of such act of October 3, 1913, shall be deducted; and (c) for the taxable year upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in Title I of the act entitled 'An act to increase the revenue, and for other purposes,' approved September 8, 1916, as amended by this act, except that the amounts received by it as dividends upon the stock or from the net earnings of other corporations, joint-stock companies or associations, or insurance companies, subject to the tax imposed by Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, shall be deducted.

"The net income of a partnership or individual shall be ascertained and returned for the calendar years 1911, 1912, and 1913, and for the taxable year, upon the same basis and in the same manner as provided in Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended by this act, except that the credit allowed by subdivision (b) of section 5 of such act shall be deducted. There shall be allowed (a) in the case of a domestic partnership the same deductions as allowed to individuals in subdivisions (a) of section 5 of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended by this act; and (b) in the case of a foreign partnership the same deductions as allowed to individuals in subdivision (a) of section 6 of such act as amended by this act.

"SEC. 207. That as used in this title, the term 'invested capital' for any year means the average invested capital for the year, as defined and limited in this title, averaged monthly.

"SEC. 209. That in the case of a trade or business having no invested capital or not more than a nominal capital there shall be levied, assessed, collected, and paid, in addition to the taxes under existing law and under this act, in lieu of the tax imposed by section 201, a tax equivalent to 8 per cent of the net income of such trade or business in excess of the following deductions: In the case of a domestic corporation, $3,000, and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States $6,000; in the case of all other trades or business, no deduction.

"SEC. 210. That if the Secretary of the Treasury is unable in any case satisfactorily to determine the invested capital, the amount of the deduction shall be the sum of (1) an amount equal to the same proportion of the net income of the trade or business received during the taxable year as the proportion which the average deduction (determined in the same manner as provided in section 203, without including the $3,000 or $6,000 therein referred to) for the same calendar year of representative corporations, partnerships, and individuals, engaged in a like or similar trade or business, bears to the total net income of the trade or business received by such corporations, partnerships, and individuals, plus (2) in the case of a domestic corporation $3,000, and in the case of a domestic partnership or a citizen or resident of the United States $6,000.

"For the purpose of this section the proportion between the deduction and the net income in each trade or business shall be determined by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in accordance with regulations prescribed by him, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. In the case of a corporation or partnership which has fixed its own fiscal year, the proportion determined for the calendar year ending during such fiscal year shall be used.

"SEC. 211. Such returns shall be rendered at the same time and in the same manner as is prescribed for income-tax returns under Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended by this act.

"SEC. 212. That all administrative, special, and general provisions of law, including the laws in relation to the assessment, remission, collection, and refund of internal-revenue taxes not heretofore specifically repealed, and not inconsistent with the provisions of this title, are hereby extended and made applicable to all the provisions of this title and to the tax herein imposed, and all provisions of Title I of such act of September 8, 1916, as amended by this act, relating to returns and payment of the tax therein imposed, including penalties, are hereby made applicable to the tax imposed by this title.

"SEC. 213. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall make all necessary regulations for carrying out the provisions of this title, and may require any corporation, partnership, or individual, subject to the provisions of this title, to furnish him with such facts, data, and information as in his judgment are necessary to collect the tax imposed by this title.

"SEC. 214. That Title II (sections 200 to 207, inclusive) of the act entitled 'An act to provide increased revenue to defray the expenses of the increased appropriations for the Army and Navy, and the extensions of fortifications, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1917, is hereby repealed.

"Any amount heretofore or hereafter paid on account of the tax imposed by such Title II, shall be credited toward the payment of the tax imposed by this title, and if the amount so paid exceeds the amount of such tax the excess shall be refunded as a tax erroneously or illegally collected.

"Subdivision (1) of section 301 of such act of September 8, 1916, is hereby amended so that the rate of tax for the taxable year 1917 shall be 10 per cent instead of 12½ per cent, as therein provided.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the report be agreed to?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want, if my strength holds out, to state as briefly as I can the more important changes that have been made in the pending bill in conference. In passing let me say the conferees were engaged in continuous consideration of the bill for over two weeks—sat every day generally from 10 o'clock in the morning until 6 o'clock in the afternoon. Our deliberations from the beginning to the end were pleasant, and there is no justification for certain published statements with reference to personal wrangles and antagonisms in our meetings. As is always the case in dealing in measures of vast magnitude touching the financial interests of the people, there were sharp disagreements resulting in much discussion and calling for concessions and compromises, but these discussions were in good humor and the concessions were mutual.

Concerning the final result, I wish to say that, in my judgment, as a result of our deliberations and the changes and modifications we have made, the bill comes back to the Congress better than it was when it left either House.

The Senate made 320 amendments to the House bill. In conference the Senate receded from 55 of these amendments. The House agreed without amendment to 210 of them, and to the other 65 with amendments.

It was estimated that the bill as it passed the House would raise $1,862,000,000. The Senate struck out of the bill as passed by the House certain items estimated to raise $358,000,000. These items were in the main the retroactive taxes on 1916 incomes, estimated to raise $108,000,000; the 10 per cent ad valorem tariff duties on imports, both free and dutiable, estimated to raise $200,000,000; certain taxes on electric power for domestic uses, and on the amount paid for light and heat service, and telephone service to subscribers, estimated to yield thirty millions; tax on certain classes of advertising, estimated to yield seven and one-half millions of dollars; 5 per cent gross sales tax on automobile, motorcycle, and bicycle tires, estimated to yield twelve and one-half millions of dollars, to all of which the conferees agreed.

For these eliminations by the Senate from the House bill, amounting in the aggregate, as stated before, to $358,000,000, and to which the conferees agreed, there was nothing in the nature of a substitute tax imposed by the conferees.

In addition to these eliminations the Senate reduced certain rates imposed by the House, estimated to yield in round numbers seventy-two millions, and the conferees agreed to the same. These reductions were upon proprietary medicines, passenger transportation, musical instruments, moving-picture films, jewelry, and so on. They were items on which the House imposed certain gross sales taxes averaging about 5 per cent. As the result of these eliminations and reductions the estimated revenue from the House bill was reduced, in round numbers, from $1,862,000,000 to $1,433,000,000.

The total amount of revenue estimated from the bill as agreed upon in conference is $2,535,000,000, so that the increases made in the Senate and in conference amount to $1,102,000,000. Of this increase one hundred and twenty-eight millions was added in conference, and the balance, namely, nine hundred and seventy-four millions, was made by the Senate and agreed to by the conferees.

I have made this financial summary because I thought it might be helpful to lay these facts before Senators before entering upon a detailed discussion of the changes made in the bill in conference.

I think I can present to the Senate the work of the conference more satisfactorily by discussing the changes made in the different titles in the order in which they appear in the bill, beginning with tax upon incomes.

In passing, it might be well to say that the pending bill does not repeal the existing income-tax law, the rates imposed being simply additional to those imposed by the existing law. This is true both of the normal and the surtaxes imposed by the pending measure. That is to say, the taxpayer will have to pay both the normal and the surtaxes imposed in the existing law, and in addition to that, those imposed in the pending bill.

Now, as to the changes made in conference, speaking generally, virtually all the amendments made by the Senate to this title of the bill were retained in conference. The only change in the rates was, first, incomes between fifteen and twenty thousand dollars. The Senate had fixed the rate at 6 per cent, and the conferees reduced it to 5 per cent. This reduction conformed to the ratio of increases up to that point in the bill; the Senate increase did not conform to it. Second, on incomes between twenty and forty thousand dollars. The Senate had fixed the rate at 8 per cent, the House had fixed it at 6, and the conferees fixed it at 7 per cent. These changes will make practically little difference in the revenues.

The estimated increase in the revenues from incomes amounting to about $15,000,000 is not the result of these conference changes in rates, but chiefly because of a modification made by the conferees in the Senate amendment relating to dividends received from corporations. Under the present law these dividends when received by one corporation from another are not exempt from the normal income tax, as they would be if received by an individual. The Senate amendment placed individuals and corporations receiving dividends on corporate stock upon a parity and allowed both an exemption from the normal tax, that tax having been paid by the corporation declaring the dividend. The conference modified this amendment as to dividends received by a corporation so as to make it applicable only to the additional tax imposed in the pending bill. As a result of this conference amendment to the Senate amendment the estimated revenues from incomes will be increased to the extent of collections from these dividends under existing law. The amount involved is estimated at about $15,000,000.

In this connection I wish to refer briefly to another Senate income-tax amendment materially affecting the revenues from this source which in a slightly modified form was agreed to by the conferees. It relates to the undistributed surplus of corporations.

Under existing law—indeed, under every revenue law heretofore enacted taxing incomes—the normal tax upon corporations has been the same as that upon individuals, but corporations as such have not been required to pay any surtax. Of course, dividends declared by corporations have been subject to the surtax of the individual stockholder receiving them, but neither the existing law nor the House bill require corporations to distribute their earnings or impose any surtax or penalty upon such part of their earnings as remained undistributed. As a result the corporations of the country have accumulated large undivided surpluses which have escaped the income surtax as long as they remained undistributed. It is evident that in these circumstances the greater the individual surtax the greater the inducement to corporations to refrain from distributing their surpluses.

Your committee thought it expedient to devise some method of coercing distribution of these earnings when not retained for the necessary requirements of the business. With this end in view the Senate adopted an amendment proposed by the Finance Committee imposing a tax of 10 per cent upon the undistributed surplus of a corporation but exempted from this tax such retained surplus as the Secretary of the Treasury should ascertain and find was reasonably required in the business and actually employed in it.

Under existing law and in the House bill the accumulated surplus of corporations when distributed, whether in cash or in stock, become subject to surtax of the stockholder receiving it unless the surplus thus distributed was accumulated prior to March 1, 1916, the date of the adoption of the income-tax amendment to the Constitution. Surplus acquired before that date is not and can not be subject to an income tax of any kind. In this condition of the law it was clearly to the interest of the corporation to distribute its surplus accumulated before 1913 instead of that more recently accumulated.

In order to be just to the corporations and at the same time to encourage them to distribute their annual earnings your committee reported to the Senate and the Senate adopted an amendment providing that the surplus when distributed shall be taxed to the distribution at the rate prescribed by law for the year in which they were earned, but also provided that any distributions of surplus made in 1917 or subsequent tax years should be deemed to have been made from the most recently accumulated undivided profits, thereby making it necessary for the corporation to distribute its surplus earned since March 1, 1913, before that earned prior to that time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to ask the Senator from North Carolina what is the reason for that inhibition? There must be some purpose in it. Is the purpose to stimulate the business with the previously acquired surplus?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the purpose, if the Senator will pardon me, is simply not to permit such corporate dividends to escape the tax by distributing surplus which was earned 10 or 20 years ago, and not distributed up to this time, and which really has been merged into the capital instead of distributing the more recently earned surplus which would be subject to the tax.

The conferees agreed to these amendments but added an amendment to the effect that the latter amendment—that is to say, the one requiring the distribution to be made from the most recently acquired surplus—should not apply to any distribution made prior to August 1, 1917, out of earnings accrued prior to March 1, 1913.

In this same connection the Senate adopted another income-tax amendment of very great importance in equalizing the burdens of the income-tax situation as between corporations, partnerships, and individuals. In view of the fact that under the law even as amended, as hereinbefore stated, necessarily a considerable portion—probably more than one-third—of the earnings of the corporations would never be distributed, and hence will never pay the surtax which individuals are required to pay by way of recouping this loss and bringing about parity between corporations, partnerships, and individuals in respect to the surtax the Senate imposed an additional 2 per cent income tax upon the net earnings of all corporations, thereby making what may be called the normal tax of corporations 2 per cent higher than the normal tax of the individual. It is estimated that the revenue from this amendment will amount to $180,000,000. The House conferees readily agreed to this important Senate amendment.

The Senate made another amendment materially effecting the revenues from incomes which, with slight modification, was agreed to by the conferees. I refer to the Senate amendment repealing the law requiring collection at the source except as to foreign corporations and nonresident aliens, and substituting therefor information at the source. This amendment was strongly recommended by the Treasury Department, but the repeal of "collection" at the source was strongly opposed by the holders of certain securities, chiefly the bonds of railroads, containing what is known as the "tax-free-covenant" clause. It was contended that the repeal of this law might enable the corporations issuing these securities to evade the obligations created by these covenants. The disagreement between the two Houses with respect to this matter was finally adjusted by the conferees on the part of the House agreeing to the Senate amendment with a provision retaining collection at the source as to this class of securities.

Mr. President, I think these are substantially all the changes which were made by the conferees directly affecting the income-tax section of the bill. They were changes, as I have stated before, which will but slightly affect the revenues from incomes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator has already answered the question which I desire to ask, but I did not clearly understand his answer, and I hope he will pardon me if I again ask the question, and have the answer partially repeated. The Senator stated as to the amendments affecting the income tax that they altogether resulted in an increase in the income tax.

Mr. SIMMONS. I stated that the amendments made in the Senate would result, if adopted, in an increase of that tax by about $252,000,000, as I remember. I said that the changes made in conference in the income-tax rates did not materially change the revenue.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that; that in fact they had reduced it just a little.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should say probably by a small amount, probably about $6,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. In one place the rate is reduced from 6 per cent to 5 per cent, and in another place it is reduced from 8 per cent to 7 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am advised that that change would result in a reduction of about $6,000,000. If the Senator will pardon me, the amendment to which I referred with reference to the dividends of corporations would raise the amount of estimated revenues from income about $15,000,000. This is not an amendment to the rates, but it affects the amount estimated from the tax.

Mr. NORRIS. That is what I wanted to get at. The effect of the amendments made by the conference committee in reference to the income tax will, in the judgment of the Senator, result in an increase of the revenue from the income tax?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; of about $9,000,000.

Mr. NORRIS. And that comes about from the amendment relating to the surplus of corporations?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; not to the surplus, but to the dividends of corporations.

Mr. NORRIS. I mean from the dividends, and not the surplus, which must be distributed under the amendment.

Mr. SIMMONS. I now invite the attention of Senators to the changes recommended by the conferees with respect to the excess-profits title of the bill. Senators will remember that the Senate struck out this entire title of the House bill and substituted for it a profits tax based upon a radically different principle from that of the House bill. While the conferees have made various changes in this title as amended by the Senate, they have been largely changes in form rather than in essence. The scheme of the Senate has been retained. The exemption to which the taxpayer is entitled is based, as provided in the Senate amendment, upon his prewar earnings—that is to say, his average net earnings during the years 1911, 1912, and 1913. The maximum and minimum principle of the Senate amendment is retained, but it is changed from a maximum of 10 per cent and a minimum of 6 per cent to a maximum of 9 per cent and a minimum of 7 per cent.

The House bill also provided a flat rate amounting to 16 per cent upon the net earnings of the taxpayer. The Senate substituted for this flat rate a graduated rate, running from 12 per cent to 60 per cent, according to the percentage of increase in earnings during the taxable year over the earnings of the prewar period. The House conferees agreed to the substitution of a graduated for the flat rate, but the graduated scale agreed upon runs from 20 per cent to 60 per cent, instead of from 12 per cent to 60 per cent. The resultant revenues are estimated to be practically the same as under the graduated rate provided in the Senate amendment. The basis and method of the calculation are slightly different. Under the Senate amendment the calculation was on the basis of increase in profits over prewar earnings; the method adopted by the conferees is based upon the increase profits on invested capital over the deductions. The principle is the same and the resultant revenues are virtually the same.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, what was ever the advantage of basing the percentage to be imposed on excess profits upon the deductions, instead of upon the amount of the excess over the deductions? That was the Senate method, to fix the rate or the percentage on the deductions, instead of on the excess over the deductions.

Mr. SIMMONS. What we have been trying to do is to allow to the taxpayers as a deduction what we have regarded as their normal profit. The original Senate bill was drafted upon the principle that whatever a man made before the war was to be regarded as his peace profit, as his normal profit, a profit that was not made out of the war, and that should not be subjected to a war tax, and that the tax rate should depend upon the increase in net income over the normal income. That was the original theory of the Senate bill, and that was continued until the Senate modified that principle by limiting the deduction by introducing the maximum and minimum provision.

Now, if the Senator means to inquire of me why a maximum and minimum instead of a flat rate upon invested capital as the deduction, then I answer him——

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, not at all; the Senator evidently does not get the point I wish to raise. In imposing the income tax on individuals, we first make an exemption of a certain amount, and then we impose a surtax based upon the amount of his income above his exemption. That is the method now adopted in connection with the corporation income tax. But I never have been able to understand why the Senate committee recommended that you should first make an exemption and then figure the amount of the percentage imposed on the deduction, instead of upon the excess above the deduction. I never have been able to see the advantage of that system.

Mr. SIMMONS. The deduction, of course, was the normal profit, not an arbitrary exemption, I will say to the Senator. What we sought to do was to base the graduated tax on the percentage of increased profits over the normal or prewar profit.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator leaves the excess-profits tax, if this is a convenient place, I should be glad to submit one question to him.

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Under the bill as reported by the conferees, will the amount of revenue derived from excess profits, particularly, that derived from corporations, be as great as it would have been under the Senate bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. Not quite; about $60,000,000 less.

Mr. KING. And from what brackets—using the term so frequently used in the debate—would that $60,000,000 come?

Would it not come from the brackets under which the Steel Corporation and those corporations having great profits would pay their taxes?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the Steel Corporation and the big corporations about which the Senator speaks are caught by the higher rates. The decrease in revenue does not result from any change of rates. The loss results from the flat exemption of $3,000 allowed to corporations in the conference report, as compared with the qualified $5,000 exemption allowed in the Senate amendment. The Senator will readily see that only a small class of corporations would have received the benefit of the $5,000 qualified exemption provided in the Senate bill, because most of them were making more than $5,000. Under the conference agreement all corporations are given the benefit of this $3,000 exemption. This causes the estimated decrease in revenue to which I called attention.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand the Senator, under the present bill as reported there will be no substantial reduction from the amount which would have been obtained from taxes upon the large corporations under the Senate bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; except because of and on account of the exemptions I have just mentioned—practically none.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator from North Carolina explain the reason why, in section 203, subdivision (a), on page 34, in addition to the 7 and 9 per cent exemption, there is a $3,000 deduction, while in the next subdivision (b) for the partnership or individual there is a deduction of $6,000, in addition to the 7 or 9 per cent deduction, a corporation being allowed a deduction of $3,000 and a partnership or individual a deduction of $6,000?

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will just wait a moment, I will try to explain that in connection with the reason for bringing in the individual. In the present law and in the House bill the excess-profits tax applied only to corporations and partnerships; that is the way the bill came to us from the House, and that is the way it is in the present law. The Senate committee thought there was no good reason in principle or otherwise why an individual should not be subjected to this tax and thereby be required to contribute out of his profits in trade or business to the expenses of the Government as well as a partnership or corporation. So we added individuals. That amendment was a very important one; it brought practically everybody engaged in trade and business in this country under the provisions of this title of the bill and required them to contribute their mite to the expenses of the war. We thought it was obviously the right thing to do; but there was some dissent in conference as to that. Finally, however, the conferees on the part of the House yielded their objections to the inclusion of the individual engaged in trade or business, but they objected to exempting from the tax occupations and professions with no invested capital or with merely a nominal invested capital.

The conferees on the part of the House insisted that there was no reason in principle why the professional man with no invested capital should not pay the tax as well as the man engaged in business with invested capital. When we decided to include occupations and professions the question of how to determine the deduction to be allowed greatly perplexed us. There was no invested capital, and therefore no basis upon which to make such a calculation as in the case of individuals, partnerships, or corporations engaged in trade or business requiring the investment of capital. So we decided that in the case of the business or the occupation without invested capital, or merely nominal capital, as it was impractical to apply the exemption based on capital, we would impose a flat tax, as in the case of the special tax imposed in the present law upon munition manufacturers—a flat tax of 8 per cent upon their earnings during the taxable year, less the flat exemption allowed in other cases.

It is said that this imposes a double income tax upon occupations or professions doing business with only a nominal capital, and that it works a discrimination in favor of corporations, partnerships, and individuals doing business with capital. This suggestion is based upon a misapprehension and is unwarranted.

Properly understood, the so-called excess or war taxes imposed in the title of the bill under discussion are in essence income taxes—that is to say, taxes based upon net earnings with exemptions. Where there is capital the exemption, while based upon net prewar earnings, can not in any case exceed 9 per cent of the invested capital. So that any individual, partnership, or corporation which is now making no more than before the war, or even not as much as before the war, may have to pay a heavy tax. The case of the Ford Automobile Co. is a good illustration. It is probably making no more now on its capital than it did before the war, but it will have to pay a large tax—probably a tax of about $9,000,00 for the present fiscal year. The tax is therefore, in essence, an income tax with an exemption which can not exceed 9 per cent of the invested capital plus from $3,000 to $6,000 as the case may be.

The rate of taxation applied in the case of invested capital is graduated, the minimum rate being 20 per cent and the maximum being 60 per cent.

The tax imposed upon individuals, partnerships, and corporations engaged in business without invested capital is, in essence, just as in the other case, an additional income tax, with the flat exemption of from $3,000 to $6,000 allowed as in the other case, but from necessity without the exemption based upon invested capital, because there is no capital invested as in the other case. Instead of a graduated rate of from 20 per cent to 60 per cent, a flat rate of 8 per cent is imposed. It may be that this arrangement does not accurately adjust the differences between the two cases, but it is confidently believed if there is any discrimination it is not a discrimination against business without capital. Not a discrimination against the professional man or the occupation without invested capital.

The confusion about this matter seems to grow out of the impression that the tax now levied is a war tax, a tax based upon the actual difference between the net earnings during the prewar period and the taxable year. That was true of the bill as it was originally reported back to the Senate by the Finance Committee, but that is not true of the bill as amended limiting the exemption to not less than 7 per cent or more than 9 per cent of the invested capital.

The Senator asked me why we have allowed a corporation an exemption of only $3,000 in addition to its percentage deduction, and a partnership or an individual $6,000. The Senator will recall that in the bill as it passed the Senate we gave the individual taxpayer a flat exemption of $5,000. We did not give that to the corporation. We only allowed the corporation an exemption in case its net income did not exceed $5,000. If its income exceeded $5,000, then its total net income, less the deduction, became subject to the tax. Now, the change that we have made is probably more favorable to the corporations, taken as a whole, than the bill as it passed the Senate, because we make absolute the exemption of $3,000 now accorded them, whereas before it was only qualified and uncertain. The Senator also inquires why we made this differentiation in the exemptions in favor of individuals and partnerships. We did it for the reason that the corporation has the privilege, which it always exercises, of paying its officers and managers salaries and deducting from the earnings of the corporation the amounts so paid as a part of the expense of the business. In the law as it is written the members of partnerships or individuals can not allow themselves compensation for their personal services, so that if the Senator and I were operating as a corporation we could pay ourselves a salary out of the earnings of that corporation and deduct it, giving in our income tax; but if we were operating as partners we would not be entitled under the law to pay ourselves salaries and have the amount deducted. Such a course would be inconsistent with the whole income-tax scheme with reference to partnerships, because a partnership does not have to pay any income tax, as a corporation does. Under the law all of its earnings are regarded as distributed, whether actually distributed or not. Though they may be retained in the business, the law, when it goes to impose the income tax upon the partners regards the total earnings of the year as having come into their hands, and requires them to give in those earnings for taxation. The same is true with respect to the individual. The partner stands exactly in the position of the individual. Neither is permitted to allow himself a salary and deduct it, and if he were permitted to allow a salary for personal service, and deduct it in ascertaining his excess-profits tax, he would have to give the amount so allowed in for income tax, and the thing would be as broad as it is long.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope the Senator will not forget to suggest right here, also, that if an individual has an income from any other source outside of the partnership, then everything that is earned by the partnership, though not distributed at all, is added to his individual income, as it is charged to the individual, and becomes subject to the supertax, the heavier tax, while the stockholder in a corporation does not have to pay a tax on anything that the corporation earns until it has been distributed and is in his possession.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator's statement is correct. The reasons for the differentiation in the exemptions we have allowed are, I think, quite clear and sufficient.

Mr. President, before leaving the subject of the excess-profits tax I wish to say that before agreeing to the amendment made in conference changing the maximum and minimum prewar exemption as fixed by the Senate from 6 to 10 per cent to 7 and 9 per cent, your conferees insisted, if these changes were made, there should be a liberalization of the definition of capital as contained in the bill as it passed both the House and the Senate. That definition, as you will recall, provided in substance that tangible property paid in in the place of cash for stock or shares in a corporation should be valued as at the time of payment. This part of the definition was qualified so as to provide that in case such tangible property was paid in before January 1, 1914, it should be valued at its actual cash value as of January 1, 1914, not to exceed the par value of the stock or shares specifically issued therefor.

The provision in the definition relating to good will, trademarks, and so forth, did not include good will paid for in stock or shares, but only when paid for in cash or tangible property. This provision was modified so as to provide that good will, and so forth, bona fide purchases prior to March 3, 1917, for stock or shares in an amount not to exceed 20 per cent of the total stock or shares of the corporation or partnership shall be included as invested capital at its value at the time of purchase, and in no case to exceed the par value of the stock.

It also provided that patents and copyrights shall be treated as material assets and allowances made to the extent of the actual value at the time of the purchase, not to exceed par value of stock or shares issued therefor.

In this connection attention is called to another important amendment adopted in conference at the instance of the Senate conferees to protect the revenues against frauds and evasions through reorganization and recapitalization. It provides in general terms that in case of a reorganization, consolidation, or change in ownership of a trade or business after March 3, 1917, if the interest or control of such trade or business remains practically the same the assets transferred or received from the prior trade or business shall have no greater value than in computing the invested capital of such prior trade or business if such assets had not been transferred, unless such assets were paid for specifically in cash or tangible property, and then not to exceed the actual cash or cash value of such tangible property paid therefor at the time of payment.

I now come to the title of the bill which relates to the tax upon beverages. Practically the only change made by the conferees with reference to this title relates to the rate of taxation and the elimination of the so-called material tax. This is the tax imposed in the original Senate amendment on certain materials used in the manufacture of distilled spirits and fermented liquors. The conferees struck out these material taxes because they were thought to be somewhat inconsistent with the provisions of the food-control law with respect to the same subject and because, in view of that legislation, it was thought these provisions were entirely unnecessary.

There were no changes by the conferees in the rates imposed upon distilled spirits. The House bill imposed an additional tax of $1.10 upon distilled spirits for beverage purposes, and the Senate increased this rate to $2.10 additional, making the total tax under existing law and the pending bill on distilled spirits for beverage purposes $3.20 instead of $2.20, as provided in the House bill, and the House conferees agreed to the increase.

The conferees made no change in the rate of tax fixed in the Senate amendment on fermented liquors or beers. The Senate amendment increased this rate, and the House conferees agreed to that increase. The rate under existing law and the pending bill is $3 per barrel.

The only change made by the conferees on soft drinks was to increase the rate on sirups and extracts from 3 cents to 5 cents per gallon. The House had imposed a gross-sales tax upon sirups and extracts. The Senate changed it to a tax of 3 cents per gallon, and the conferees increased it to 5 cents per gallon.

The rates upon wines and grape brandy, or grape spirits, used in the fortification of wines were changed in conference both from the rates fixed in the House bill and in the Senate amendments. The rates agreed upon are higher than the rates of the House and lower than the rates of the Senate bill. As a result of the changes thus made there will be a slight loss in revenue.

The main changes that we made in the wine and brandy schedule were to carry out a compromise that had been made of an old feud existing between the wine growers of California and the wine growers of the Eastern States. That compromise was made and written into the law here several years ago. Of course, we increased the tax both upon wines and upon brandy, but in making the increases we made them so as to conform to the principles of that compromise.

Some of these wines are fortified with distilled spirits, while others are fortified with grape spirits. The conferees made the same percentage of increase in the tax on grape spirits used in fortifying wines that is made upon distilled spirits used in fortifying wines, the difference in the rates upon these two articles used for fortifying purposes grows out of the fact that a gallon of distilled spirits will, it is claimed, fortify three or four times as much wine as a gallon of grape spirits.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is the Senator about to go to another title?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The Senator has passed by a place at which I should like to ask a question, on page 52. I notice that the conferees have agreed to restore the so-called munitions tax, which the Senate in its bill had repealed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The tax, however, is restored only for the present year, and the rate is reduced to 10 per cent.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator inform me why that tax is sought to be retained? It impresses me as such an unjust tax that if the Senator could tell me without disclosing the confidences of the committee, I should like to know why it is retained.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senate with entire frankness with reference to this tax that personally I feel about it very much the same as the Senator from Delaware has expressed himself. That, however, was one of the questions in difference between the House and the Senate, upon which the conferees were satisfied it would be impossible for them to get together without some compromise. The House conferees were insistent upon continuing the special tax imposed in the existing law upon munitions. We finally adjusted the matter by the House accepting a proposition to reduce the rate from 12½ to 10 per cent and to confine the tax in its operations to this calendar year. Now, the Senator asks me why that was done. It is but fair that I should answer not only from my standpoint and that of the Senate conferees, but from the standpoint of the House conferees as well.

Under the present law manufacturers of munitions are required to pay an excess-profits tax, as are other manufacturers, and in addition a flat tax upon net profits of 12½ per cent. When this law was passed we were not engaged in war. These manufacturers were selling enormous quantities of munitions at high prices to certain of the European belligerents. They were making more profits out of the war than anybody else, and there was a general demand that they should be required to pay this extra tax. That situation is changed. We are now in a sense the allies of the European belligerents, to whom they are supplying these munitions. This Government has also become a purchaser of these materials, and our Government has been committed to the policy of protecting its allies against excess prices for war supplies furnished to them by us.

Under these circumstances, from my standpoint and the standpoint of the Senate conferees, as well as the Senate as expressed in its action, this tax should not be continued, but it is just to say that the House conferees did not agree with this contention. The special tax imposed in the present law for the current year has not been paid. It will not be due until next June. When it is paid it will be based upon the net earnings of the current year. The House conferees contended, and it must be admitted with some reason, that the sales for this year to the belligerents had been made with reference to this tax; that in many instances contracts had been made with the belligerents including the taxes in the price, and that some of these contracts are still in operation, and that no special injustice would be done in requiring these manufacturers to pay this tax. It was further represented to us by them that the situation in the House with reference to this tax was such as to make it difficult to secure the concurrence of that body in its elimination from the bill. Under these circumstances a compromise was made by which the tax was reduced, as I have before stated, to 10 per cent, with a provision that the tax should become inoperative after the first day of January, 1918.

I wish to say frankly to the Senate that this tax and what is known as the postal taxes, especially the publishers' tax, were the two things—there were others, but these were the two main things—upon which I reached the conclusion, as I think my associate conferees did, that without some compromise we would not be able to report to our respective Houses an agreement. Ordinarily a disagreement on the part of conferees is not a serious matter, but I think a disagreement of the conferees over this bill would have been a very serious thing. To have reported a disagreement upon this bill—a bill raising the revenues to defray the expenses of the war—would have been a most serious matter. It would have been misunderstood and misconstrued not only at home but abroad, especially by our enemies across the water. A disagreement under these circumstances would have been almost a public calamity. It was not to be thought of if possible to be avoided.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I quite agree with the Senator from North Carolina that when the two Houses are in an apparent deadlock a compromise is necessary, and this great measure ought not to be defeated by an inability to agree. I should like to ask the Senator a further question. If the House conferees took the position they did upon the ground suggested by the Senator, of course if the claim upon which the position is predicated is not true then the House conferees, I assume, would have receded from their position.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware will suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2854) to amend the naturalization laws.

Mr. CALDER. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be temporarily laid aside. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if there was any attempt made to ascertain whether or not as a matter of fact the munition makers had placed their price to the foreign purchasers at a figure that covered this tax?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator that one of the conferees on the part of the Senate did make an effort in that direction and stated the result of his investigation. He contended that that statement did not apply to many of the manufacturers of munitions, but that it did apply to some. But the controversy continued. It was contended that though all the manufacturers did not have these contracts by which the tax was added to the price, those who did have them naturally became the beneficiaries of these increased prices. Moreover, as I have stated before, it was contended with much earnestness that the situation in the House with reference to this tax was such that its elimination would make it extremely uncertain whether the House could be induced to concur.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If in the case of any of those I am at all acquainted with—and I am not intimately acquainted with any of them—that tax was added to the price, it is new information to me. If they did get a price with that tax added, of course it is perfectly proper for the Government to collect the tax from them; but I am inclined to think that they did not.

Mr. SIMMONS. It was said there was an agreement that the foreign Governments would reimburse them for the tax. That would, of course, mean the inclusion of the tax in the price.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator does not mind an interruption——

Mr. SIMMONS. Not at all; I have no objection.

Mr. POMERENE. I realize, of course, that compromises must be made between the members of a conference committee of the two Houses where there is a difference of opinion. I can understand why when we were not engaged in this war there should be a tax upon the munition makers. But we are now engaged in a common cause with our allies against a common enemy, and if there is one thing that we need in order to win the war it is ammunition. The munition makers ought to pay their full share of taxes. That has been provided for by the income tax and by the so-called war-profits tax; but why in addition to that another tax should be placed upon these munition makers is beyond my comprehension. They have been selected out by this provision of the bill, they whose services we need, and have been subjected to a special tax.

In other words, they have been penalized. I can understand how the German Kaiser and the German Reichstag and the German Army and Navy would approve that course, but I do not understand at this time why an American Congress should approve it. The Senator has put the matter very forcibly when he makes the statement that we had to yield certain points. I can understand that, and I can understand why there should be a special tax on munition makers when we were not engaged in the war, but when we need their output, why we should penalize them I do not understand.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the Senator from North Carolina permit me to suggest that some of these munition makers to my knowledge put themselves in a condition of preparedness that the Government in none of its branches can equal, and yet in the vital matter of munitions for the Government an American Congress penalizes them for that efficiency.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has stated on the floor of the Senate what I have not only stated in conference but repeated very many times. I do not intend, and I have said to my associate conferees of the House I do not intend, to justify this tax. I do not justify it. I give you the situation. I give you the reasons which the conferees on the part of the House gave for their insistence.

However, it is proper to say that this tax under the compromise rate will expire the 1st day of January. It has only about three months longer to run. Of course that does not justify it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator from North Carolina will yield, I want to say that I am very much gratified on account of the constituency which I represent, which is very largely interested in the matter, to hear the Senator from North Carolina make the statement that he has made regarding the unjustifiable character of this tax. It was unjustifiable originally, and it was due, I think, largely to the pro-German propaganda in this country that the tax was enlarged upon and advocated and placed upon the people of the country who were preparing the country for a war that obviously was coming upon us. I am very much gratified, and I have been all through these discussions, to know what the position of the Senator from North Carolina has been upon it. I trust that when this tax does expire on the 1st of January, as it does under the terms of the bill, we may never again be so afflicted by a propaganda to aid persons with whom we are undoubtedly going to be at war.

Mr. PENROSE. Will the Senator from North Carolina permit me at this point?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. I can state that the chairman of the Finance Committee resisted the imposition of this tax or its continuation as long as possible, and I myself bitterly resented the suggestion of the tax as unjustifiable from every point of view; but it was represented to the conferees in entire good faith, I think, that it would be difficult to get the House to agree to the repeal of the munitions tax for this year. Somehow or other the impression had gotten abroad that the tax had been allowed for in the contracts already made, and, although such was not the fact, the impression proved to be impossible to eradicate.

Under all the circumstances the Senate conferees yielded, although I am satisfied there was no point in the bill which they were disposed to resist to a greater length than this special tax. No one has condemned it more severely than I from every point of view. The only redeeming feature is that the tax ceases this year, and it has been reduced to 10 per cent instead of 12½ on the theory that about 10½ months of the year will have elapsed before the law becomes effective and that will about cover the period of the year prior to the enactment of the law. It is one of the several objectionable features of this measure, but I have concluded to vote for the adoption of the report, because we know that we must pass the revenue bill, the defeat of which would be disastrous. Even if the bill is only 80 per cent good, it ought, in my opinion, to be passed ultimately.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understood that that was the attitude of the Senate conferees and also of the Senate committee, and having made, as I tried to do in the Senate, a special fight on this tax as being most unfair to a very large number of the people whom I represent, I am very glad to know that the Senate conferees succeeded in stopping this injustice with the present year. I know that my constituents will appreciate that.

Mr. PENROSE. I wish to add further, as one of the conferees, that I think the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee acted in entire good faith and believed that with these taxes, spread as they are over the moving-picture shows and other general matters affecting the mass of the people, he could not get a conference report through the House which would provide for the absolute repeal of the munitions tax for this year.

One unfortunate occurrence is largely to blame. It appears certain munition manufacturers during the pendency of the act of 1916, when the munitions tax was proposed in Congress, safeguarded themselves by having in their contracts with foreign belligerents for the delivery of munitions a covenant by which the foreign Government undertook to pay any tax which might be imposed. Communications were sent quite largely to Members of the House and Senate and to the conferees urging that they be allowed a credit for that amount of the tax in relation to these additional war taxes, conveying the impression that nearly all the contracts made contained such a covenant. In the last hours of the conference it proved impossible to eradicate that notion. In the opinion of the House conferees it would have been impossible to persuade the House of Representatives that all the contracts did not contain that covenant.

Investigation proved clearly, Mr. President, that less than 10 per cent of all the munition contracts did contain such a covenant, and that those contracts were only with one Government, England, and they had only been made during the uncertainty of the origial munitions-tax proposition. But as I said in the last hours of the conference, with the bill to be hastily disposed of in the House of Representatives, as it was yesterday, it was deemed impossible to persuade the Members of the House otherwise. The situation was largely due—I do not say to intentional misrepresentation—but to representations which conveyed the impression that the purchaser of these munitions was paying the taxes and that the taxpayer would not be relieved by the repeal of the munitions tax for this year.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, there was very little change made by the conferees in the title relating to tobacco and its products. The tax on cigarettes and on smoking and chewing tobacco was slightly increased over the Senate rate. The Senate had provided for an increase of 75 cents per thousand on the ordinary-sized cigarettes over the present law. The conferees increased that to 80 cents, adding 5 cents per thousand more. The Senate amendment provided for an increase of the tax on tobacco of 4 cents per pound, the present rate being 8 cents. The conferees added 5 cents per pound to that rate instead of 4. The sizes of packages as provided in the Senate amendment for tobacco, snuff, and cigarettes are the same as in the bill as passed by the Senate. The Senate amendments reducing the amount of floor stock exempted from the tax in the House bill were also retained. With the exception of these increases in the tax on cigarettes and tobacco, there is no change in the rate of tax in the Senate amendments with reference to these products.

The taxes upon public utilities have been only slightly changed by the conference. The Senate reduced the rate of the tax upon the amount paid for the transportation of persons from 10 per cent, as provided in the House bill, to 5 per cent. The conferees increased that rate to 8 per cent. The House provided for a tax upon the transportation of property by express, equivalent to 6 per cent of the amount paid, the Senate amended this so that the tax would be 1 cent for each 25 cents or fraction thereof so paid. The conferees changed this to 1 cent for each 20 cents or fraction thereof paid for such transportation. The balance of the Senate amendment with reference to rates upon transportation was retained by the conference.

The House imposed a flat tax of 5 per cent upon the amount paid for electric power for domestic use, upon light and heat, and telephone service by subscribers. It was estimated that this tax, proposed by the House, would raise $30,000,000. The Senate struck out this provision altogether, and the conferees agreed to that elimination.

This title of the bill, however, contains certain taxes upon insurance companies. The Senate struck those taxes out of the House bill. The conferees restored them without making any change in the House rates.

The Senate also struck out of the House bill the so-called inheritance or estate taxes. Some members of the conference upon the part of the Senate felt very strongly about this tax. Certain of the House conferees felt equally as strongly the other way. We came very near to a deadlock upon that question, but we finally compromised these differences, making the maximum additional rate from 15 to 10 per cent and by an amendment providing for certain exemptions, which I will presently explain.

Under the House bill the graduated rates ran up to 15 per cent additional upon the amount of the estate in excess of $15,000,000. The bracket immediately before that was 10 per cent additional on estates between $11,000,000 and $15,000,000. We struck out the last bracket and changed the $11,000,000 in the bracket immediately before it, so that the maximum tax will be an additional 10 per cent of the amount in excess of $10,000,000 instead of 15 per cent upon the amount in excess of $15,000,000.

We also struck that portion of the House bill which levied a tax of 1 per cent of the net estate not in excess of $25,000, making the exemption as to the additional tax the same as provided in the existing law—namely, $50,000.

In addition to these changes the conferees adopted an amendment that exempts entirely from this tax the estates of all persons who die while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States during the war, or who die as the result of disease contracted or wounds received during the war while engaged as a part of the military or naval forces of the Government, provided that they die within 12 months after the President's proclamation of peace.

With reference to the excise taxes the Senate struck out the House tax on automobiles, which was a manufacturers' tax of 5 per cent upon the gross sales, and substituted therefor a graduated tax upon the users of automobiles. The conferees struck out the substitute and returned to the House method. The matter was compromised by substituting a tax of 3 per cent instead of 5 per cent, as in the House bill, upon the actual price at which the machine is sold by the manufacturer.

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator a question there? Take the case of a wholesaler with four of five counties as his territory—is there any tax against him on his automobiles in stock?

Mr. SIMMONS. There is a floor tax imposed on the wholesaler selling certain of the articles taxed in this title, including automobiles. There is no floor tax upon a retailer, but only upon a wholesaler, and the rate of the floor tax is one-half of the manufacturers' tax.

Mr. KENYON. The manufacturers' tax being 3 per cent, the floor tax would be 1½ per cent?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. I understand the Senator, and I thank him.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, we also compromised the differences between the two Houses with reference to moving-picture films, reducing the tax imposed by the House one-half. We also compromised with reference to the tax on chewing gum, reducing the House rate from 5 per cent to 2 per cent. Cameras was a new subject of taxation which the Senate added to the bill. As provided in the Senate bill the tax upon cameras was raised 1 per cent. The Senate amendment as to perfumery and cosmetics which reduced the House rate from 5 per cent to 2 per cent was retained. That is true also with reference to proprietary medicines. The Senate had reduced the rate from 5 per cent to 2 per cent, and the Senate amendment was agreed to by the conference.

The conferees reduced the House rate of 5 per cent to 3 per cent upon the price for which sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer of mechanical musical instruments and records for the same. They made the same reduction in the case of articles commonly or commercially known as jewelry.

The tax upon sporting goods was fixed by the House at 5 per cent. The Senate reduced this rate to 2 per cent. The conference fixed it at 3 per cent.

I now come to the tax upon admissions and dues. The Senate had exempted from this tax moving-picture shows where the charge was less than 25 cents. That was quite a bone of contention in the conference, but we finally eliminated the exemption, leaving the flat exemption where the maximum charge for admission is not more than 5 cents, applicable to movies as to all other shows.

Mr. STONE. Five cents for each person?

Mr. SIMMONS. Five cents for each person. However, we did make an exception as to a certain class of amusements up to 10 cents. In the case of outdoor amusement parks, which are quite common in proximity to the great cities and which are quite a resort for people, especially at night and sometimes in the afternoon, we did make an exception both as to admission to the park—which we made free—and as to admission fees to shows inside of the park, making that exemption 10 cents instead of 5 cents as in the case of other amusements.

The House bill carried certain tariff taxes upon practically everything that is contained in our tariff schedules, whether upon the free list or upon the dutiable list. The House bill imposed a flat rate of 10 per cent upon all articles on the free list and an additional tax of 10 per cent ad valorem on articles on the dutiable list. The Senate eliminated that whole title of the bill and the conferees on the part of the House agreed to the elimination.

Mr. President, I do not think of anything else to which I desire to address myself at this time except the publishers' tax. I desire to say that during the weeks and months devoted to the consideration of this bill by the Finance Committee that title probably gave the committee more trouble than any other in the entire bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Carolina yield to me?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will yield in just one moment. The committee found it exceedingly difficult to devise any scheme for taxing publications that was satisfactory to individual members of the committee or to the committee as a whole, or that was satisfactory to the publishers of the country as a whole.

When we had devised a scheme that seemed to us satisfactory, and which was satisfactory to one class of publishers, we found that it was radically unsatisfactory to another class. When we changed it and finally fell upon another scheme that seemed satisfactory to the dissenting crowd we found that the new scheme was equally unsatisfactory to still another class of publishers. When we finally brought the bill into the Senate I felt constrained, in presenting the matter, to say what I believed then and what I believe now, that the Senate committee proposition was a makeshift, which was not altogether satisfactory to anybody, either on the committee or off the committee. The Senate struck out what the committee had written into the bill and agreed to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], as in Committee of the Whole; but when the bill got into the Senate the Senate changed its mind about that matter, and that amendment was stricken out. It suffered about the same fate as several schemes of the Finance Committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from North Carolina means that the vote was changed?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; the vote was changed, and the provision was stricken out.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will yield to the Senator as soon as I have finished the statement I am now making.

The Senate having struck out the substitute presented by the Finance Committee for the House zone system struck out the House provision, and that left the whole matter in conference. The House conferees insisted upon the retention of the zone system as presented in the House bill, and the scheme now presented in the conference report is the result of mutual concessions after much discussion and much deliberation and long disagreement. It is unsatisfactory to me, as I believe it is unsatisfactory to my colleagues on the committee, but it is the best we could do. We thought it necessary to make the concessions in order to secure an agreement—a consummation which we thought extremely desirable.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to ask has the Senator from North Carolina any figures showing how much revenue will be produced by the adoption of the conference report on this subject?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; I have here figures which have been furnished me by the Postmaster General this morning. They are as follows:

Estimated revenue derivable on basis of weight for 1916, and 40 per cent advertising matter, at rates fixed in conference report—No allowance made for exceptions.

		Increase over present revenue.
July 1, 1918, to June 30, 1919,	$16,292,108.12	$4,906,179.12

Mr. McKELLAR. According to the statement of the Postmaster General, we shall derive about $27,000,000 from second-class postal matter, there being about $11,000,000 now derived from that source, which, added to the $16,000,000, will make about $27,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; there will be an increase during the first year of only $4,906,179.12—practically $5,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. An increase of practically $5,000,000 for the first year?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; and an increase of $9,814,757.27 the second year; an increase of $13,015,805.90 the third year; and an increase of $16,216,854.54 the fourth year.

Mr. McKELLAR. That will be the limit of what will be obtained under this bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. That would be the limit of increase under the bill, as I understand the statement of the Post Office Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. In other words, the Government would be obtaining at the end of four years about $27,000,000?

Mr. HARDWICK. Nearly $28,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Nearly $28,000,000 from this source; and it costs the Government now about $100,000,000 to transport this class of mail matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I understood the Postmaster General this morning as saying that from his standpoint—I know the statement is controverted—even after these increases were made, the Government would be a loser in the actual expenses of transporting, delivering, and distributing this character of mail matter to the extent of $40,000,000 per year.

Mr. McKELLAR. According to some estimates, the loss is nearer $70,000,000.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like at this point to have the Secretary read for the enlightenment of the Senate—for it is a very clear and illuminating discussion of the various questions in controversy by the Postmaster General—a letter addressed in blank, though it is an actual letter, which the Postmaster General has written, but he prefers not to give the name of the person to whom it was written.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, may I ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. SIMMONS. Will not the Senator from New Jersey wait until the letter is read, and then ask his question, if that will suit his purpose just as well?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask that the letter be read now, but that it appear in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary read the letter.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am about to conclude what I have to say. I wish to add only that the scheme finally agreed upon by the conferees with reference to the publishers' tax is very different from that which was insisted upon originally by the House conferees. From my standpoint, one of the essential changes that we made in the compromise plan as originally presented by the House conferees, and the adoption of which the Senate conferees insisted upon, is with reference to reading matter. The original compromise proposition of the House conferees was to increase the rate on reading matter 1 cent a pound. We settled that by making the highest rate half a cent a pound. The original compromise proposition to impose a tax on advertising matter under the one system provided for a very much higher rate than we finally agreed upon. The original proposition was that both the rates upon reading matter and the rates upon advertising matter should presently take effect—I think in 30 days after the passage of the bill; or it may have been the 1st day of January, I am not quite sure about that; but it was presently to take effect. That was changed upon the insistence of your conferees, so that none of these rates, either as to reading matter or advertising matter, will take effect until the 1st day of July, 1918, and the increases will be made annually on advertising matter through a period of four years and on reading matter through a period of two years; that is, the first increase on reading matter will be for the first year only a quarter of a cent and for the second year another quarter of a cent, making half a cent.

A provision was also inserted by the conferees, upon the insistence of the Senate conferees, that a publisher shall be permitted to mail his publication from any post office, so as to secure the zone rate of that post office; that is to say, if a magazine is published in the city of New York, it may be sent by freight or express to San Francisco and distributed from the San Francisco office at the zone rates applicable to that office. I think that is a provision which will afford in some cases very great relief against what is characterized by some of the publishers as a hardship.

Mr. President, in concluding what I have to say about the publishers' tax—and that is all I shall have to say in regard to the conference report—I want to add that, speaking for myself personally, that when this matter was before the Finance Committee I thought and declared that postal rates, whether upon letters or newspapers, magazines, and periodicals, were matters which should be dealt with as a postal measure, rather than as a revenue measure, and I favored the elimination of these provisions from the bill. I did not believe then, and I do not believe now, that any tax should be imposed upon the facilities of the Post Office Department except for the purpose of defraying the expenses of that department and that service and its enlargement and expansion. It will be a long time, even if the Government shall finally make a profit from the transportation and distribution of second-class mail matter, as it is making a profit in the carriage of letters, before we will receive a sufficient revenue from the Post Office Department to make the necessary extensions and enlargements in postal facilities to which the people of this country are entitled and which the best interests of the Government demand. I do not believe that we ought to tax these facilities for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the war. That has been my view all the time. Entertaining that opinion about it, I felt that the adjustment of postal rates was not a matter for the Finance Committee but was a matter for the Post Office Committee. I was glad, therefore, when in conference we were able to write into the compromise a provision now under discussion—the provision that the tax now imposed should not take effect until July, 1918. I trust, Mr. President, that before that time arrives the Post Office Committee will work this matter out in a more satisfactory way than your committee or the conferees have been able to work it out, and that, whatever additional tax it is found expedient and proper and just to impose may be imposed not for the purpose of raising money to defray the expenses of this war but for the purpose of raising more money to increase the postal facilities of the people of the United States.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee one or two questions. Referring to the section which has been added by the committee on page 7, do I understand that the allowance which is credited there is against the 4 per cent tax or the normal underlying 2 per cent tax?

Mr. SIMMONS. On the 4 per cent tax.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is the idea that the provision is intended to convey?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. Under section 4 we impose an additional tax of 4 per cent upon corporations. Under the present law it is 2 per cent. The original Senate provision with reference to the exemption from the corporation tax of dividends received by one corporation from another was general and applied to the total normal tax under existing law and the pending bill. As a result of the compromise made by the conferees, this exemption from tax provided for in the original Senate amendment will extend only to this additional tax of 4 per cent imposed by this bill upon corporations, but will not extend to the 2 per cent normal tax imposed under the present law.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Then the credit is based upon the 4 per cent tax in this section?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Another question, Mr. President. Referring to the section beginning with line 18, on page 83, is it the chairman's opinion that the tax of 1 per cent on insurance premiums is based entirely upon the premiums received, or can an insurance company under that section take credit for the cancellations, the return premiums which they pay back to the policyholders for unexpired contracts?

The section says that 1 per cent is taxed on premiums charged. Now, in the practice of fire insurance, about 30 per cent of the premiums received are paid back in cancellations. From reading the section it would seem as if the 1 per cent tax was imposed on the premiums charged, with no allowance to be deducted for the cancellations. That would mean that a company receiving a million dollars income in premiums, and returning $300,000 of it to the policyholders, would be taxed upon the $300,000 which they returned and which they did not receive.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not able to answer the Senator very definitely about that, but I am advised that this law is substantially the same as the law of 1898, and that the tax would be 1 per cent upon the premiums received.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I am not sufficiently familiar with the law of 1898 to answer that statement of the chairman.

I think, if my memory serves me, that the insurance companies were allowed a credit in their tax for the premiums which they returned, and I am more desirous of getting the opinion of the chairman as to whether these companies can take credit for the premiums they do not receive, or whether, in the opinion of the chairman, this section taxes them, which would mean that it would tax them unfairly and unjustly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will say to the Senator very frankly, that I am not able now to give him a definite answer to his question.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. It is a very grave defect in the section and the act if that construction can be placed upon it.

Mr. SIMMONS. The question raised by the Senator is one which had not occurred to me and was not raised in the committee or the conference. My impression upon first blush is that the 1 per cent would attach to the premium received, but I am informed that the ruling of the department, both under the 1898 and the 1914 laws, is that if the cancellation takes place before the policy was in effect no tax is imposed, but that if the policy has been in effect before cancellation, then no refund of the tax paid is allowed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, just one other question, and then I will finish.

Referring to page 161, the section added by the conference committee as to tax withheld at the source, I should like to ask the chairman whether, in his opinion, the tax on the salaries of salaried employees would be withheld by the corporation under that section?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; I think not. The Senator is speaking about a domestic corporation?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think, under the section and under the amendment made by the conference committee, the withholding at the source would not apply to the case mentioned by the Senator. Collection at the source is retained only in the case of a foreign corporation or of a nonresident alien doing business in this country, and to interest upon bonds containing the tax-free covenant clause. I think the language carries out the purpose of the committee, and the purpose of the committee was to repeal absolutely the collection at the source except as it applied to this class of bonds, and, of course, as it applied to foreign corporations and nonresident aliens.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. "Periodical gains," then, would not include salaried employees?

Mr. SIMMONS. The words the Senator refers to are limited by the words in the next line—line 12—"derived from interest upon bonds." This section requires withholding only in the case of interest on bonds containing the tax-free covenant, while the paragraph beginning on page 160, line 6, requires withholding of rents, salaries, and so forth, only in the case where the recipient of the income is a nonresident alien.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Carolina if he has commented as yet upon section 209 of the bill, which will be found upon page 48? If not, will he be good enough to state the reasons for the insertion of that section, which to a very large extent is new matter?

Mr. SIMMONS. I have discussed that section pretty fully in reply to a question asked me by some Senator, and gave the reasons.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator from New York was out of the Chamber when that happened.

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall be very glad to answer any question the Senator wants to ask me about it now, however.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think I understand what the effect of this tax would be. Perhaps this has all been discussed in my absence, and if so, I hesitate to take it up again.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state that I did discuss that matter for some little time.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was wondering, however, whether, in imposing such a tax, the conferees had in mind the effect upon the professional man, who under this section will also have to pay an income tax upon the amount of money that he earns in the practice of his profession?

Mr. SIMMONS. I stated to the Senate when I was discussing it that that is a tax very much of the same character as the special tax upon munitions, except that it does allow an exemption of $6,000, but otherwise it is in the nature of an additional income tax; but, as I stated this morning, in our efforts to bring the professional man under the provisions of this bill and subject his earnings to a tax, just as we had the farmer and the mechanic and the merchant and everybody else, we found ourselves hedged in by a great many limitations and difficulties. After we had discussed one or two schemes and practically fixed upon one, we finally abandoned it and adopted one to which the Senator refers and criticizes as the best means of reaching that class of earnings.

Necessarily, imposed in this way, it is in effect an additional income tax. So is this other tax—the war excess profits tax that we impose in this bill. It is, in substance and in essence, an additional income tax, with an exemption. In the case of the excess profits tax the exemption is a certain per cent upon invested capital based upon prewar earnings, and with that exemption the tax imposed is an income tax. I do not see any very great difference in the principle in these two imposts. In the one case, while the exemption is larger, the tax imposed is very much larger—several times larger—and in the other case, while the exemption is smaller, so is the tax very much smaller.

The purpose of the conferees was to subject occupations and professions having no invested capital to this war tax, just as those with invested capital were subject to it. If there had been the same basis of exemptions in the one case as in the other we would have allowed a like exemption and imposed like rates of taxation, but because of the necessity of the case this could not be done, and because there was no such basis of exemption we imposed a tax very much lighter on business conducted without invested capital—a flat rate of only 8 per cent, as against a graduated rate upon profits over a maximum of 9 per cent of from 20 per cent to 60 per cent on ordinary business. I do not think the professional man has any right to complain.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I think I can appreciate the difficulties that the committee had confronting them when they came to solve this problem of taxation. I shall not enter strenuous objection to section 209, but I do desire to take just a moment——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will allow me, it is in a great deal better shape now than it was originally. We had some trouble in getting it into as good shape as it is.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do desire, however, to take this opportunity to say that section 209 emphasizes very clearly, I think, a grave injustice which is done by our tax laws, an injustice inflicted, comparatively speaking, upon the man who earns his income by his own efforts as compared with the man who does not earn his income at all, but merely sits at a desk and clips coupons or cashes dividend checks. The man who is so fortunate as to inherit an invested fortune, as we all know, unless he is otherwise minded, may sit in his office and clip the coupons and cash the dividend checks and live upon the proceeds without being of any particular use to the community. In fact, he may pass his whole life as a drone. He is subject to the individual income tax, and if his individual income, we will say, is $10,000, he will pay according to the rates fixed in this bill and according to the rates fixed in the statutes which are already upon the statute books.

Now we will take the professional man, such as the physician or the dentist or the lawyer, who, by his own efforts, extending over a period of years and resultant upon an education which he may have earned for himself by working his way through a medical school or a law school, manages to reach the point in his profession where he earns $10,000 a year. He pays the individual income tax on that $10,000, and then this bill comes along and assesses him 8 per cent on everything over $6,000 of his income in addition to the individual income tax he pays, so that he is penalized because he is a worker. If he had not earned the $10,000, he would only pay an individual income tax; but, having earned it by his own efforts, he pays more tax.

Of course I realize that this thing can not be straightened out in a moment, and certainly my judgment upon it would not be infallible, nor is it entirely certain that my conclusions are clear; but let me say to the Senator from North Carolina and to other Senators who have been interested in this question of taxation that sooner or later we must come to the point in the assessment of Federal taxes against individual citizens, whether they be in the form of individual income taxes or otherwise, where we shall discriminate between the earned and the unearned incomes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I agree with the Senator absolutely in that proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I called attention in the Sixty-fourth Congress to the fact that in my humble judgment the most glaring defect in our imposition of the individual income tax was the fact that it made no distinction between the drone and the worker. It taxed them exactly alike. This bill makes the condition infinitely worse. It taxes the worker infinitely more heavily than it does the drone.

I know it is too late to cure the situation, and I realize the theory on which the committee has proceeded—that individuals engaged in business should pay a profits tax, whether we call it an excess profits tax or a war profit tax, just as a partnership or a corporation engaged in business is required to pay such a tax; but we still leave uncured and uncorrected the injustice done in the income tax.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to state to the Senator that the very suggestion he is making now was made to the committee and received some consideration; but we considered that the matter had gone too far; that the time was too short for us to undertake to change the method of taxation as radically as his suggestion would have required.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I can well understand that; but I want to take this opportunity very briefly to emphasize that situation to the Senate in the hope that next year, or perhaps the year after, we will cure this situation, for it does seem to me to be a grave and a gross injustice to inflict a penalty upon industry and permit the drone, as I have used the expression before, to escape merely by the imposition of one tax.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman if there is any other case in this bill where an additional tax is levied, except the munition tax and the one now under discussion?

Mr. SIMMONS. Those are the only cases in the bill of a flat tax rate, but this tax is an additional income tax only in the sense that all these excess profit taxes are additional to the income taxes otherwise imposed.

Mr. KELLOGG. Then, as I understand the chairman of the committee, the munitions tax, which was considered to be unjust, was continued only for one year; but the conference committee put in a new tax, which is equally unjust, which neither the Senate nor House ever passed upon or discussed, and made it permanent.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator when he says that it is equally unjust, or unjust at all. I think certainly it can not be said that when we are imposing additional profit taxes for war purposes upon the farmer, the mechanic, and the merchant, it is unjust to impose an additional profit tax upon the professional man. The method may not be as good a method—I do not think it is as good a method—as the one we have adopted in the case of businesses, based on invested capital; but that the professional man ought to pay an additional profit tax upon his earnings just as we are making others pay is to my mind beyond question.

Mr. KELLOGG. But the professional man pays exactly the same tax on capital or on any business he has an interest in, whether it be farming, mining, manufacturing, or anything else, that everybody else pays under this bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; but under this bill the professional man will not pay one dollar of war tax unless we catch him with this provision, while the farmer who makes his money by the sweat of his brow, by the labor of his hands, will have to pay a war tax, and he will also have to pay an income tax, just as the professional man pays one now.

Mr. KELLOGG. The professional man pays in addition to what the others pay. Take the case of a railroad company or a manufacturing company which has a president. Of course, the corporation pays its excess profits tax. The president of the corporation pays on his salary only the tax on his income. But if a doctor happens to have that company as a client, and he owns some stock, he not only pays the excess profits tax, but he pays a tax on his ability as a physician, and he also pays an income tax on the same thing, simply because he is a professional man. While the president of the company pays only two taxes he pays three.

Now, if he is a farmer—and a good many lawyers are farmers—he pays the same tax as any other man. If the farmer is entitled to a salary, that salary will be taxed simply as his income. All the officers of corporations will pay an income tax; but under this bill if the taxpayer happens to be a professional man he will pay both the income tax and the other tax.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know whether the Senator has had his attention called to the provision as to definitions, making a distinction between professions and occupations.

Mr. KELLOGG. Oh, I have; but professions and occupations do not include the president of a corporation at all.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not agree with the Senator. I think that the president of a corporation is engaged in an occupation. We must give some meaning to the word "occupation" as used in the bill. If it means no more than "trade" or "business," there would be no reason for having included it in the bill. It seems to me that the Treasury must construe the bill—and the courts will, in my opinion, sustain them—as meaning that all salaries, other than those of employees of the Government, national, State, or municipal, are liable to this tax, whether it be the salary of the president, the attorney, the doctor, or any other employee of the corporation, subject, of course, to the flat exemption of $6,000.

Without reference to the changes made in conference but for the purpose of aiding the public, and especially the taxpayer, to a better understanding of the essential provisions of the section of the bill relating to the income and excess profits tax, I ask unanimous consent, without reading, to incorporate a brief statement of the general provisions of the respective titles of the bill relating to these two subjects. The statement is a brief summary of the more important provisions of the bill as it will be if the bill is agreed to by the Senate as it has been agreed to in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

In addition to the income tax payable under the act of September 8, 1916, this act imposes additional taxes, as follows:

Upon individuals:

A normal tax of 2 per cent upon the net income as defined in the act of September 8, 1916, of single persons in excess of $1,000 and married persons in excess of $2,000. The normal tax under the act of September 8, 1916, is 2 per cent upon the net income in excess of, in the case of a single person, $3,000 and a married person $4,000. In addition to this new tax, additional surtaxes are also imposed. The following table will show the rates of the surtax under the act of September 8, 1916, under the act of October 3, 1917, and the combined total surtaxes under existing law:

In excess of $2,000,000	13	50	63

Upon corporations, joint-stock companies, associations, or insurance companies:

In addition to the flat 2 per cent corporation tax imposed by the act of September 8, 1916, this act imposes another tax of 4 per cent, making the total tax upon such corporations 6 per cent. This is higher than the flat 4 per cent total normal tax upon individuals. The reason for this difference is that the individual pays surtaxes upon all his income in excess of $5,000, while the corporation is allowed to retain for use in the business any necessary amount of its net income, thus avoiding the payment of any surtaxes upon the amount so retained. This gives them the advantage over the individual of being able to use in their business as capital income that has not paid the income surtaxes, while the individual or partnership can not do so.

The only difference in computing the net income of a corporation as a basis for this additional 4 per cent tax is that dividends received by one corporation from another are not to be counted as part of the net income of the corporation receiving the same. Under the act of September 8, 1916, which imposes the 2 per cent tax, such dividends are counted as net income.

This act also changes the income-tax law with reference to "withholding at the source." No withholding of the normal tax from amounts paid to individuals is now required except in the case of income from securities that contain the so-called tax-free covenant. Many corporations, principally railroads, have issued bonds containing a clause that said corporation would pay any Federal income tax required to be withheld at the source.

The new law also prevents any corporation from making a distribution to its stockholders from earnings accrued prior to March 1, 1913, which are not liable to the income tax, until all the surplus and undivided profits accrued since that date have first been distributed. The amounts so distributed are deemed to be from the most recently acquired surplus and are taxed to the recipient at the surtax rates in force when such surplus was earned by the corporation.

The idea is not to allow distribution to be made and claim to be from funds that are not liable to surtax in the hands of the stockholders until all taxable funds have been distributed.

The law of September 8, 1916, is also amended so that in computing the net income no deduction shall be allowed from the net income for the excess profits and income taxes paid during the taxable year. In place of this the new law specifies that the amount of the excess profits tax accrued for the taxable year shall be deducted from the net income before applying the income-tax rates thereto. This is an advantage to the taxpayer, as no excess profits tax will be paid during the calendar year 1917, so there would otherwise have been no deduction from the net income of that year for this purpose. The excess profits tax accrued for the year 1917 will, under this provision, be deducted from the net income before computing the income tax.

There is no logical reason for allowing a deduction for income tax paid. The theory of the income-tax law is that after allowing all reasonable deductions there remains to the taxpayer a certain net income which is to be divided with the Government, no tax being paid on either share.

EXCESS PROFITS TAX.

This is a new tax both in this country and in the world. It originated in Sweden after the outbreak of the war in 1914 and is now in force in some form in Great Britain, France, Italy, Russia, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Switzerland, Canada, and New Zealand.

The basis of the tax is the amount of profits made for the taxable year in excess of the normal profit, predicated upon the average profits made during the normal period prior to the war. In case of the tax imposed by this act the prewar period is the calendar years 1911, 1912, and 1913. As a modification of the excess of war profits over prewar profits, this act limits such prewar profits, or deduction, to an amount not less than 7 per cent or more than 9 per cent of the invested capital.

This provision necessitated an exact definition of capital, and such is found in section 207 of the act.

The tax applies to the entire net income of corporations, partnerships, and also to that of individuals derived from any trade, business, profession, or occupation, whether continuously carried on or not.

In arriving at the taxable income the taxpayer is allowed to deduct from his net income as defined in the act of September 8, 1917, all dividends received from the stock or net earnings of a corporation. He then shall deduct from his net income an amount equal to the same percentage of his invested capital for the taxable year that his average net income for the prewar period was of the average capital for the same period, but not to be less than 7 per cent or more than 9 per cent, plus in the case of a corporation $3,000, or of an individual or partnership, $6,000. In no case, however, shall this total deduction be more than 15 per cent of the invested capital.

In the case of a corporation, partnership, or individual that had no prewar status the deduction shall be a flat 8 per cent of the invested capital plus, in the case of a corporation, $3,000, or of a partnership or individual, $6,000.

Any trade or business that is formally organized or reorganized after January 2, 1913, and which is substantially a continuation of such trade or business, then the capital and income and income of such prior trade or business shall be deemed to be the capital and income of the new trade or business for the same period.

In case of a trade or business that through misfortune or accident had a subnormal income for the prewar period as compared with that of representative concerns engaged in like or similar business, upon convincing the Secretary of the Treasury of such fact, they shall be entitled as the percentage part of their deduction the same percentage of their invested capital as do representative concerns engaged in a like or similar business.

In case of a trade, business, profession, or occupation having no invested capital, or only a nominal capital, it is evident that the 7 and 9 per cent limitation of capital can not apply, nor can, with justice, the prewar basis of deduction. In order to reach this class of income the percentage deduction has been omitted, and only the $3,000 and $6,000 flat deduction is allowed. The rate is made a flat rate of 8 per cent. This is less than the rate paid by other classes of taxpayers, who pay from 20 per cent to 60 per cent on certain parts of their income.

The only exemptions from this tax are as follows:

(1) The compensation or fees received by persons as officers or employees of the United States, any State, Territory, the District of Columbia, or any local subdivision thereof.

(2) Corporations that are exempt from income tax.

(3) Incomes derived from the business of certain industrial insurance.

In case the Secretary of the Treasury is unable to satisfactorily determine the average net income for the prewar period, or the invested capital, the percentage deduction shall be that of representative concerns engaged in like or similar business.

Title II of the act of March 3, 1917, imposing an excess profits tax upon corporations and partnerships of 8 per cent upon the excess of their net incomes over 8 per cent of their invested capital is repealed by this act.

The munitions manufacturers' tax contained in Title III of the act of September 8, 1916, is repealed, to take effect January 1, 1918; the rate of that tax, 12½ per cent of the net income, is reduced for the year 1917 to 10 per cent.

APPENDIX.

BURLESON LETTER.

I have your telegram of September 25, 1917, with reference to the provision regarding rates on second-class matter included in the war-revenue bill. It is a protest against a zone system of rates on second-class mail matter, which you claim will build up sectional papers and prejudices, destroy and reduce the efficiency of trade papers, etc. You further say "the whole thing is a crime against the country, and I am really sorry you must shoulder the blame, because from Senators down they say it is your measure."

For any assistance that I have been able to render the committees of Congress and the publishers in the adjustment of this difficult matter I am perfectly willing to take the responsibility. However, as you have come to Washington from time to time during the pendency of this legislation and have been in close touch with not only the department but the committees of Congress, I am confident you will admit that the facts will far from justify your assertion. The provision in the bill when under consideration in the House was prepared by the House Committee on Ways and Means and included therein, notwithstanding the fact that the committee was advised by me that I did not favor the use of the postal system for raising war revenue. When the bill went to the Senate, I informed the chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance that I was still of the opinion that the Postal Service should not be used as a means of raising war revenue, but that it having appeared evident that it was the purpose of Congress to include in the pending measure some provision with respect to postage rates on second-class matter, I felt it my duty to suggest such a provision as would be based upon the principle so long existing in the service of continuing a low flat rate for reading matter for the dissemination of information of a public character, or devoted to literature, the sciences, and the other purposes for which the basic act regulating the admissibility of publications to the mails as second-class matter provided. I pointed out, further, that the character of such publications has materially changed with the development of business and a new element has been introduced which was not conspicuous in the early history of the country, that this new element is the introduction of advertising matter as part of such publications, and that it is common knowledge that this matter has grown to such volume and proportion as to exceed that of the reading matter contained between the covers of many of these publications. The average for all publications is estimated at 40 per cent, and for many individual publications it equals 60 to 70, and in some instances is as high as 80, per cent.

There has been very thorough consideration of the subject in all its phases by the Congress and its committees, and the reasons for continuing a flat rate on reading matter and applying zone rates to only advertising matter have been extensively discussed not only on the floor of the Senate, but before the Senate Committee on Finance at its request. In all these matters the department has aimed to be absolutely fair to the periodicals in the presentation of statistics and suggestions. It has been evident at all times that it was the purpose of Congress to make some readjustment of rates which might include an increase in letter postage, and, if that were done, it would also necessitate an equitable settlement of the question of rates on second-class matter. The result is shown in the provisions included in the bill.

I do not think an answer to your telegram would be complete which only treats it as a separate incident, or which regards the provision in the bill as the result only of the consideration given the question at this session of Congress. Your protest against the zone sytem can not stand alone, and must be considered in the light of the continued and persistent opposition of the publishers generally to any revision whatever of the rates of postage on second-class matter. Preceding the consideration of the question by the Hughes Commission the estimate of the department was bitterly assailed by the publishers generally and its accuracy denied. The findings of that commission confirmed the department's estimate and removed all doubt from the minds of those informed as to the fact that the Government was transporting and handling second-class mail matter at an enormous loss, such loss being ascertained by considering the out-of-pocket expense and the fair proportion of the common expenses of the services in which second-class matter participates. It was realized that the Government could not at once raise the rate sufficiently to cover that loss, which is now conservatively estimated to be at least 6 cents a pound on the average for all such matter. The Hughes Commission therefore recommended an increase from 1 cent to 2 cents a pound, or fraction thereof, flat rate, applying to all paid matter. All efforts before Congress to secure legislation along that line have been opposed at all times by the publishers. Bear in mind that this opposition has been to a flat rate and not to a zone system only. When this matter was before the committees of Congress at the present session I had frequent conferences with publishers, including yourself, and at no time was I able to suggest an increase of a flat rate which was acceptable to the publishers. If, therefore, Congress had abandoned the idea of applying the zone system to advertising matter contained in periodicals and confined itself to an increase in the flat rate applicable to all matter therein, it must be concluded that the same strenuous opposition of the publishers would have been exerted against it as has been exerted against zone rates for the advertising matter in the periodicals.

It is for Congress to decide when it will legislate upon the subject. It has deferred legislation until this time, when it is dealing with many other questions in a manner appealing to the patriotism and sense of fairness of the people. Accepting the judgment of Congress that some legislation upon the subject should be passed at this time, the merits or demerits of the provision should be considered impartially, keeping in mind the situation which it was intended to remedy.

There is far less objection to the increase in rates on second-class matter than to those on first-class matter. As to first-class matter, including letters and postal cards, it is well known and undisputed that it is transported and handled by the department at a profit of approximately $60,000,000 a year, and that this large surplus contributes to a partial payment of the enormous loss sustained in carrying and handling second-class matter, which loss is most conservatively estimated at over $72,000,000 a year on all second-class matter and $68,000,000 on paid-at-the-pound rate alone. If wise to increase the postage rate on letters for the purpose of raising revenue, which are now producing a surplus over cost, it is apparent that a great injustice would be done the people if no effort whatever were made to readjust the rates on second-class mail, which pays only a part of its cost, and the publishers should not be required to contribute a reasonable proportion of the expense for the great privilege they enjoy. The consideration which has been given by Congress to the publishers is shown in the fact that while the increase in letter postage is immediate, no increase whatever in second-class rates are effective before July 1, 1918, and the rates then operative are very slight increases. All other increases are distributed over a further period of three years, which will give the publishers ample time to readjust their business upon the basis of the new rates.

With respect to the character of the proposed legislation on second-class matter contained in the bill the following should be said in its favor:

It continues the existing policy of granting to such publications a low flat rate for that portion devoted to reading matter. Such policy has been recognized by Congress for many years past, and in my opinion is a wise one. Its continuance as to all reading matter of every kind contemplated by the basic legislation is a complete answer to the criticism that the proposed legislation will build up sectional papers and prejudices. It does not put any greater limitation upon the dissemination of information or the circulation of literature than now exists. Such matter will be free to circulate at the flat rates named in any part of the country, and the publisher who publishes in Maine can have that portion of his periodical so devoted delivered in California with the same expense to him as when delivered in his adjoining town.

But because of the radical change which the development of the publishing industry has brought about by the inclusion of large percentages of advertising matter in these periodicals and publications, the proposed legislation wisely recognizes a distinction between the reading matter and the purely advertising matter; and because such advertising matter is in all respects of the same character as if it were circulated as third-class matter outside the covers of periodicals and newspapers, it fixes a higher rate thereon, somewhat proportioned to the expense in transporting it to the several zones and for handling it in the service. These ultimate rates on advertising matter, however, are still on the average much lower than the rates which the publishers would be required to pay if they sent such matter as third class as other business men are required to do, and, furthermore, considerably lower than the cost to the department of transporting and handling it. However, where the space devoted to advertising does not exceed 5 per cent, it takes the same rate as reading matter; and newspapers and periodicals maintained in the interest of religious, educational, scientific, philanthropic, agricultural, labor, or fraternal organizations or associations, not organized for profit and none of the net income of which inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual, shall be carried at flat rates, and the free-in-county privilege is retained.

The zone system on the advertising matter to which it applies is fundamentally sound and entirely fair. The advertising is a strictly business feature of the publications and it should conform to business principles where the Government is concerned. The advertisements carried the long hauls should pay more than those carried the short hauls. A zone system is based on this just principle. The bill exempts from zone rates advertising where it does not exceed 5 per cent. This is in accordance with the spirit of the original acts. It is believed that at the time the present low flat rate was given the advertising did not exceed 5 per cent on the average.

The proposed increase in the flat rate on reading matter is only one-fourth of a cent a pound for the year from July 1, 1918, to July 1, 1919, no increase whatever being provided for before that period, and from July 1, 1919, the increase is only one-half of 1 cent a pound. This is much lower than any increase that has ever been proposed by the department or by any commission. The Hughes Commission recommended an increase to begin with of 1 cent a pound on all matter. As to the proposed rates on advertising matter, their increases also are deferred until July 1, 1918, and for the first year are slight increases over the present pound rates—still far below the cost. The additional increases are distributed over the succeeding three years. Even when the ultimate rates provided in the bill are reached the rate on reading matter will still be 5½ cents less, and the average rate on advertising matter considerably less, than the average cost.

The difference between the revenue paid the department as postage by the publishers of second-class matter and the admitted cost of transporting and handling it is so great and the proof of it so conclusive that the publishers could not hope to longer defer some just and remedial legislation by Congress. After these many years of enjoyment of this subsidy the publishers claim they can not pay a higher rate of postage. It is impracticable to require them to pay the public the entire cost at once, yet they should make some appreciable contribution toward it. If, therefore, the policy of continuing reading matter at a nominal flat rate shall be retained, it is necessary that such increased rates shall be provided for that part of the periodical devoted strictly to commercial purposes as the business it fosters shall be able to pay. Hence this action was inevitable.

I think it must be conceded that the plea that legitimate business can not readily readjust itself to the normal cost of its conduct is without merit. The statement that these increases on that portion of a periodical devoted exclusively to advertising matter will result in a discontinuance of such advertising, and therefore the discontinuance of the periodical, is a statement that business is not willing to or can not pay its legitimate expenses. I do not believe this to be true, and I do not think it can be shown that it is demonstrated by experience. The department submitted to the Senate Committee on Finance tables showing the very slight increases in advertising rates which would be necessary for publishers to ask their patrons to pay in order to meet increases in postage rates.

During the fiscal year 1917 your periodical mailed 4,112,986 pounds of your issues. The most conservative estimate of the present average cost of transporting and handling second-class matter is 7 cents a pound. This applied to your mailings shows a direct and apportioned cost to the department of $287,909 for the year. The amount received in postage for your publication for the same period was $41,106.84, which leaves a loss to the Government of $246,802 for the year on your publication, computed on the basis of the general average. The case of your publication is no different than others. The loss upon all, on the average, is proportionately the same, and in the aggregate is the enormous amount hereinbefore stated. As this situation has become generally conceded, endeavors are frequently made to minimize it by the claim that credit is not allowed for the amount of first-class postage revenue which results from it. The truth is that if we allow the Government for all the third-class revenue which it loses on these advertisements because they are mailed as second class, and also the first-class postage that would result from them if sent as third class, the difference in favor of the publishers' claim, if any, would be negligible.

It could not be reasonably expected that Congress, with all the information before it and with the facts practically undisputed for a number of years, would continue to pass to others this financial obligation which belongs principally to the publishers and not expect them to readjust their business so as to make some small contribution to pay this loss in the future.

Yours, very truly,

A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I was unable to be in the Senate and engage in the discussion when the revenue bill now reported from conference was under consideration. For this reason I avail myself of the present opportunity to record my views concerning certain phases of the measure which involve policies not only vital to the vigorous and successful prosecution of the war but to the welfare of the people who, as generations come and go, will make up the American Republic.

Notwithstanding my views with regard to certain parts of the bill, had I been in the Senate when the vote was taken I should have voted for it; and, notwithstanding my disapproval of certain features of the bill as reported from conference, I shall vote for the adoption of the conference report. The Government must be supplied with revenue, and I must accept the measure, however inadequate, from my standpoint, it may be.

The questions upon which I shall speak are finally settled in so far as this bill is concerned, but they will recur with every revenue bill so long as the war continues and for years thereafter. The struggle for a recognition of the just principles of taxation will go on with unabated vigor until Congress accepts the basis which is imperatively demanded not only by our elemental conceptions of right and wrong, not only by the unselfish, trained conclusions of patriots and economists, but by the highest interest of those who are now blindly resisting the most obvious truths of production, finance, and commerce.

The questions to which I intend to devote a very few minutes are:

First. What proportion of the cost of the war should be borne by current taxation; and Second. From what sources should the revenue raised by taxation be drawn?

It is everywhere admitted that under normal conditions, and except as to certain great internal improvements enduring in their character, the expenses of government should be regulated by the salutary policy of "pay as you go," and even these exceptions should be rare under the Federal power. Without regard to the justice which ought to be observed in the distribution of the burdens of government, there is nothing more fatal to the stability, growth, and prosperity of any country than the accumulation of government interest-bearing obligations aggregating any considerable proportion of the wealth or property of the nation.

I am not submitting a treatise upon political economy, and make these suggestions simply to remark that the old saying that a Government debt is a public blessing has been so thoroughly discredited by modern thought that it is no longer entertained by sensible men. It passed out about the same time and for the same reason that led the medical fraternity to discard the practice of bleeding every patient in order to insure a speedy recovery. Whether in peace or war, contributions through taxation should be the primary and principal source of revenue, and a wise nation will resort to the money lender only when the expenditure is for a physical improvement of long duration, and then infrequently and with caution, or when some extraordinary event like war makes it impossible to tax for the whole sum required without destroying the opportunity of the people to continue their ordinary pursuits.

Without further observations of a general nature, I come to the situation, not serious alone, but exceedingly grave, which now confronts this country. We must meet it courageously, with never a shiver of fear, but we must meet it also successfully, or the greatest disaster which ever befell the human race will quickly follow.

Mr. FITZGERALD, chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the House, than whom there is no more competent or reliable authority upon the finances of the country, in Congress or out of it, in speaking on the urgent deficiency bill a few days ago, submitted a table showing in some detail the appropriations made and pending for the present year. They aggregate the stupendous sum of $18,288,643,452.33. To this amount he added $1,143,854,532 for contracts and authorizations and $1,219,207,750 for proposed and apparently imperative amendments to the deficiency bill—and I might say here that they were subsequently added, and more—making a total expenditure for this year of $20,651,700,734.33.

There is no one at all familiar with our affairs who does not know that before the 1st of next July we will probably be called on to provide for two or three billions more. Not because it is material, but because it is important that those who hear me shall know that I am not unmindful of all the facts, it ought to be stated that the tremendous sum I have named includes the $7,000,000,000 we have loaned and propose to loan this year to foreign nations, and a relatively small amount to be expended by the War and Navy Departments during the coming fiscal year. As I view the subject, our loans to the allies are war expenditures, and the hope that at some time they may be repaid does not affect in the least degree the conclusions which it is my purpose to record.

After crediting the postal revenues, it may be assumed that the normal expenses of the Government are about $1,000,000,000, so that our war expenses will be somewhere between $19,500,000,000 and $22,500,000,000.

Again, accepting Mr. FITZGERALD as my authority, I find that the first revenue bill for this year will yield $1,333,500,000, and this measure, adding the sums that have been introduced by changes in the conference, will produce $2,700,000,000, or a total of $4,033,500,000; deducting the $1,000,000,000 for the ordinary conduct of the Government, the result is that of war expenditures of from $19,500,000,000 to $22,500,000,000 we are proposing to pay $3,033,500,000 with taxes and to borrow the remainder upon long-time interest-bearing bonds. That is to say, it seems to be the approved plan to pay 13 or 14 per cent of the cost of the war by current taxation and to send 86 or 87 per cent down to future generations.

With all the emphasis I can command I protest against the plan as ruinous to the business interests of the country and as the most grievous injustice ever inflicted upon those who must stagger along for a century or more under this gigantic load of principal and interest.

The war cost next year will be not less than $25,000,000,000, and may be, probably will be, more; and so on each year thereafter. The end of the struggle is beyond human vision, but even the most sanguine observers agree that the outlook indicates two or three years of increasing conflict.

These are the conditions. It is more than unwise, it is inexcusable, to misunderstand or ignore them. It seems to me well-nigh fatal to signalize our entrance into the war by issuing anywhere from $17,000,000,000 to $20,000,000,000 of bonds in the first year of our military activity. The history of the civilized modern industrial world discloses no such blunder as we are now making. Great Britain has a better appreciation of the problem and is trying hard to keep down her debt. It is useless to cite what other belligerent countries have done, for their industrial and financial situation is not comparable with ours.

The normal annual profits—that is to say, the annual increase in wealth, not including added value in existing property, in the United States in recent times—it may be safely estimated, has been from $15,000,000,000 to $25,000,000,000, and these profits, no matter who has them, and no matter whether they are used directly or indirectly, must pay for the war; for in the final adjustment, however complicated, the people must have a living, and the excess, so far as may be necessary, will be taken either for bonds or for taxes.

It is not my purpose to describe the disaster which will follow the enormous and unnecessary inflation of the public debt. If I had any hope that the policy of this bill in that respect could be reversed, I would look upon it as my duty to gather together and again put before you the unanswerable arguments which have been presented by a long line of distinguished statesmen and economists; but I have no such hope, and to do it would be of no avail. I have brought the subject forward in order that I might intelligently and understandingly express my dissent from the views of a majority of the Senate, and my confidence that when the next revenue bill is before the Congress for consideration, wiser counsels will prevail and sounder principles be adopted.

The remaining question upon which I desire to be heard concerns the source from which the revenue we do raise by taxation should be taken. This leads me to a moment's consideration of the war in its general aspects, the immensity of the task we have assumed, and the tremendous energy we must awaken and direct in order to bring the struggle to a speedy and successful end.

I have but recently returned from a brief visit to the country, and one of its objects was to do what little I could toward making the people understand the character and scope of the undertaking upon which we have entered. The people of this country, with here and there an exception, are intensely patriotic. They have lost none of the courage of their ancestors, and they intend to see this war through to a complete victory, no matter what may be its cost in life and treasure. They do not, however, fully realize the full proportions of the duty which has so unhappily fallen upon them. They do not appreciate how large a part of their energies must be given to the Herculean and unprecedented task which their Government must perform. The sooner they do comprehend the strength in men and money that will be required, the sooner they will feel that from now henceforth the war is the chief business of this country, to which every other hope, ambition, or interest must be absolutely subordinated, and the sooner they will be prepared to go resolutely forward in the right way and with the right spirit.

If I may be allowed a personal word, permit me to say that I was not so eager to enter the war under the circumstances which then existed as were some of my associates, and as were some of the martial-minded men on the outside, but when Congress declared a state of war between the United States and Germany that chapter of the controversy was forever closed, so far as I am concerned. From that time until now, and from now until we win, there has been and will be no room in my heart for any other purpose than to employ every resource at our command to make the United States invincible in the contest of arms. Whatever may have been true at a former time, and however difficult it is to understand what safety for democracy through the world means, the truth now is, and no man can escape it, that the safety of democracy in America, the independence of the United States, the perpetuation of the free institutions in our own country, the honor and happiness of our own people, all depend upon our success in this war. That citizen of the Republic who refuses to give whatever he has which will aid his country in the critical hour through which it is passing, or who does anything or says anything that will increase the peril of the men and boys who are standing between us and the enemy, is unworthy of the Republic which is trying to protect him.

We have undertaken to do a thing which no other nation since history began has ever done and which no existing power save our own could do. We have undertaken to organize an army of two, three, four, or five millions of men, to equip it with all the instruments of war, and to transport it over 2,500 miles of submarine-infested sea to a foreign land. We have undertaken to maintain this army with all that it requires to preserve its full fighting strength. If this were all, even then the magnitude, the difficulty, of the undertaking would baffle the human mind in attempting to comprehend it; but that is not all, nor is it even the larger part. We have undertaken to supply Great Britain, France, Italy, Russia, and Serbia with the credit, the food, the clothing, the arms and munitions of war, and materials of infinite variety which they must have from us or perish, and all these things must be carried in ever-increasing quantities over an ocean in whose depths float the most hellish instruments of death and destruction ever contrived by the ingenuity of man. In the barest outline these are the things which we have pledged ourselves to do. In doing them we must summon all the strength of all our people. Every man must be ready to do all he can, no matter what the sacrifice may be, to accomplish the common object. All thought of profit during the period of the war must disappear. The boys who are to do the fighting give all they have and receive but mere subsistence. The men who are left behind must do likewise. They must give what they have and be content with just a living in return. Selfishness must be banished, and all of us, whether in the Army or out of it, should be prepared to bestow our time and strength, our minds and bodies, and the use of our capital, for the public good.

I do not accept the doctrines of state socialism in times of peace, nor would I adopt them in any ordinary war; but I am completely persuaded that this war is so terrific in its consequences and so vast in its proportions that it will require a surrender of all individual profits and the absorption by the Government of the whole surplus created by the activities of all the people. By "surplus" I mean the excess above food, fuel, clothing, and the maintenance of families, including education and other necessaries of life. The people must have food, fuel, clothing, houses, and such things in order to enable them to work. They must educate their children in order to preserve society; but that is all. The idea of growing richer or stronger must for the present be forgotten and all our energies be devoted to the saving of a national life which at this moment is in peril.

I venture to paint the picture of American citizenship as I see it.

The fighting man comes first, and he says to his country: "Here I am, sound in body, mind, and spirit; take me; feed, clothe, and shelter me and those dependent upon me. I ask no more." The man of fortune comes, and he ought to say: "Here I am with my million; take me. I can not fight, but I can work and my million can work, and I will work and my million shall work, and I ask for nothing but a living for myself and family." The workingman comes, and he ought to say: "Here I am; take me. I have not had my fair share in the past, but in these days of danger and difficulty I give you my labor, and all I want is a decent living wage." The farmer comes, and he should say: "Here I am, with my broad and fertile fields; take me. I will not remember the injustice of former days. My hands will cultivate these fields, and they shall yield their highest harvests. All I want is enough to support myself and those who depend upon me until the clouds of war have passed away."

I have wondered whether I ought to speak of the women of the country in this connection. Denied though they are their just right to participate in our public affairs, they have come with a loyalty and efficiency never surpassed and giving with grief-stricken hearts their husbands, sons, and brothers to the firing line, and all their energies in every field of charity and philanthropy are willingly employed for the amelioration of the indescribable hardships and awful suffering of war.

The picture is, of course, an ideal, and we can not hope for its perfect realization nor can we hope for a near approach unless these industrial classes are mutually unselfish. It is not to be expected that employees will be satisfied with just a living if their employers are reaping huge profits. It would be unfair to take all the profit from capital and give it to labor. It would be a grievous wrong to ask the farmer to be content with a bare subsistence and tolerate immense dividends to the manufacturer. I am only trying to portray the spirit which ought to prevail, and which in the end must prevail, if we are to win the war.

No one understands better than I do that we can not bring all this about in a direct way, and that some of it can not be brought about at all. We have a Constitution, traditions, and prejudices, none of which I now criticize, and a great part of which, in peaceful times, are invaluable, that compel us to move through cumbersome, uncertain, and indirect methods. To accomplish the purpose and do the justice I have so imperfectly described, we must resort to acts of organization and conscription for the military service, of regulation and control of commerce, of taxation, and the like; but the real object of all these war measures should be to establish a system in which each man, instead of fighting and working chiefly for himself, is fighting and working for the country of which he is a citizen.

Let us keep in mind every moment that to sustain our part in this unprecedented war, we will require substantially all the earnings of all the people in excess of a fair and reasonable living, and that is just as true whether we issue bonds and borrow money for the prosecution of the war or whether we take our revenue in the form of taxation. The industrial and commercial life of the Nation is vast and complicated, and the channels through which the principle must run are hidden and tortuous, but finally the great clearing house of human affairs will strike the balance. If either labor or capital, or any class of our population, is permitted to retain its profits, somebody will have less than enough for the merest livelihood.

We have heard much about slackers, and we have not yet reached the real definition of this odious creature; but the most objectionable and contemptible slacker is the man who spends a large part of his time boasting of his patriotism and the rest of it trying to hold on to a big income far in excess of his living necessities.

For weeks the Finance Committee, and then the Senate, labored to differentiate between war profits and other profits in business enterprises. There may be a sentimental justice in compelling those who have made fortunes out of the war to contribute more heavily than those who have made their money in some other way, but after all the matter is largely academic, for all profits above a living, and that includes, of course, enough to keep the business, if it be a necessary one, going, must be given up in some form or other. If they are collected from the people through high prices they must be turned over to the Government, but the public good will be more certainly promoted if commodities are sold at a reasonable price and no such profits are made. The Government does not want money except as a medium of exchange. It wants food, clothing, supplies, implements, munitions of war, ships, transportation, and all such things for its Army and Navy, and maintenance for its civilian officers and employees.

If it were possible to so arrange it, and I grant that it is not, that the Government would take all the property and conduct all the industries of the country during the war, with everybody at work, taking out of the common production just enough and no more than enough for support, and the Government taking the things necessary to carry on the war, perfect justice would be done.

This, I concede, is nothing more than an illustration, but it points the way for us as we attempt to equalize the burdens of war through the system under which we live, just and adequate in peace, but awkward and complex in solving the problems of war.

Not a penny of taxes should be laid upon consumption except upon those commodities which the consumer ought to let alone. In a war which will demand the whole surplus, any such tax not only defeats itself but is an intense aggravation of a situation very difficult at best. If Congress had the power to levy direct taxes without apportionment among the States some relief could be found in that direction; but it has not, and practically the Federal Government is confined to duties on imports, excise taxes, income taxes, and inheritance taxes.

In all that I have said I have not forgotten that State, county, municipal, and district governments must be maintained, and it is to be assumed without elaborating the subject that the sums paid for local purposes will be deducted in ascertaining profits or net income from the Federal standpoint. It must also be understood that the estimate of annual increase of wealth is the surplus or savings after all normal public dues are paid.

I recognize that the observations I have made, however sound in principle, are, in a measure, theoretical, and that when we take into consideration the character of the Government we have developed, the structure of industry and commerce we have built up, and the habits and disposition of the people, we will be compelled to abate the full demands of justice and make but gradual approaches to the end in view.

The fundamental error in the bill before us as proposed by the conference report, and it is an error which adheres in both the House and the Senate bill, is that it leaves altogether too large a proportion of the cost of the war to be secured through the issuance of interest-bearing bonds—that is, through borrowing instead of taxation. I can not vote against the report on this ground for we must have the money, but I can, and I do, register my protest against the plan, and in the future as, from time to time, we are required to meet the expenses of the war, I intend to do everything which lies within my power to hold back the flood of bonds which threatens the safety and prosperity of the country. This error carries with it the glaring injustice which is observed in the taxation of profits. Instead of taking a very large part of the profits of capital, it takes a very small part. Instead of taking a very large part of incomes in excess of a fair living, it takes a very small part. Instead of taking a due proportion of the big incomes, it takes so little that those who are enjoying them will scarcely be reminded that a war is in progress, so gigantic and devastating in its character that it endangers all humanity and all civilization. In saying these things, I am not conscious of any hostility toward rich men or rich incomes. I am simply facing a grave situation and telling the truth about it. I am simply recording the obvious fact that capital which consumes nothing and therefore has no needs to sustain, must, if necessary, work for nothing until the crisis has passed. It is not within my thought that the essential industries of the country shall be in the least degree impaired, and I have no doubt that in many instances profits must be added to capital in order to increase production. If profits are put to work in order to meet the demands of the time, it is entirely within the principle for which I am contending, that they be so used, for anyone understands that the productive capacity of all our industries must not only be kept up but materially increased. My whole contention is that these profits must be in some fashion devoted to the service of the country. It has been asserted over and over again that we must allow people to grow richer through their labor or investments in order to insure production. I am not willing to admit it, for to admit it is to indelibly brand every such man as a slacker, and if I did not believe that the people were ready to make this sacrifice, I would despair of winning the war. A man who is willing to give his boy to fight for his country, but who is not willing to give the use of his property to support the boy, is, to me, an incomprehensible creature. There may be such men, but if there are, the sooner they are marked for everlasting infamy, the better.

Mr. PENROSE obtained the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me for just a moment to submit a report?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. SIMMONS. On behalf of the Committee on Finance, I report back favorably with amendments House bill 5723, to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes. I do not file now a formal report, but I ask unanimous consent later to file such a report (No. 141).

Mr. SMOOT. In this connection I desire to say to the Senate that I shall not file a minority report, but I have reserved the right to offer amendments to the bill, particularly amendments to Article IV, known as the insurance title.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania kindly yield just for a statement in this same connection?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I attended upon the sessions of the Finance Committee when the bill was under consideration and I think I was present at all the sessions excepting the final session when the bill was completed, there being one or two amendments for consideration at the time I found myself obliged to withdraw from the sessions of the committee in order to be in attendance upon the meeting of the Supreme Court. Therefore, I did not have an opportunity to say, as I wanted to say to the committee, that I should join in a favorable report upon the bill but that I too wanted to reserve the right to offer or to support amendments which I thought might improve the bill.

There was some division in the committee as to rates, and I may want to offer amendments myself or to support amendments offered by others increasing the rates. I would have reserved, if I had been present, the right to support any amendment offered by any Senator that in my judgment improves the bill in any respect.

I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

WAR REVENUE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate more than a very few minutes. I think, however, as one of the conferees, I ought to inform the Senate that I intend to vote for the adoption of the report, and I was authorized by my minority colleague on the conference, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], to sign his name to the report in favor of the measure.

I do not claim, Mr. President, that this bill is in any way perfect. On the contrary, there are features in this measure most objectionable to me and of a character that I can not defend in public; but I take the measure as a whole; and even if it is only 80 per cent good I know that the Government needs the revenue and that it is my duty to vote for the bill.

Reference has been made to the munitions tax. That, Mr. President, obviously is a most discriminatory tax. On these war profits heavy additional taxes are levied, and this munitions tax is still retained upon a few special industrial establishments; and yet I recognize the situation in the other House.

I think the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee represented that situation in entire good faith when he informed the conferees that it would be difficult to get the House to agree to repeal the tax for this year, owing to the impression which existed in the House as to the character of the tax and the feeling that it had been, in some way or other, provided and allowed for in the contracts already made. I therefore most reluctantly yielded with the compromise that the tax should cease after this year; yet it raises greatly the taxes on some of these munition-making concerns for the current year.

Then, the inheritance tax, Mr. President, is to me a most objectionable one, representing, as I do in part, a great State like Pennsylvania, and is a subject which, in my opinion, should be entirely without the taxing jurisdiction of the Federal Government. Nearly every State in New England has passed resolutions through its legislature, or has expressed an opinion through its governor, protesting against this tax, not because such inheritances should not be taxed, but because those great sovereign Commonwealths must have some source of revenue. The Legislature of Pennsylvania at its session last winter passed a similar resolution of protest; so did the Legislature of California and the legislatures of other States; yet, Mr. President, realizing that this bill is only for the duration of the war, and hoping that later other sources of revenue may be found so that this inheritance tax can be reduced or abolished, I yielded.

The postal rates, Mr. President, have been referred to by the chairman of the Finance Committee [Mr. SIMMONS], who has fairly expressed my own view. All along I have thought that this perplexing and complicated subject could not be safely gone into in a war-revenue measure which had to be passed quickly. I have served on the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the Senate for 20 years, and I was chairman of that great committee for a number of years. I was chairman of two joint commissions of the two Houses of Congress having particularly in charge the investigation of postal rates. One of them, I may say without egotism, ranks as a monumental commission in its report. This commission had a large appropriation from Congress and brought to Washington the ablest accountants that could be found in New York, who were put into the Post Office Department, and overhauled the whole system. Many of their recommendations have been embodied in the law in the several appropriation bills which have passed Congress since that report was made; but we apparently are no nearer a conclusion as to the adjustment of postal rates on second-class mail matter than we were in 1897, when the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, of which I was then a new member, viewed with grave apprehension the future of the Post Office Department, because the appropriation was passing the $100,000,000 mark, an amount which seemed to us in those primitive days of appalling magnitude, but which now appears quite trivial.

As the chairman of the committee has stated, the postal rates as embodied in this revenue bill can, perchance, be repealed or amended next December, when the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads of the House of Representatives has before it the general appropriation bill for the Post Office Department, and can consider the question in a deliberate way, with a view to solving it; and I, for one, after 20 years' experience in the controversy, hope that some way can be devised to end it for the good of the Government, for the good of the periodical publishers, and the publishers of daily newspapers.

I say candidly that I should have preferred to have this part left out of the revenue bill, as the Senate left it out; but in view of the fact that the paragraph in reference to the matter does not go into effect until July, 1918, and that Congress will meet in December next, the Senate conferees yielded on that point also.

There would, however, be no particular advantage, Mr. President, in reciting all the features of this bill to which I am opposed. There are some remarkably good features in the measure. The retroactive tax, embodied in the bill as it came over from the House of Representatives, has been eliminated. That was one of those taxes which yielded considerable revenue, but which incensed taxpayers and made them feel that they were being unjustly treated.

Then the so-called double taxation as to holding and subsidiary companies has been provided for in such a way that these additional taxes are not twice imposed.

The proposition to impose a flat taxation of 10 or 15 per cent on the surplus earnings of corporations aroused the business world from the Atlantic to the Pacific as striking at the very fundamentals of sound industrial economics; yet after a prolonged discussion in the Finance Committee, and later on in the Senate and in conference, a satisfactory adjustment of that proposition was effected, by which the surplus invested in the business or retained for the legitimate requirements of the business is exempt from the flat tax, and a still more equitable provision follows, which caused the committee endless discussion until the matter was finally adjusted. Many million dollars of stock dividends out of surplus declared prior to the declaration of war have been provided for in the bill, so that they are taxable as of the year in which the surplus accrued. Another class of cases, where the stock dividend had been specifically declared out of surplus existing prior to March 1, 1913, when no tax prevailed, have been provided for in this bill, so that they are exempt from tax. These are but illustrations, Mr. President, of the good features of the measure.

The definition of "capital" taxes the genius of the political economists to the highest degree in a complicated industrial civilization like ours. It is difficult to arrive at an equitable and wholly scientific definition of "capital." I believe the definition of "capital" in this bill is in many respects inequitable and is not sufficiently broad; I feel confident that it is going to result in hardship and inequity; but I likewise feel that the definition makes considerable progress in covering certain features of the business and industrial world, and that, while it falls short in many respects, it also contains many excellent features. I, therefore, am willing to accept this definition for the time being, with the hope that next winter in another revenue bill, which will likely be coming along, we shall be able to get some broad definition of "capital" which will be economically sound. That we are unable to do so now is only an illustration of the fact, which has often occurred to me, that this bill, carrying with it the largest sum in the history of our Government, or perhaps of any other government, and covering a continental domain and an industrial civilization more complicated than any which has ever existed in the history of the world, has been framed without almost any useful precedent to go by. Direct taxes are new in America, and certainly direct taxes of this magnitude are entirely without precedent. The House and the Senate have had to feel their way. Precedents have not existed in this country to any extent; precedents in Europe are difficult to thoroughly understand in many cases, and there is no great familiarity with them.

In my opinion the physical and industrial conditions existing in the United States, as compared with a much smaller country like any of the belligerent nations of Europe, render comparisons most dangerous to rely upon. The industrial conditions of the Old World compared with ours are stable and normal, whereas ours are growing by leaps and bounds. With the experience which American statesmanship is obtaining in the framing of this and preceding measures, we shall—and I feel confident we will—gradually advance to firmer ground and be able to frame a measure of direct taxation which will be free from many of the objectionable features contained in this bill.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that any committee, at least since the Civil War, has worked harder on a measure than has the Finance Committee of the Senate on this bill. For nearly five months the committee was literally in daily session from half past 9 or 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 or 6 in the evening, sometimes including Sunday, with a short recess in the middle of the day. Most of the committee attended. The discussions were intelligent and illuminating, and the bill is the evolution of those discussions. The other House, of course, did not have the opportunity to give the same length of time to the bill, but they gave intelligent consideration to the measure and sent over to us the nucleus upon which to work. During that time the ablest men in America were here in Washington to be heard before the Finance Committee or to see members of the committee individually, and the members of the committee were most patient with all taxpayers who came to Washington and afforded them a courteous hearing as long as they desired. I, for one, and, I think, most of the members of the committee, absorbed a vast amount of information from talking to those gentlemen, and profited by that information in framing the bill. It was not a question of asking any favors for anyone, but it was a question of framing the measure so that it would bear equitably and logically upon all who would be affected by it.

This revenue bill has to be passed, Mr. President; the Government needs the revenue, and it ought to be passed immediately; it should have been passed two months ago; and while I fully realize that many taxpayers will awaken to the fact that they must pay very burdensome taxes, and others will realize that the taxes bear most severely upon their particular cases, yet, after all, the money has to be had and the taxes have to be levied. It is almost impossible, Mr. President, to frame a revenue measure covering 100,000,000 people, with every diversity of climate, wage standards, and industry, that will not in many cases bear harshly on some as compared with others. It is a physical impossibility to hold the scales with absolute equality; but I feel that the measure is substantially good as a revenue raiser, that it can be amended hereafter, and I sincerely hope that the bill may pass to-day.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the first place, I want to say that the bill as now reported to the Senate by the conferees, in my opinion, is anything but an improvement on the bill as it passed the Senate, and, taken as a whole, the bill is not nearly so satisfactory as it was when agreed to by the Senate. The conferees in the case of this bill have done just what the conferees do in the case of nearly every important bill that passes Congress—inserting new legislation in the bill in conference. There are new provisions in the bill as now reported that were never acted upon by either the House or the Senate.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I am ready to amend our rules so that there can be a vote in the Senate upon any particular item in a conference report without making it necessary to vote against the report as a whole. As it is now, in order to give expression upon any one item in a conference report we are obliged to vote against the conference report entire and send it back to conference. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to call attention to the legislation which has been put in this bill by the conferees, but there are a great many items, and it is a practice that ought to cease.

The bill is not, of course, as I would have drawn it, and I do not believe that it is entirely satisfactory to any one Senator. The conference report is a compromise; but I suppose, taken as a whole, in view of the differences between the two Houses, the conferees will claim that they did the best they could. If I had been a conferee, I would not have signed the report.

Mr. President, I know that there are not enough votes in the Senate to return this report to conference. If I were convinced that there were enough votes, I would do everything in my power to see that it was returned, if for no other reason than to change the zone system as to second-class mail matter, which has been adopted by the conferees. I do not believe that the system proposed can successfully be defended, and if it were not possible before the provision affecting second-class mail matter takes effect for the Congress to repeal it, I would insist now upon a vote upon the conference report in order to see if that provision could not be changed in conference, but the provision does not take effect until July 1, 1918. In the meantime we will have a regular session of Congress, and I think during that regular session of Congress we can get an expression of Congress as to whether it approves this plan, which means absolute ruin to a large class of publications of this country.

Not only that, Mr. President, but it means a division of this country into zones. Certain sections of the country are to be restricted, on account of the charges imposed upon educational publications, from enjoying privileges granted to other parts of the United States. What right have we to impose upon the people of California, Nevada, Utah, Wyoming, and Nebraska rates for carrying publications of the above character nearly twice, and in some cases over twice, the amount that is imposed upon the people of Canada? Why should the people of those States be compelled to pay more for the carrying of magazines and publications of an educational nature than if they were sent to the farthest end of Siberia or Australasia or any other part of the world?

I received a letter from one of the publishers of a leading magazine, calling attention to what this zone system would mean to subscribers in Western States. In that letter it is said that the postage rates proposed amount to twice as much as it would cost to carry their publication to their subscribers anywhere in Canada; it will even exceed the amount paid for postage by their subscribers in Australasia, South Africa, South America, Europe, or the remotest points to be reached in Siberia. The proposed zone system is especially vicious in that it makes the Government of the United States assess a penalty against every intelligent family that is guilty of living beyond a certain radius of the great publishing centers.

Some may ask, "Well, why do they not publish these papers in the West?" I answer that it is impossible to do so, for the great population is in the East, and in order to reach subscribers in the East the magazines will have to pay under this zone system in some cases $4.60 a year more than the present rate and the people could not afford and would not pay the extra expense.

The claim is made, Mr. President, that an exception has been made in the case of the publications of religious, educational, scientific, philanthropic, agricultural, labor, or fraternal organizations or associations; but the exception applies only when the publication is not carried on for profit and when none of the net income derived therefrom inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual. There may be a few such in the United States, but there will be an exceedingly small number of them that will be exempt under that provision.

So, Mr. President, I might stand here and call your attention to the effect of this provision on the religious papers of this country, the most influential of which are not exempt; in fact, so few of the publications in this country will fall under the exemption that they are hardly worth considering.

I shall say no more at this time upon this subject, but I give notice that at the regular session of Congress, if I have any influence or if I can use any influence in any way to have Congress pass upon this question directly, I am going to do it. The Senate passed upon this question; they were opposed to the zone system; a majority of this body said they did not want it; and yet it comes back in the conference report in some respects even more vicious than was the original House provision.

Mr. President, it would take me too long a time to go into a discussion of some of the changes made here, which, I think, can not be defended. I think they weaken the bill. I think, Mr. President, that the object the Senate had in passing this bill was to reach with the highest percentage of taxation the largest percentage of gain caused by this war; but the basis of taxation under the excess-profits tax does not reach those extremely high percentages of profit so effectively as did the original Senate amendment. I know, however, that there are enough votes in the Senate to pass this conference report.

Of course, I know that some legislation along this line must be passed; I also know that the Senate wants to conclude its labors for this extra session. Senators are anxious to conclude their labors and go home; and if anyone should attempt at this time to discuss this report—and I am fearful if any other bill that may come up before us should be discussed at any great length—impatience would be manifested on the part of the Senate.

In a day of two we will have before us the war-risk insurance bill. That bill is of enough importance for the Senate of the United States to spend just as much time in discussing it as they spent in discussing the revenue bill. In fact, Mr. President, it is of more importance, because it does not make appropriations for a single fiscal year, but imposes legislation that will require appropriations for 50 years from now, and perhaps 75 or 100 years hence. The figures are almost staggering when you understand what they are. But I expect the bill to pass the Senate with very little discussion. It seems a waste of time for me to undertake to discuss the details of this bill, knowing as I do that no matter what I say this afternoon the bill will pass as it has been reported.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, I concur quite fully in the sentiment last expressed by the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. The period for discussion with reference to this matter has virtually passed, and yet I feel that it would be unjust to the great masses of the people of America, it would be unjust to the Post Office Department of our Government, and it would be unjust to the conferees who have framed this measure if I permitted some of the statements made by the Senator from Utah to go unchallenged and undenied on this floor.

Mr. President, I voted for this bill with some reluctance. It had in it many things that I did not like. It failed to raise the proper amount of money from the great incomes of this country, according to my conception. Still, I believed that the Government had to have the money to wage this war, and I supported it. I shall support the conference report with a great deal of pleasure, because I believe, directly contrary to the belief of the Senator from Utah, that the conference report is a better bill than either the Senate bill or the House bill; and I believe it most of all with respect to the very proposition about which the Senator from Utah complains most—namely, second-class postal rates.

I am not going into all the figures now, but we have not done one-half of what we ought to have done, even in this conference report, with respect to that matter.

What is the situation? We are making $60,000,000 a year out of first-class postage, and yet we propose to raise something like fifty or sixty millions more out of the masses of the people by charging 3 cents for letter postage instead of 2 cents. All well and good, if the necessities of this country and of this war require it; but when we are taking that amount of money out of the masses of the people whose letter-postage bill is already running the Post Office Department, I say we would be utterly without regard for the interests of the masses of the people of the country if we did not also increase the rates that these periodicals pay, where the Government is sustaining an annual loss of $72,000,000.

What is the proposition, Senators, that excites the ire and resentment and opposition of the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]? He does not raise his voice for one moment in protest against the proposition that letter postage be increased; but the minute we want to increase the rates that these periodical publishers pay, he seems to think that the bill is utterly wrong because it undertakes to do so in a very feeble and indifferent way.

It costs us every year $83,385,929 to handle this second-class mail matter, and we get from it how much? Eleven million three hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars; and when the proposition of the conferees is adopted, and after the four-year period of adjustment it reaches its maximum, we will only receive from this measure, as far as second-class mail-matter rates are concerned, $27,602,783.54. In other words, even when, after a four-year period of adjustment, we reach the maximum of charges on these second-class mail rates, we will still give to these publishers a bounty of $46,783,000 a year, as against their present bounty of $72,000,000 a year.

Ah, Senators, it is justice too long delayed; it is right too long delayed and too scantily measured out at last. These men are not required, under the provisions of the conference report, to give up one-half of the bounty that they have enjoyed for years; and yet the distinguished Senator from Utah says it will ruin the country, and it will ruin all the western people. Not so. Mark the prophecy: I measure my words against his. The readers of these magazines will never pay a cent of this increase. It will all come, and it must come, as it has always come, out of the advertisers; and that is a purely commercial project. If the business of advertising can not be adjusted in four years so as to meet a rate that does not represent a third of what it costs the Government to transact the business, then I say there is something wrong with the business of advertising as it exists to-day.

I am not going to weary the Senate by going over the figures or going over the arguments in detail.

The letter of the Postmaster General, read to-day by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], in charge of this bill, is the clearest, cleanest-cut statement on this question ever issued by a Postmaster General; and in my judgment it refutes completely, absolutely, and undeniably every contention and every statement made by the distinguished Senator from Utah.

So I say that I support this conference report with a great deal of pleasure for the very opposite reason to that which makes my friend from Utah so averse to supporting it at all.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Georgia a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. HARDWICK. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. I wish to ask him as to the experience of Canada under the increased postage rate on first-class matter. I have understood that they raised the rate during the present war.

Mr. HARDWICK. They did.

Mr. GORE. And I should like to ask the Senator what effect that increase has had on the postal revenues?

Mr. HARDWICK. I can not answer the Senator with absolute accuracy about that. My impression is that the report of the department was that the increase had had some effect in reducing the volume, and possibly in reducing the total revenue from that source, but I will not say for certain that such is the absolute fact.

Mr. GORE. Is the Senator advised as to whether it has reduced the total returns?

Mr. HARDWICK. I think it did; but I will not be positive about it. Of course, I will say to the Senator that there may be some danger that an increase in letter postage in this country may reduce the volume of that business, but I do not think the danger is very great.

Mr. GORE. I think when England went to the penny post it received more revenue under the lower than under the higher rate.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is undoubtedly true.

Mr. GORE. For my own part I wish to express my regret that the conference committee agreed to the increased rate on letter postage. This is one of the most objectionable methods of increasing taxation. This is one of the most objectionable of several objectionable taxes agreed to in conference.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is the part of it that I do not like. When we are already making $60,000,000 a year clear profit out of first-class mail matter, to wit, on letters and postal cards, I see very little excuse for undertaking to put an extra charge on it, even in war times. That is really the only thing connected with this postal matter that I think the conferees ought not to have done. But looking at that this time from the same angle that my friend from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] did, we are obliged to take the bitter and the sweet along together. I earnestly and honestly believe that the effect of the action that the conferees have taken to-day will be to guarantee universal 1-cent letter postage throughout this country as soon as normal times come again and as soon as we can adjust these second-class rates to a still higher level, where they will pay a still greater per cent of the cost of handling second-class matter, as ought to be the case.

I therefore accept and support the conference report with respect to this matter, and do so the more readily because I am confident that now that the correct principle has been applied to second-class mail rates the day when we can give the people of the country 1-cent letter postage can not be long delayed, once this war is over.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I want to say a word in answer to what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has said. He has very strong convictions on this subject, but I am convinced that his convictions are founded on an entire misconception of the publication business. I will put my judgment now against his judgment, and predict that if this increase in postage under the zone system is carried into effect it will not lead to an increase in advertising rates, but will rather tend to lead to a reduction in advertising rates, because it will inevitably result in a reduction of the circulation of the publications.

Advertising rates are not under the control of the publisher. Advertising rates are based upon the results which advertisers derive from the purchase of publicity, and anything done to reduce the circulation of publications is inevitably bound to result in reducing advertising rates. Advertising rates were enlarged by the increased circulation of periodicals and newspapers inaugurated 30 years ago, when the rates were placed at their present standard as a part of our educational system. No one can predict exactly the result of what is to come, but this is inevitable: Those increased postage rates can not be paid by most of the publications in this country. They can not be paid by them, because their profits at the present time are not large enough to make it possible. Either the publications must pass on those additional postage rates to the subscribers, or the publications must go out of business, in a very large number of cases.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, why can they not be passed on to the advertisers, if they are all under that obligation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Because the publisher does not control the rate that the advertiser pays.

Mr. HARDWICK. But if you do not reduce his circulation or the number of his subscribers, and the advertisers must all have advertising, and all must pay more money, why can not that be done?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That shows how little the Senator knows about the publication business. If he were the proprietor of a great food product he would advertise in the publications and pay so much per thousand of circulation, and his books would show at the end of the year, from the results obtained, whether he could continue to pay that rate or not. He can not pay the rate simply because the publisher demands it. He can only pay the rate as the result of the sales which he makes, and he will make no more sales upon a publication paying a higher rate of postage than a publication paying a different rate of postage. The advertising rates are based upon the results that the advertiser gets. He buys publicity, and nothing but publicity. The publisher can not raise his rates unless he gives the advertiser larger returns, and he can not give him larger returns when his circulation is being restricted.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do not want to prolong the argument, and I am sure the Senator does not; but does it not seem to him that the man who is going to sell this advertising has something to say about the price at which it shall be sold?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He has very little to say. I have been in the business for 30 years, and I know that I can not raise my advertising rates unless I can give a larger return, and every publisher knows it. It is not a one-sided business. Advertisers pay for results. They buy publicity. If you reduce the publicity the advertising rates have got to come down. That is a delusion that the Senator has been laboring under all this time.

I want to say that this great bonus that is talked about as being paid to the publishers of the country is not paid to the publishers of the country. The business of advertising is the most highly competitive business in the United States, and the publisher in that highly competitive business puts his subscription rates just as low as he can put them. Increase the cost of his distribution, increase the cost of his publication, and he must inevitably increase the cost to the subscriber.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, does not the Senator think that the Saturday Evening Post has something to say about charging $7,000 for a one-page advertisement in one issue?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Why, Mr. President, it is cheaper to buy a page in the Saturday Evening Post at $6,500 than it would be to buy a page in some other publication for $1.50.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does not the proprietor of that periodical have something to say about fixing that amount?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Very little; very little. It is only when his representatives can go to the purchaser of advertising and show him how many hundreds of thousands of readers he is going to reach that he can charge any such rate. Cut off the number of readers and his rate has got to go down. The cheapest advertising in the country is in papers of great circulation. The delusion that a publisher can charge what he pleases for advertising is one of the most monumental delusions of those who know nothing about the business.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the increase in postage will reduce the circulation of publications, why will not the increase in the price of print paper decrease their circulation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It has decreased it. It has tended to decrease it. Only the extraordinary demand growing out of this tremendous war has prevented a greater decrease. But publishers all over the country are raising their rates. Publishers in Chicago, in Philadelphia, in Pittsburgh, in Omaha, and in other places have raised their subscription rates.

Mr. HARDWICK. I will inquire if the Senator's own paper has not raised its rates, both on advertising and on subscriptions?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We have only raised our rate on advertising as we increased our circulation.

Mr. HARDWICK. But you have raised your rate on advertising twice in the last 12 months, have you not?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, I have done that for the last 30 years as often as I could show that I had a larger circulation; but I can not raise my rates without showing that I have a larger circulation. I have raised my subscription price on account of the increased cost of paper, and I will raise it again when the zone system and the higher postage go into effect.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is what they will all do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. You will not be taxing me by increasing postal rates; every strong publication will pass on the increase to the reader; but you will kill off, meanwhile, all of the struggling publications of the country. I do not know what the percentage will be. You will make a path of wreck and ruin that will come back to plague you some day. I do not know how many, but I will venture to say that thousands of publications in this country that are not strong will die, and instead of having promoted the public interest by this course you will have injured it. You will not injure the publishers that are able to take care of themselves. You will ruin a lot of publishers that are in the struggling list—and the business is so competitive that a very large proportion of them are in the struggling list—and you will deprive a great many hundreds of thousands of readers of cheap literature that they are getting to-day.

Mr. HARDWICK. Some of it we could do without very well.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I am in favor of the adoption of the pending conference report. It contains some things for which I did not vote in the Senate, and there are many things for which I voted in the Senate that are not in it, but I believe it is the best that can be gotten out of conference. To reject the conference report would, in my opinion, cause a long delay; and what we need is action, not delay.

This bill is designed to raise money to support our brave soldiers who are fighting or will fight for us in a foreign country, and to defray our expenses in the greatest war that has ever been waged—not only the greatest in size but in the scope of its contest for human rights and liberty.

In this connection I have a short editorial clipping from the New Northwest, of Missoula, Mont., written by the editor, Dr. E. B. Craighead, a writer, educator, and scholar of note. It pays a merited and splendid tribute to the American drafted soldier, which, I think, is appropriate in connection with this subject. I send it to the desk and ask that it be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DRAFTED!

This picture represents the noblest figure in all the world, a common soldier, standing beneath the Stars and Stripes. He asks no favors and fears only God. Clad in simple garb, he stands erect—a man, craving neither pelf nor power, but God's best gift—health and strength to serve his fellow men and to fight for freedom's holy cause. No emperor was ever great enough to add aught to the glory that justly belongs to him and to the hundreds of thousands of American youth who seek only one distinction—that of fighting shoulder to shoulder with the friends of freedom in all lands and under all skies. To him a clear conscience and a mother's benediction are worth more than the iron cross of an emperor.

This plain private neither volunteered nor otherwise sought to have his name inscribed upon the roll of honor. The trappings, the emoluments and distrinctions of office did not appeal to him. But when the tumult and the shouting had died away, and training camps were no longer in need of men seeking to become officers, he heard his country calling for men to join the ranks, and awaited not a second summons. In that call he heard the voice of duty and the voice of God.

He heard the moan of mothers weeping for dead babies—babies not snatched away by a mysterious providence, but bayoneted by brutal soldiers. He saw little children, wandering like wild beasts through trackless forests, along steep and barren mountain sides and heard their plaintive cry for bread, and the still more plaintive moaning for their dead mothers.

This common soldier saw the wretchedness and woe, the worse than Dantean hell into which the sons and daughters of freedom had been plunged by the mad ambitions of a few colossal murderers who were and are struggling to enslave the world. He recalled the sinking of the Lusitania and the impudent threats of an Emperor and madman to destroy the world's commerce. He saw his own beloved America infested by German spies, creeping like treacherous, poisonous reptiles around our industrial centers, our arsenals, and munition plants—yea, lurking boldly about the Halls of Congress or sleeping serenely, as if the war had been won, under the dome of the Capitol itself.

No ordinary man is this American private. He's the bone and sinew and heart of the Republic. He has not been cowed into silence by the iron hand of Prussian despotism, or trained to obedience by the stern rod of the German schoolmaster. He has not sunk into an ignorant brute like the Russian peasant, under the brutal despotism of the Czars. He's a freeman, educated in the free schools of the greatest Republic of the world. He's a sovereign, a king crowned by the might of merit. Taught to fear God and take his own part, he can, like the eagle, look the sun in the eye. To the American private, to the common people and the common soldiers, civilization is appealing, and this appeal shall not be in vain.

Think of holding over the head of this man the threat, "Enter the Army or you'll be shot like a spy or traitor!"

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, for some 9 or 10 years I have been the publisher of a magazine. During a goodly portion of that time I have published that magazine at a loss. But, Mr. President, I voted for the McKellar amendment increasing the rates upon second-class publications. I voted for the Hardwick amendment. I supported the Hardwick amendment in the Committee on Finance, and I shall vote, so long as I have the opportunity, to increase postal rates upon second-class publications, notwithstanding the fact that it affects me adversely, until such time as my publication and others of like character are no longer carried in the mails at a loss to the Government.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise to discuss that phase of this conference report. I had expected to submit to the Senate at some length observations which I desire to make before the close of this session which could be appropriately made while this bill is pending. But in deference to the request of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, who is worn out with his labors upon this bill and in need of rest, and who as chairman of the committee has carried the burden of this legislation through the Senate Committee on Finance in the 10 weeks that the bill was before that committee and during the month or more that it was under consideration by the Senate, and also through all the stages of contest over its provisions in conference and inasmuch as he desires to be relieved of the care of this legislation after to-day, I shall defer any extended observations that I might make while the bill is before the Senate until another time.

I do want to say, however, that I voted against this measure when it was on its passage before the Senate because, as I believed, it violated every principle that should control in the establishment of a wise and just policy in financing a war.

I voted against the bill for other reasons. I do not believe it is possible, or ever will be possible, for any government to finance a war upon economically sound principles; but I do believe that it is the duty of all legislators who have to do with governmental finance, when a war is on, to approximate, in so far as may be possible, to a just principle of finance as applied to the conduct of a war.

Mr. President, there can be no question in the mind of anyone who is even superficially a student of government finance and of political economy since it has been a recognized science that war should be financed by paying for the war while the war is on. Any other policy imposes upon the mass of the people untold burdens. Any other policy makes it difficult for the Government itself to conduct the war within the compass of anything like reasonable economy. The policy of mortgaging, the policy of borrowing, is vicious and unsound on every principle of economy and government finance. There is no reputable authority upon political economy or upon finance who has put forth an untainted opinion since that science was founded who does not support my assertion that the only sound principle of conducting a war is to pay for it as you go, and to tax to pay for it as you go.

But, Mr. President, that inevitably means that you will lay very heavy taxes while the war is on and that inevitably means that you will lay great burdens upon wealth, because, sir, it is an elementary principle of taxation that the tax shall be distributed according to the ability to bear it.

That brings me back to say again that no war has ever been financed upon economically sound principles, and no war ever will be so financed. Why? Because, sir, wealth will not stand for it, and wealth in every government on earth since mankind has been at war has always been potential enough to control the financing of the war.

So it has happened that very few wars have been financed upon what might be termed proper economic basis. Great Britain has come nearer to financing her wars upon a sound economic policy than any other government in the world. For nearly 300 years she has come nearer to meeting the requirements of sound principles than any other government on earth; but only twice, sir, in that period of nearly three centuries has she financed a war upon a fifty-fifty basis, furnishing by taxation 50 per cent of the amount necessary to carry on the war and providing for the additional 50 per cent by borrowing.

It is not alone that you impose the burdens of the war upon a future generation who have no responsibility for bringing on the war, by borrowing the money on long-time bond issues to finance it, but the inevitable result is to greatly inflate the currency and enormously increase prices and increase the cost of living.

Mr. President, in the War of 1812 we blundered, and it brought us financial disaster. In the Mexican War we blundered again, but the war lasted but a short time. Its cost was comparatively small, and we escaped without serious financial embarrassment. In the Civil War we suffered for a generation of time the great swarm of evils that resulted from a wrongful financing of that war.

John Sherman was probably the ablest financier of this country after Alexander Hamilton. He severely condemned the plan pursued by our Government in financing the Civil War, yet in that war we raised relatively very much more by taxes and very much less by bonds than we propose in this war. Reviewing the wrongful financing of that war, what did he say when the refunding time came? And we are making it impossible for us to refund the bonds we are issuing to finance the present war. We are not only issuing bonds to carry on this war in much larger amounts, in proportion to the sum we propose to raise by taxation, than we did in the Civil War, but we are issuing bonds payable at remote periods, and without any option for the Government to pay them off at an earlier time or to refund the loan at a lower interest rate. The Senate voted down the amendments I offered to the last bond bill which would have given to the Government the opportunity to pay the bonds, if able, in 5, 10, or 15 years or to refund at lower rates of interest after the war is over. We are financing this war, I say, under a policy which permits of long-time loans that will carry the high interest rate that we have to pay now at the beck and nod of the money lender over into a period when their money will be worth a very much lower interest rate than it is to-day. John Sherman, reviewing the financing of the Civil War when Congress was considering the refunding measures of that time, declared that that war should have been financed upon not less than 50 per cent raised by taxes and not more than 50 per cent raised by loans, and that every war should be financed by at least as large a proportion of taxation.

Mr. President, whatever may be said about another tax bill at another session, let us not deceive ourselves, for we are now, at this session, at this very moment, preparing the way, laying the foundation, putting down the lines along which this war is to be financed.

Those in control of this legislation are seeing carefully to it now that the amount raised by taxes shall be low and that the amount raised by bonds up to the present time shall be relatively very high. At what moment of time, tell me, Senators, will the policy be adjusted upon an adequate proportion between borrowing and taxation? Now is the time that wealth should be taxed what it ought to pay in order to properly balance between loans and taxation.

Mr. President, this conference report presents the bill to us in some respects a bit better than when it passed the Senate. In some respects it is very much worse than when it passed the Senate. It is still a bad bill in that it contains a false and wicked and wrongful definition of measuring the capital of corporations. You are taking upon yourselves at this time the responsibility of writing into law a definition of a corporation's capital that will fix upon the bended backs of the great body of the people of this country untold burdens for the generations to come—burdens in overcharges in the prices of all the necessaries of life and burdens in extortionate charges upon transportation so long as private capital shall be engaged in interstate commerce. You are writing into this bill an unjust provision with respect to the surplus that corporations will be authorized to accumulate. For the first time in the history of legislation you are giving sanction and authority for charging such rates and such prices as will warrant the accumulation of surplus through those unjust charges and unjust prices, and then that surplus furnished by the people will be converted into new capital for the corporation upon which profits are to be charged.

But, Mr. President, I pointed out these more conspicuous evils and defects in this bill at length when the measure was before the Senate. I could not summon to the support of amendments to strike out of this bill those wrongful provisions in it more than 15 or 20 votes upon this floor. I do not expect, sir, in anything I may say now to be able to change the result. We all understand that when a conference report comes back to the Senate that it can not be amended under our rules. It must be accepted or rejected without amendment.

I hope to live to see the rules of the Senate changed so that a conference report will be subject to amendment by the Senate, or may be rejected in part and be sent back again for conference as to the things that are wrong in it. What chance have you in dealing with a conference report when you must take the whole report or reject the whole report, but can not amend it? Those are our rules to-day.

I would be glad to vote for a bill financing this war based upon the right principles, just to all the people of this country, doing no injustice to wealth, but making it bear its full share of the burden.

Think of it! Thirty-one per cent tax on war profits! Look your constituents in the face and tell them you voted against raising the tax upon war profits above that figure—not the tax upon normal profits but the tax upon war profits—and see how they will receive you. The tax upon incomes and the tax upon war profits provided for in this bill are away below what Great Britain is raising to-day from those sources of taxation. And yet these selfish interests have enjoyed three years of war profits untaxed.

Do you suppose the people will be satisfied? No, Mr. President; the issue raised in the contest over this bill will be a living issue before the people until settled right. That the amount of revenue raised by this bill is too small, that the tax upon surplus incomes and war profits is grossly and wrongfully insufficient, that the bond issues authorized are wickedly excessive, will make the contest at the next session very much more difficult for those of us who are in the minority now is undoubtedly true. But this contest will go on, and at another session the struggle will be renewed to properly and justly tax surplus incomes and war profits.

Mr. STONE. I desire to state that when this measure is disposed of I shall move an executive session. I am making this statement so that Senators may not go away.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, October 3, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, October 2, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou God and Father of us all, author of every best thought, of every best deed, in every age of the world's history, illumine our minds, quicken our aspirations, and strengthen every fiber of our moral being, that we may go forward day by day to greater achievements under the spiritual leadership of the great Captain of our salvation, the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the completion of the Calendar for Unanimous Consent the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] may be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that there are four or five applications for recognition for motion to suspend the rules immediately following the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. GILLETT. Then I make my request to take place after that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that after the disposition of the Unanimous Consent Calendar and motions to suspend the rules, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] shall be allowed to address the House not to exceed 30 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PADGETT. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I have four little naval bills which we want to get through. They were reported yesterday and are upon the General Calendar, but not on the Unanimous Consent Calendar. I want to ask unanimous consent that those bills may be considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to suspend the rules if they are war bills. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes at the conclusion of the address of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes after the conclusion of the address of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. HEFLIN. To make a statement to the House in regard to a newspaper notice this morning pertaining to myself. The Washington Herald contains the statement——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman rise to a question of privilege?

Mr. HEFLIN. I rise to make request for unanimous consent——

Mr. GARNER. What is the request?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman from Alabama make a request for unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. He has not yet made it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am trying to state my reason for making the request.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will prefer his request the Chair will put it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the Journal is approved, I may address the House for two hours to name and discuss Members whose conduct I have said was questionable.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the clearing up of business on the Speaker's table, not to interfere with conference reports, he may be allowed to address the House for two hours. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. I object.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that to-morrow, immediately after the Journal is approved, I be permitted to address the House on the subject I have stated for two hours, and I would like to have a roll call on that motion.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will call the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

STATUE OF JAMES BUCHANAN.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 70) authorizing the erection on the public grounds in the city of Washington, D. C., of a statue of James Buchanan, a former President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, that is not a war bill, and I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

NATURALIZATION.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3132) to amend section 2171 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to naturalization.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will reserve it to ask the gentleman from California if this is a war bill.

Mr. RAKER. It is, absolutely; and I will be able to show it to the gentleman in a few words.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will reserve the objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, this bill authorizes those who declared their intention to become citizens of the United States to complete their naturalization, although they are alien enemies. There are many hundred cases of men who have filed their homestead claims——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I object on the statement already made.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RECLAMATION AND IRRIGATION.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4954) to provide for the application of the reclamation law to irrigation districts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I object.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will not the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will reserve the objection in order to inquire of the gentleman from Oregon if this is a war bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. It certainly is a war measure. It is designed to put in cultivation some 500,000 additional acres upon the Government reclamation project.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would it have the effect of taking farmers away from fertile lands and putting them onto semiarid lands?

Mr. SINNOTT. It will enable the present farmers on irrigation projects to obtain the benefits of the farm-loan act, and thereby to put in larger acreage than they have at the present time. It would have the effect of increasing the crop production by something like $15,000,000.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does this have the approval of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. He desires to take farmers from other land and put them on semiarid land?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; that is another measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there any provision in this measure limiting its operation to the period of the war, or to any particular time, or does the bill change the permanent law? As I recollect reading over the measure and the report, it makes a permanent amendment to this arid-land law—changes that law altogether.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, it does not change the land law. It is designed to provide farm loans on reclamation projects. Under the present law farmers on Government reclamation projects can not obtain the advantage of the farm-loan act, because there is a Government lien upon their land which militates against their securing money under the farm-loan act; but the passage of this bill would enable these men to obtain money under the farm-loan act and increase from year to year their crop production.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state what connection there is between permitting these men under the provisions of this bill to make application under the farm-loan act and the success of our armed forces on foreign soil?

Mr. SINNOTT. It will enable a greater crop production to be put in the coming year and the following year and the following year and increase the crop production. That has a direct connection with our success in the war and with our feeding our allies.

Mr. WALSH. If that is so, why not limit it to the period of the war? Why try to make a change in the permanent law?

Mr. SINNOTT. We want it to go in after years. We want the farmers on the reclamation projects to obtain farm loans just as the other farmers do, and not confine that advantage to the period of the war.

Mr. WALSH. Was any such proposition as this made when the farm-loan act was under consideration here by the House during the Sixty-fourth Congress?

Mr. SINNOTT. It did give some consideration to it.

Mr. WALSH. There was no amendment offered like this.

Mr. SINNOTT. There was no amendment offered at that time, but the subject was considered by the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects, and it is struck from the calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it remain on the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to pass this bill over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and it goes off the calendar.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks upon the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER, KANSAS CITY, MO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 4945, to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Missouri River near Kansas City, Mo., authorized by an act approved June 17, 1914.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a bill for the extension of time for the erection of a bridge. Is it imperative that it should be passed at this session of Congress?

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that it is an urgent matter. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ALEXANDER] can tell more about it than I can.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the grant of time expire before the next session of Congress?

Mr. ADAMSON. I can not tell that from memory. I am told that it is about to expire.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it such a matter as would not hold over until the next session?

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] is absent. He introduced the bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River from Jackson County, in Mr. BORLAND'S district, to Clay County, in my district. The time limit within which the bridge is to be constructed is about to expire. I do not recall just when, but it is not far away. This is a wagon and railroad bridge.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has anything been done to start construction?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I do not think so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How long since the grant to construct the bridge was made?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think this is the second time that we have asked to have the time extended.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much time is asked for?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Three years, I think.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman states that the time is about to expire and that it is important to have it extended, I have no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. That, I think, is the fact.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is to say, if any rights would be lost between now and the next session of Congress.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I think so.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the report on this bill shows that this company has had two prior authorizations for beginning the construction of this bridge, and that the time limit for the construction of the bridge expired June 17, 1917. I think it is highly objectionable to bring bills into the Congress providing for an extension of time for bridges that have no reality except in the conception of some people who are engaged in paper corporations. I would like to know something as to whether this is merely a paper corporation providing for a bridge across an important stream or if it is really contemplated to build the bridge?

The time has already expired. They have had two authorizations on prior occasions for the beginning of the construction of this bridge, and it never has been done. What is the use of taking up the time of Congress just merely perhaps to grant a franchise to some private corporation that is without capital?

Mr. ADAMSON. I can tell the gentleman, from the hearings on a great many similar cases, that in the case of a large river like the Missouri the financing is a very difficult matter. Very often when they start an enterprise and think they are going to succeed there is some slip in the game, and they fail to get the money. I am told these people are very anxious for this bridge, that it is a public necessity, and they were not able to finance it every time they thought they would be able to do so, and they are still trying.

Mr. STAFFORD. What railroad company desires to have this bridge?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is some bridge company, not a railroad company. My interest has been all the while to see that this is not only a railroad bridge but a wagon bridge as well, and asked to have it amended in that regard, for if it is a railroad and wagon bridge, it will be of great interest to the people of Jackson and Clay Counties.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman give any information whether the prior authorization, the time for construction of which this bill seeks to extend, authorized it to be a wagon bridge as well as a railroad bridge?

Mr. ALEXANDER. Well, that is the one point on which I am vitally interested.

Mr. ADAMSON. I might add that that brings about cooperation and renders more probable that they will be able to finance the building of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there any corporation that has been formed to further the building of this bridge?

Mr. ALEXANDER. It is a bridge company at Leavenworth, Kans., that constructs bridges. I want to say, however, it is some time since my attention was called to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The more you get into the facts of this case the more you are confirmed in the belief that it is largely a paper bridge.

Mr. ALEXANDER. My only interest is to see, if this bridge is built, that it shall be both a wagon bridge as well as a railroad bridge.

Mr. STAFFORD. While I do not think much will come of this bill, I am not going to interpose an objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Mr. Speaker, I object to this bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I think that comes too late.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; it does not.

BRIDGE ACROSS FLINT RIVER, GA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4232) extending the limit of time for the construction of a bridge across Flint River.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has any effort been made to complete the work within the time allotted?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will say to the gentleman the people of the two counties which abut on the river wish to build the bridge. It takes considerable political machinery sometimes to work up all these matters. They are bona fide in their intent to build the bridge.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have no objection to the passage of these bridge bills or the extension of time if there has been a reasonable effort made to construct them.

Mr. ADAMSON. The people of these counties really want the bridge and intend to build it as soon as they can.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has any construction work been done?

Mr. ADAMSON. I can not tell the gentleman; it is the bill of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARK], who was here a moment ago—I can not tell what progress has been made.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know as to whether the time allotted has expired?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think it has.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. When does it expire?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think it has already expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then it is necessary to pass this bill before the next session?

Mr. ADAMSON. That is my impression.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thought, perhaps, the gentleman was somewhat confused by the grave thought he has been giving to the new duties he is about to assume.

Mr. ADAMSON. No; I have not had time for that yet. I take things as they come. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, the gentleman always adorns any position he occupies.

Mr. ADAMSON. I thank the gentleman. [Applause.] The commendation of the gentleman is preferable either to the salary or the honor of the new position.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. On what date did the time limit expire?

Mr. ADAMSON. I was going to tell the gentleman before he gave that elegant and beautiful bit of persiflage about my personal service——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Which the gentleman deserves.

Mr. ADAMSON (continuing). That this original bill was passed in 1916, in April, and one year must have expired some time ago.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I thank the gentleman, and venture to suggest that he will have to be very careful about his facts and dates hereafter, because there are some pretty sharp people with whom he will shortly come in contact.

Mr. ADAMSON. No sharper than the able gentleman who interrogates me so frequently on this floor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Mitchell, or to the county of Baker, both of the State of Georgia, acting jointly or separately, and their successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Flint River, approved April 17, 1916, be amended by extending the time limit for the construction of said bridge two years from the passage of this act.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause from line 3, page 1, down to and including line 10, page 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved April 17, 1916, to be built across the Flint River, Ga., by Mitchell County, or by Baker County, Ga., jointly or separately, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date hereof.

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, there is a typographical error, leaving off the letter "s" from the word "time" in the first line. I ask unanimous consent to modify the committee amendment by making the word plural instead of singular.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the modification is agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill extending the time for the construction of a bridge across Flint River, in the State of Georgia."

On the motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, CASS COUNTY, MINN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2434) authorizing the counties of Cass and Itasca, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River between said counties.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the time expired in this case?

Mr. KNUTSON. This is an original bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not think it is a renewal.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will say to the gentleman that this is an original bill.

Mr. ADAMSON. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will not object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Cass and Itasca, in the State of Minnesota, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation on or near the line between townships 144 and 145 north, range 26 west, fifth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "highway."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ARKANSAS RIVER, STATE OF OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4427) granting the consent of Congress to Webbers Falls Railroad Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River, between the town of Webbers Falls and Gore, in the State of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] if that bill has not been passed?

Mr. ADAMSON. The author of this bill [Mr. HASTINGS] called up a Senate bill from the Speaker's desk and passed it here one day, but I have not had time to refer to it and see if it was identical. If it is identical this bill ought to have gone from the Speaker's table. Mr. Speaker, I ask to pass it over temporarily.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks that the bill be passed over temporarily. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

STIMULATION OF FOOD PRODUCTION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4431) to provide for the common defense and general welfare by increasing the production of food upon public and private lands within United States reclamation projects, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there ought to be some explanation of this bill if anyone wants to give it.

The SPEAKER. Who has this bill in charge?

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR]. This is a bill he introduced and reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] demands an explanation on the penalty of objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, while the Interior Department is exceedingly anxious to pass this bill, and the Reclamation Service looks upon it as a very important war measure, at the same time there has been some objection to it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], I understand, expressed some objection the other day. And there is a minority report, signed by one member of the committee, so I think I ought not to try to take it up at this time. The bill is of great importance, and would, if enacted into law, be of tremendous benefit in the development of the Government irrigation reclamation projects.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The bill carries an appropriation of $5,000,000?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir. The bill should be thoroughly considered, and therefore I think it ought to go over and hold its place on the calendar. The Reclamation Service in the Department of the Interior has several times very urgently recommended the passage of this bill, or some measure of this kind, and I earnestly hope that I may secure early consideration of this bill in the next session of Congress. It is a departmental measure. I think it ought to go over until December, and I ask that it be passed over for this session and retain its place on this calendar.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There is a minority report here?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SETTLEMENTS UPON RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4958) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes," approved August 9, 1912.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] what this has to do with the present emergency?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Strictly speaking, I doubt if this bill could be classed as a national emergency war measure, but it is an important measure. It is urgent to a good many deserving people. Settlers upon the Government reclamation projects of the West, in the protection of their homes, are urgently asking for this relief. My report on this bill is, I think, very clear and complete, and in order that there may be a full record upon this measure I will insert it, as follows:

This bill was referred to the Interior Department for report and the Secretary of the Interior reported thereon as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, July 31, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. TAYLOR: I have your letter of July 5, 1917, transmitting copy of the bill H. R. 4958, and requesting a report thereon.

The bill is as follows:

TO PROMOTE SETTLEMENT UPON RECLAMATION PROJECTS.

"A bill to amend section 3 of an act entitled 'An act providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes,' approved August 9, 1912.

"Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of Congress approved August 9, 1912, entitled 'An act providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes,' be, and the same is hereby, amended so that any excess land acquired at any time in good faith by descent, by will, or by foreclosure of any lien may be held for four years and no longer after its acquisition, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to apply the same rule to unpatented public lands within reclamation projects acquired in the manner herein described."

The intent of the bill is to change from two to four years the period during which land subject to reclamation charges may be held by one who acquires it in good faith by descent, by will, or by foreclosure of any lien.

In many cases, especially where loans are made by mortgage companies or other investors, a difficulty has arisen due to the fact that the mortgagee finds it impossible to dispose of the land within the two-year period. The effect of this is that water users find it difficult to make loans, and therefore the settlers are hampered in making the necessary farm improvements and buying farming equipment.

As the law is so closely limited to cases of acquisition of title by descent, will, or foreclosure, there seems to be no opportunity for speculation that would be detrimental to the interests of the project or of the Government.

I am therefore strongly in favor of the passage of such a bill.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary.

Hon. EDWARD T. TAYLOR,
Chairman Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands,

The section 3 of the act of August 9, 1912 (37 Stat., 625), to which this amendment applies, is as follows:

"SEC. 3. That upon full and final payment being made of all amounts due on account of the building and betterment charges to the United States or its successors in control of the project, the United States or its successors, as the case may be, shall issue upon request a certificate certifying that payment of the building and betterment charges in full has been made and that the lien upon the land has been so far satisfied and is no longer of any force or effect except the lien for annual charges for operation and maintenance: Provided, That no person shall at any one time or in any manner, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, acquire, own, or hold irrigable land for which entry or water-right application shall have been made under the said reclamation act of June 17, 1902, and acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, before final payment in full of all installments of building and betterment charges shall have been made on account of such land in excess of one farm unit as fixed by the Secretary of the Interior as the limit of area per entry of public land or per single ownership of private land for which a water right may be purchased, respectively, nor in any case in excess of 160 acres, nor shall water be furnished under said acts nor a water right sold or recognized for such excess; but any such excess land acquired at any time in good faith by descent, by will, or by foreclosure of any lien may be held for two years and no longer after its acquisition; and every excess holding prohibited as aforesaid shall be forfeited to the United States by proceedings instituted by the Attorney General for that purpose in any court of competent jurisdiction; and this proviso shall be recited in every patent and water-right certificate issued by the United States under the provisions of this act."

Ever since the passage of the act there have been hardships occasioned under nearly all of the reclamation projects by the two-year limitation provided in this section 3. This provision of the act, requiring everyone who acquires title to land by descent, by will, or by foreclosure of any lien to convey the land to a person qualified to hold it under the provisions of the reclamation act within two years, works a great hardship upon the mortgagor as well as the mortagee purchaser. While it is claimed that the law offers a way out to the mortagee purchaser, if a corporation, or a capitalist with sufficient means for protection against a forfeiture of the property to the Federal Government, by the investment of what may be a considerable sum in addition to that already tied up in his claim, it does not relieve the situation as regards the mortgagee purchasers of small means, who are in fact the largest holders of such mortgages.

This limitation works a hardship upon the settlers under these projects by increasing the difficulty they have in borrowing money at low rates of interest to enable them to make necessary improvements, to buy live stock, or to pay off their indebtedness to the Government. Under the rules and regulations of the Reclamation Service, where there is an equity of redemption, an owner is only given practically one year in which to find a qualified purchaser.

It is very often impossible to obtain a qualified entryman within this very short time, and it is only fair to all parties concerned, and in the interest of the development of these projects, to give the mortagee purchaser a reasonable time to find some legally qualified person who is willing to and can purchase and legally hold the land.

There is no longer any fear whatever of the acquisition for speculative purposes by corporations or others of large bodies of lands reclaimed by the Government. The great cost of the water under all of the reclamation projects has practically made impossible any speculation in such lands. In fact, the high cost of the water and the rules and regulations make any speculation an utter impossibility. Therefore the department itself and the reclamation officials have been for some time and are now thoroughly convinced that the present limitation is unnecessary and unreasonable and works an injurious hardship upon the borrowing power of the settler as well as upon the mortgage purchaser, or any purchaser; and for that reason the department has heartily joined in the recommendation of these reclamation officials to extend this limitation to a period of five years, and thus enable the settlers more readily to borrow money on the same terms as any other citizen. Many persons think the limitation ought to be entirely removed, and that no imposition, hardship, monopoly, or speculation would or could be occasioned if it were. But your committee is not disposed to go that far at this time and feels that a five-year limitation could safely and should be made in the interest of the development of all the reclamation projects, and would in no wise be subject to abuse or infringement on the rights of the Government.

The same reasoning applies exactly to excess land acquired at any time in good faith by descent or by will. In fact, the recipients of land acquired in that way might in many cases be justly entitled to ask for even a longer period of time, because often they are nonresidents, sometimes minors, and there are various other reasons why they should be given a reasonable time and ample opportunity to secure qualified entrymen. Upon the same principle the rule should also apply to unpatented public lands within the reclamation projects acquired in the manner herein described.

For the foregoing reasons your committee unanimously approves this measure and urgently requests its adoption as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. WALSH. It is not a war measure?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Not exactly a war measure.

Mr. WALSH. The time now is two years, and the committee made it five?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes. That is, the only amendment the Committee on Irrigation made was to raise or extend the time from two years to five years within which to obtain a qualified entrymen, so that they may not lose the property or their investment.

Mr. WALSH. What time is required to get a qualified entryman to go on there?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Under the present law there is often an equity of redemption, as the gentleman knows. That takes some nine months out of the two years. The members of the committee from the West thought it had better be five years. That is the sentiment of all those Representatives who represent districts where there are reclamation projects. We feel that as an emergency measure this bill ought to pass at this session of Congress, and I hope it will meet with the approval of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of Congress approved August 9, 1912, entitled "An act providing for patents on reclamation entries, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended so that any excess land acquired at any time in good faith by descent, by will, or by foreclosure of any lien may be held for four years and no longer after its acquisition, and the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to apply the same rule to unpatented public lands within reclamation projects acquired in the manner herein described.

Amend, page 1, line 5, by striking out "four" and inserting in lieu thereof "five."

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speakers' table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 2719. An act to permit the reenlistment of Omer G. Paquet in the U. S. Army; to the Committee on Pensions.

PROPERTY LOST IN NAVAL SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent is the bill (H. R. 5647) to provide for the reimbursement of officers, enlisted men, and others in the naval service of the United States for property lost or destroyed in such service.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FESS. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman what property is specifically referred to; whether that lost by submarines, accidentally, or what?

Mr. PADGETT. It is any loss that is due to the operations of war; all these articles that the regulations require the men to have with them. A man is on a merchant ship, and he has his clothing and his uniform, and things of that kind. The ship strikes a mine, for instance, and the ship is destroyed, and he loses his property.

Mr. FESS. The loss is therefore not due to contributory negligence?

Mr. PADGETT. No; the bill expressly provides that there shall be no contributory negligence.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand that this proposed bill changes in a substantial way the policy that the Government has pursued heretofore in reimbursing sailors and officers for their outfits and uniforms when lost on the high seas. As I read the law, as embodied in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy to the Speaker, no reimbursement is obtainable by any seaman or any officer of the Navy for his clothes in case that loss occurs during a war. Am I correct?

Mr. PADGETT. That is the present law; and this allows them to recover during the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is well versed in the theory of naval warfare. What was the theory of the Government heretofore in not making any allowance whatsoever to enlisted seamen or officers in the Navy for their clothes and outfits?

Mr. PADGETT. During war?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; during war.

Mr. PADGETT. I have been unable to find the reason upon which that was based. I do not know. It occurs to me that it is a strange provision that was inserted in the act of 1895 that allowed for the recovery of the clothing and outfit in times of peace but in times of war prohibited it.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, in the case of enlisted men wearing apparel and outfits are furnished by the Government, whereas——

Mr. PADGETT. The enlisted man on first enlistment gets an outfit to the value of $60, but nothing after that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Whereas in the case of naval officers——

Mr. PADGETT. They furnish their own.

Mr. STAFFORD. Their own accouterments?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in reading the Secretary's letter that for recovery in time of peace officers were limited to an amount not exceeding one month's compensation. Under the bill as proposed there is no limitation whatsoever on the amount which may be recovered from the Government for loss of personal outfit in case of war.

Mr. PADGETT. The limitation is provided in the bill. It is provided that "The liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to such articles of personal property as are required by the United States Naval Regulations," and so forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is the gentleman reading?

Mr. PADGETT. From page 3, beginning on line 2, the first proviso. I read:

Provided, That the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to such articles of personal property as are required by the United States Naval Regulations and in force at the time of loss or destruction for such officers, petty officers, enlisted men, or others engaged in the public service in the line of duty.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman inform the House as to what the total value of such property is for the officers of the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. I should guess that an outfit of an officer would be perhaps of the value of $250 or $300, and that of a petty officer would be less, and that of an enlisted man would be very decidedly less.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman have any objection to an amendment substantially in this form, carrying out the idea of the existing law: "Provided further, That in the case of such loss by petty officers, seamen, and others not officers, the total reimbursement, including the allowance for such articles compensated for, shall not exceed $60"—which is the existing law in times of peace—"and in the case of such loss by others than petty officers it shall not exceed the amount of his sea pay for one month"—which is the existing law in case of loss during peace?

Mr. PADGETT. There is a recommendation that the allowance be increased during the war to $100. On account of the very great increase in the cost of outfits, $60 will not outfit an enlisted man. I would not object to limiting the enlisted men to $100 and the officers to one month's pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be very glad, then, to offer that amendment when the bill is under consideration, with the support of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much time will there be for debate on that amendment?

Mr. GARNER. It will be under the five-minute rule.

Mr. PADGETT. It will be under the five-minute rule in the House, just as in Committee of the Whole. There will be no general debate, but there will be no objection to the discussion of meritorious amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Paymaster General of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reimburse such officers, enlisted men, and others in the naval service of the United States as may have suffered, or may hereafter suffer, loss or destruction of or damage to their personal property and effects in the naval service in battle with the enemy or by shipwreck or other marine disaster when such loss, destruction, or damage was without fault or negligence on the part of the claimant, or where the private property so lost, destroyed, or damaged was shipped on board an unseaworthy vessel by order of an officer authorized to give such order or direct such shipment, or where it appears that the loss, destruction, or damage of or to the private property of the claimant was in consequence of his having given his attention to the saving of the lives of others or of property belonging to the United States which was in danger at the same time and under similar circumstances. And the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to such articles of personal property as the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department, with reference to the personnel of the Navy, or the major general commandant of the Marine Corps, with reference to the personnel of that corps, in his discretion, shall decide to be reasonable, useful, and proper for such officer, enlisted man, or other person while engaged in the public service in line of duty, and the certificate of said chief of bureau or major general commandant, as the case may be, shall be sufficient voucher for and shall be final as to all matters necessry to the establishment and payment or settlement of any claim filed hereunder; and the action of the said chief of bureau or major general commandant, as the case may be, upon all claims arising under this act shall be final, and no right to prosecute a claim or action in the Court of Claims or in any other court of the United States, or before any accounting officer of the United States, or elsewhere, except as herein provided, shall accrue to any person by virtue of this act; Provided, That the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to such articles of personal property as are required by the United States Naval Regulations and in force at the time of loss or destruction for such officers, petty officers, seamen, or others engaged in the public service in the line of duty: Provided further, That with reference to claims of persons in the Marine Corps filed under the terms of this act the paymaster of the Marine Corps shall make the reimbursement in money, and the quartermaster of the Marine Corps shall make the reimbursement in kind herein provided for: And provided further, That all claims now existing under this act shall be presented within two years from the passage hereof and not thereafter; and all such claims hereafter arising shall be presented within two years from the occurrence of the loss, destruction, or damage: And provided further, That the term "in the naval service," as herein employed, shall be held to include service performed on board any vessel, whether of the Navy or not, provided the claimant is serving on such vessel pursuant to the orders of duly constituted naval authority: And provided further, That all claimants under this act shall be required to submit their claims in writing and under oath to the said Chief of the Bureau of Navigation or major general commandant, as the case may be: And provided further, That claims arising in the manner indicated in this act and which have been settled under the terms of previously existing law shall be regarded as finally determined and no other or further right of recovery under the provisions hereof shall accrue to persons who have submitted such claims as aforesaid: And provided further, That sections 288, 289, and 290, Revised Statutes, and the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., p. 962), are hereby repealed: And provided further, That reimbursement for loss, destruction, or damage sustained and determined as herein provided shall be made in kind for such articles as are customarily issued to the service and shall be made in money for other articles at the valuation thereof at the time of their loss, destruction, or damage: And provided further, That in cases involving persons in the Navy reimbursement in money shall be made from the appropriation "Pay of the Navy," and reimbursement in kind shall be made from the appropriation "Outfits on first enlistment," and in cases involving persons in the Marine Corps reimbursement in money shall be made from the appropriation "Pay, Marine Corps," and reimbursement in kind shall be made from the appropriation "Clothing, Marine Corps," respectively, current at the time the claim covering such loss, damage, or destruction is paid.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HICKS: At the end of line 3, on page 5, add: "And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall apply to the personnel of the Coast Guard in like manner as to the personnel of the Navy, whether the Coast Guard is operating under the Treasury Department or operating as a part of the Navy, and all of the duties which under this act devolve upon the major general commandant of the Marine Corps with reference to the personnel of that corps shall devolve upon the captain commandant of the Coast Guard, and in cases involving persons in the Coast Guard reimbursement in money shall be made by a disbursing officer of the Coast Guard from the appropriation 'Coast Guard' and reimbursement in kind shall be made by the captain commandant from the appropriation 'Coast Guard.'"

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York offers his amendment. The gentleman from Wisconsin reserves his point of order, and the Chair will inquire if there is any committee amendment to the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. No.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin on the point of order.

Mr. HICKS. I desire to make a statement if the gentleman from Wisconsin will reserve his point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from New York asks me to reserve the point of order.

Mr. HICKS. I should like to say a word in regard to the proposed amendment. The Coast Guard now is a part of the Navy, having been taken over from the Treasury Department into the Navy in accordance with the act creating the Coast Guard. This amendment of mine merely extends the provisions of this act to cover a part of the service which is now a part of the Navy. It is to extend the provisions of the act to a most meritorious and efficient arm of the forces now fighting for the flag. It does not make an exception. It merely equalizes the various branches of the service in the Navy Department. This amendment, I understand, has the approval of Admiral Palmer, Admiral Benson, and the chairman of our Naval Committee [Mr. PADGETT], and I hope it may be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman a question: Is not this amendment already covered in the bill?

Mr. HICKS. No; it is not, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Here is the title of this bill:

To provide for the reimbursement of officers, enlisted men, and others in the naval service of the United States for property lost or destroyed in such service.

Does not the gentleman himself state that the Coast Guard is a part of the Navy?

Mr. HICKS. Yes; but a little bit further on in the bill it provides for the payment being made by the commandant of the Marine Corps, and so forth, and my amendment provides for payment to these officers and men by the commandant of the Coast Guard, merely extending the provision for payment so that the proper authorities will be able to act.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin want to be heard?

Mr. STAFFORD. I merely reserved the point of order, and after the statement of the gentleman from New York I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. HICKS. I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer an amendment, on page 1, line 8, to strike out the words "in battle with the enemy" and substitute the words "due to the operations of war," for the reason that a ship running over a mine or something of that kind might not be in battle with the enemy. To make the language clear I wish to substitute the words "due to the operations of war."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 3, line 2, after the word "act," strike out all the proviso down to line 8.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee, chairman of the committee, that this is the matter about which I spoke to him this morning, and as to which he disagreed with me, but I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that this proviso contradicts the language in lines 8 to 14, on page 2, which is as follows:

And the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to such articles of personal property as the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department, with reference to the personnel of the Navy, or the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, with reference to the personnel of that corps, in his discretion, shall decide to be reasonable, useful, and proper—

Now, if they decide that these men had articles aboard a naval vessel which they certify were reasonable, useful, and proper, the men can not be reimbursed for them unless under the terms of the proviso the Navy provide or require by regulation that the men may have these articles. So, when you say that the liability of the Government shall be limited to such articles of personal property as are required by the United States naval regulations in force at the time of the destruction of such property, you prevent men recovering for the loss of articles which are reasonable, useful, and proper, and which they may have been required to have under the custom or the order of the Captain Commandant of the Coast Guard or the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps.

But if not provided for in the regulations, and in order to have them provided for, the Navy Department would have to set out in detail a long list of articles of personal property which these men would be required to have. But even then, if they are limited by the terms of the proviso, injustice would follow, because they might have omitted in the list some single article of property which was reasonable and proper and useful for them to have aboard a ship. It seems to me either the proviso should be stricken from the bill or the whole matter left to the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, the Major General Commandant of the Marine Corps, or the Commandant of the Coast Guard, and in case of loss, permit them in their discretion to certify that the articles lost during the operations of war, shipwreck, or stress of storm were useful, reasonable, and proper, and in that case they could be reimbursed for them or have other articles of like value and quality issued to them.

I submit to the chairman of the committee that it is weakening the effect and purpose of the act by leaving the proviso in there, tying them down to things that are provided for by regulation and not permitting these men in this new departure in legislation and exhibition of generosity on the part of the Government to the men in not permitting them to recover for useful and reasonable articles of personal property. I trust that the gentleman will accept the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. I do not think there is any conflict. This limits recovery to those articles that are required and provided by regulation, which is proper. Men should not carry everything aboard ship and expect the Government to compensate them for the loss of it. The Government provides certain things by regulation. Now, that is comprehensive. A man might be on a battleship and it would be proper for him to have many more things than it would be if he was on one of these submarine chasers, a small craft, and on it temporarily. The first provision says that they must certify that they were reasonable and proper, and they are limited in the total to the regulations that provide these articles. A man on a battleship might have all the articles provided by the regulations, and if they were all lost they would be paid for. But on a temporary duty, on a small craft, to unload all of his things for that small craft might not be proper and reasonable, and that is for the officer to pass upon. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. If an enlisted man had all the articles which were required by the regulations and the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation refused to certify that they were reasonable and proper and useful, he could not be reimbursed for them, could he?

Mr. PADGETT. He could not if they were not proper for him to have at that particular place. For instance, if he took unnecessary things, although they might be necessary on a battleship or a cruiser—if he took unnecessary things on a small boat, took aboard everything he had, and they were lost by the destruction of the boat, it might not be proper.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think that the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation and the commandant of the Marine Corps, the commandant of the Coast Guard, could be trusted to certify whether such articles were reasonable and useful and proper?

Mr. PADGETT. I have perfect confidence in their ability and integrity, but at the same time I think it is good legislation to prescribe limits and to define in a general way what they are to pay for.

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman will permit me a further question, if the enlisted man has property which is not required by regulations and which the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation might certify was useful and proper for him to have, under the bill as drawn he could not be reimbursed?

Mr. PADGETT. If not provided for by regulations, it ought not to be paid for. If you adopt a different course, you subject the commandants of the Marine Corps and Coast Guard to all sorts of persevering political influence to allow this to that man and that to this man.

Mr. WALSH. Why not leave it entirely to regulation?

Mr. PADGETT. We do leave it to regulations within the scope of articles appropriate to existing conditions.

Mr. WALSH. And so you leave it open to the display of favoritism?

Mr. PADGETT. No; we leave it to the regulations.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

Insert after the Hicks amendment the following:

"And provided further, That in the case of such loss by a petty officer, seaman, and others not officers, the total reimbursement, including the allowance for such articles compensated in kind, shall not exceed $100; and in case of such loss by officers other than petty officers, it shall not exceed the amount of his sea pay for one month."

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to me to make a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business under the rule for Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if it is intended to have a session of the House to-morrow?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. What business will be taken up?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There will be a report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

REIMBURSEMENT OF OFFICERS AND MEN IN THE NAVY FOR PROPERTY LOST.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is a proposal that was called to the attention of the House when the bill was under consideration a few minutes ago. The purpose is to place the same restriction as to the amount for the recovery of personal property of enlisted seamen and of officers which is now the existing law when that property is lost in time of peace, except, at the suggestion of the chairman of the committee, the total amount that may be recovered by the enlisted seamen has been raised from $60 to $100.

The purpose is to place a further restriction upon the amount to be recovered by officers and seamen—particularly officers—in case of the loss of their personal effects. Never before in the history of the Government have we reimbursed officers or enlisted men for personal effects which they have lost in time of war. I have known instances where private bills have been presented here for consideration providing for the reimbursement for loss of private effects in various services, when the loss occurred through no fault of the owner, and those bills have been strenuously objected to upon the ground that it was not the policy of the Government to be an insurer. This bill adopts a different policy. In this war we are proceeding under the idea that the Government should be an insurer to a large extent, and this merely places a limitation so that there can not be any recovery, particularly by officers, for effects that might not be warranted otherwise, if it were presented to the attention of the House. Certainly a month's salary of an officer should be the maximum amount that should be recovered in case he loses his personal effects. I understand the amendment has the support of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say to the House that a moment ago when the bill was called up the House heard the gentleman ask me if I would object to the amendment, and I told him that I would not.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this amendment does not have the approval of the chairman of this committee nor of the committee. The gentleman has stated that he does not object to the amendment which has been offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin. It seems to me this amendment should be voted down. It is certainly most stingy and parsimonious, in view of present conditions. This bill provides that the loss shall be limited to such articles of personal property as are required by United States naval regulations in force at the time of the loss or destruction. In other words, we require an officer or enlisted man to purchase so much of supplies or clothing or equipment as is necessary for him; but if he is on shipboard and they strike a mine and he barely escapes in his underclothes with his life, and loses his effects, then he can recover only, according to the gentleman's amendment, the sum of $100 or a month's salary, when, in fact, he may lose $250 worth of clothing and equipment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is mistaken. He is not stating the amendment properly. It is limited to one month's salary, if he is an officer.

Mr. KING. Why should he not be compensated for his entire equipment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Because I do not believe the Government should compensate an officer connected with the naval service for, say, gold hair brushes or the like.

Mr. KING. The gentleman does not believe that a man who is about to lose his life for his country——

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, it is not a question of losing his life. The gentleman can not arouse sympathy with that kind of an argument.

Mr. KING. I am simply asking for justice for the man.

Mr. STAFFORD. This simply provides adequate protection for the Government.

Mr. KING. Are gold hairbrushes required by the naval regulations?

Mr. STAFFORD. Brushes would be required; but these men wearing epaulettes might have some extravagant notions with respect to manicure sets.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman know whether manicure sets are required by the naval regulations?

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose the gentleman from Illinois does, and I yield to him upon that.

Mr. KING. If they are required by the naval regulations, should they not be paid for if the officer loses them?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD) there were—ayes 16, noes 32.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question. Why does not this measure comprehend all other classes of service vessels which have been transferred to the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. It does. That is what it is intended for. It reimburses the officers of merchant vessels and others. That is one of the purposes of the bill. Under existing law an officer serving on a merchant vessel who loses his effects through submarine or mine gets nothing, and under this bill he gets something.

Mr. WALSH. Does this law cover the case of the lighthouse tenders?

Mr. PADGETT. It covers everything that is in the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. Why was it necessary to adopt the Hicks amendment?

Mr. PADGETT. They are in the Navy temporarily.

Mr. WALSH. So are the lighthouse vessels there temporarily.

Mr. PADGETT. The amendment of Mr. HICKS puts the Coast Guard there permanently, not only during the war, but as they are going out on hazardous business, risking their lives all the time, it makes them permanently able to recover compensation. The others would get it only when they are operating in the Navy.

Mr. WALSH. Including the Naval Reserve and scout patrols?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; all of those.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of privileged matters, I may be allowed to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of privileged matters, he be allowed to address the House for 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Upon what subject?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Upon the subject of our justification for entrance into this war—free of any personalities, and I am sure I shall not say anything to offend any Member of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I am sure the gentleman will make a good speech, but we are very anxious to get up the soldiers' and sailors' civil rights bill to-morrow, and I would not want any speech to come in ahead of that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The basis upon which I made the request was after the disposition of privileged business.

Mr. WEBB. But this is not a privileged matter, whether Calendar Wednesday is on or not on. I do not want to object to my friend making a speech——

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have taken very little of the time of the House.

Mr. WEBB. I understand; but the soldiers' and sailors' civil-rights bill is one of the most important measures to a million boys of which the gentleman could think, and is pending and ought to be passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee). The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Alabama to withhold his request for the moment and confer with the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Would the gentleman have any objection after the disposition of that measure?

Mr. WEBB. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I make the request after the disposition of that bill, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent——

Mr. CANNON. Would not the gentleman say if it takes all the day, then the next day?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, that bill may take more than one day. It may be the last bill under consideration, and we can not forecast what will be under consideration then. I have no objection to the gentleman taking 20 minutes to-morrow morning.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I just wanted to get the privilege before the adjournment of Congress to deliver this short address.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can the gentleman go ahead to-day?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I would be glad to have that privilege.

Mr. STAFFORD. Two gentlemen have already obtained permission. Why does not the gentleman ask for unanimous consent to proceed after the other two gentlemen who have already obtained consent?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That, Mr. Speaker, is about the best bargain I can strike, and I desire to modify my request to that extent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that to-day, after the conclusion of the speeches unanimous consent for the delivery of which has been already granted, he may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the gentleman from Alabama concludes I may have unanimous consent to address the House for 40 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] asks unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] he may be permitted to proceed for not exceeding 40 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from North Carolina upon what subject he intends to speak?

Mr. POU. Upon practically the same subject. I want to take up the question of why America entered the war and a review of the work of this Congress.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman does not intend to speak as chairman of the Committee on Rules on any personal subject?

Mr. POU. Absolutely not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Washington Herald this morning contained a statement to the effect that Representative MASON, of Illinois, would take the floor to-day to denounce HEFLIN unless he corrected his statement, and so forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to couple with that a request, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have not objected; but I want to couple with that a request to address the House in order that I may name certain Members of Congress——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Wisconsin demands the regular order, and the regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not object.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago, when I was out at lunch, I understand the gentleman who occupies the chair got permission to set aside Calendar Wednesday to-morrow. I want to state to the Speaker and the House that I tried to arrange with the Speaker, the floor leader, Mr. GILLETT, and other Members to take up the soldiers' and sailors' civil-rights bill to-morrow, and, unless there is some urgent reason for not doing so, I ask permission to set aside the order and that Calendar Wednesday may have its place to-morrow as usual.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to set aside the order——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, later in the day that may be done, but we can not forecast conditions that may arise, and for the time being I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the order setting aside Calendar Wednesday to-morrow may be dispensed with, and the gentleman from Wisconsin for the time being objects.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ARKANSAS RIVER, WEBBERS FALLS, OKLA.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the bill H. R. 4427 was passed temporarily in order to ascertain the condition of a Senate bill. I find the Senate bill is still on the House Calendar, and I ask that the bill H. R. 4427 be now taken up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ADAMSON. And, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in lieu of that bill the House consider the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill in lieu of the House bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the title of the bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. Report the bill, please.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4427) granting the consent of Congress to Webbers Falls Railroad Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River between the towns of Webbers Falls and Gore, in the State of Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Now, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] asks unanimous consent to consider the Senate bill in lieu of the House bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2710) granting the consent of Congress to Webbers Falls Railroad Co., a corporation, its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Arkansas River between the towns of Webbers Falls and Gore, in the State of Oklahoma.

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Webbers Falls Railroad Co., a corporation, and its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the town of Webbers Falls, in the county of Muskogee, in the State of Oklahoma, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

By unanimous consent, a House bill (H. R. 4427) of similar title was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the number of registrants in Connecticut under the conscription law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the number of registrants in Connecticut under the conscription law. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the coal and car shortage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the car-shortage question. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the next bill.

HOMESTEAD AND OTHER PUBLIC LAND AFFIDAVITS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5082) providing for an amendment to section 2293 of the Revised Statutes, allowing homestead and other public-land affidavits to be taken before the military commander of any person engaged in military or naval service of the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That during the continuance of the present war with Germany, and until his discharge from service, any man serving in the armed forces of the United States, who is an applicant or entryman under the land laws of the United States, or who has, prior to enlistment, filed a contest, with the view of exercising preference right of entry therefor, may make any affidavit required by law or regulation of the department, affecting such application, entry, or contest, or necessary to the making of entry in the case of the successful termination of such contest awarding him preference right of entry, before his commanding officer as provided in section 2293 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I assume that this a war bill, but there should be some explanation of it, if the author of the bill will give it.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, replying to the question as to whether or not this is a war measure, I will say that it is so regarded by the Interior Department, as there are a great many cases now pending before the department that would be affected by this, where applicants for entry under the homestead, desert-land, and other public-land laws have initiated proceedings and have been called to the front to serve in the Army or the Navy of the United States. The laws governing these entries are such that the affidavits required have to be made within the land districts affected. These boys, some of them, are now in the training camps, and a good many of them are across the water and engaged actively, and it is necessary for us to protect their rights to their entries. And there are a great many cases now pending where contests have been instituted, where squatters' rights have been made upon withdrawn public lands, and it is impossible for them to complete their entries without a provision of this kind.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does this law empower a commanding officer to take an affidavit in a foreign country?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Anywhere. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would the gentleman have any objection to having his bill amended so that an affidavit might be taken by a commanding officer anywhere in any foreign country, affecting any matter apart from the land laws?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Well, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that that is a broader ground than my bill contemplates. This only applies to affidavits that will be required to be made within the land-office districts and before certain officers.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman familiar with the bill——

Mr. WINGO. I will state that the proposition the gentleman from Pennsylvania proposes is already covered by law, but the proposition the gentleman from Colorado is trying to reach is not covered by law, but the law requires the affidavits to be made in the respective counties.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. In the land district?

Mr. WINGO. Yes. In the land district. Now, the proposition the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] suggests is covered by existing law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. A bill has been introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STRONG] covering this very point. The gentleman from Pennsylvania made some inquiry as to whether existing law covered this question——

Mr. WINGO. I had occasion to look into that. The only case I was able to find where there is not any provision under existing law is the homestead case, and the provision requires the affidavits to be made at a specific place.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want to interfere with what the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] is trying to accomplish. I think it is a very proper purpose and made necessary by the exigency of war, but there are others besides land claimants whose interests will be affected when they are in the service in foreign countries, and it may be very inconvenient for them to reach the office of consuls and others, and it may be convenient for them to make affidavits before their commanding officers. If the law does not provide for that—the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] says it does—it ought to provide for the convenience of these men in the service who can not reach men qualified in foreign countries to make affidavits.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is the gentleman from Colorado aware that the soldiers and sailors civil-rights bill, so called, carries the identical provision that is in the bill the gentleman is now reporting?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I am aware of that. I appeared before the Judiciary Committee with reference to that, and that committee has incorporated primarily this provision. But I understand that this bill is not on the calendar. It is now growing late in the session, and my only object in bringing this in now is in order to get, without question, action upon it, and I understand there may be a question with reference to whether or not the other bill is enacted into law because of its vital necessity to so many of our people who are now serving in the Army.

Mr. WALSH. But does not the gentleman think that it will be better, inasmuch as the civil-rights bill has several sections—I think two or three sections—relating to rights in lands, desert lands, mining claims, and homestead entries, to have it all incorporated in one law, rather than to have a separate bill for this provision and the rest of it covered in a general bill? The bill, it is expected, will be taken up and passed by the House before this session adjourns. I am sure I have heard of no opposition to the principle which the gentleman is advocating, and I think it was incorporated into the bill unanimously after the gentleman from Colorado and the gentleman from Wyoming and one or two others called the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary to it. There is no opposition to it, and if it is already in that bill, and it is expected that that bill is to pass, my query is, Would it not be better to have it all in one law?

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts think that a general moratorium bill will become a law during this session?

Mr. WALSH. I understand that it is expected that it will. I do not know what the plans of the administration are in that respect.

Mr. MONDELL. In the event—rather improbable, it seems to me—that it does become a law, it would be entirely feasible, when that bill is finally considered, to strike from it the last paragraph or the section that deals with these matters if in the meantime this bill has become a law.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman from Wyoming think that this bill will become a law at this session?

Mr. MONDELL. I feel confident that it will, and I understand that the gentleman from Colorado has assurance that it will be promptly enacted.

Mr. WALSH. I am not objecting, understand. I was only wanting to direct the attention of the House to the fact that this was incorporated in the civil-rights bill, which it was expected would come up and be passed this week.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I will say to the gentleman that the incorporation of that provision in this bill would be entirely satisfactory to me, but I have assurance that if this bill is enacted to-day in the House it will go through the Senate, and there are so many people in my district and in many other of the Western States affected that I would like to see it passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object—and I shall not object, because I think the bill ought to pass—when the bill is taken up I desire to offer two small amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, the bill being on the Union Calendar, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MONDELL: Page 1, line 5, after the word "who," strike out the word "is" and insert the words "prior to the beginning of his service was a settler."

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I have offered does two things. First, it makes it very clear—and we should make it very clear in this legislation—that the affidavits which may be made are affidavits which relate only to rights initiated prior to entry upon the service. We have had several bills before the Congress dealing with soldiers' rights, and in every case the House has been very careful to make it clear that no rights were granted to initiate an entry after the beginning of the service. Then, in addition to that——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. How does that affect applications for 640 acres unless the claims are allowed? Of course that would not be called even an initiation, would it?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; it is an initiation. The gentleman will recollect that in the bill which we passed, giving the settler credit for his residence and cultivation during his service, we amended by providing that the privilege should apply to those who by settlement application or entry had initiated rights prior to the beginning of the service; as the bill would read if amended, it would provide that a soldier in the armed forces of the United States "who, prior to the beginning of his service, was a settler, an applicant, or an entryman," and so forth.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I do not dispute the gentleman's position. The only question is whether the gentleman is sure himself that he is safeguarding these initiated rights. That is the only thing.

Mr. MONDELL. I am absolutely as sure of it as I was of the other case that we discussed at some length here. I think it is highly important, now that the laws authorize the making of an application without going upon the land under the 640-acre law, that we shall make it clear that those applications can not be initiated by men after they enter the service. We went over all of that some time ago.

Mr. GANDY. I want to ascertain if my understanding is correct on this. Do you intend this to read, "the settler"——

Mr. MONDELL. We are not now discussing that word "settler." We are discussing the other feature of the amendment. The amendment is intended to cover two things. One is intended to make it very clear—and of course there should be no difference of opinion in regard to that matter; we will discuss the "settler" matter later—make it very clear that those affidavits allowed to be made before a commanding officer were relative to claims initiated and established one way or another prior to the beginning of the service.

Mr. GANDY. I was trying to clear my mind on this word "settler."

Mr. MONDELL. In addition to that, the bill as drawn authorizes affidavits by those who are applicants or entrymen. But it does not cover, as the bill did which granted credit for constructive residence, the right of the man who had settled on unsurveyed land or who had settled on land which at the time was withdrawn for resurvey. If we do not include him, we exclude a considerable class of people.

Mr. GANDY. That is the point I have been trying to get the gentleman to make clear.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, at first I thought the gentleman from Wyoming was in error, and that he was proposing to amend this bill in a way that I thought perhaps he would not want to amend it; but as I now understand it, he seeks to do two things: First, to make it clear that some sort of settlement was initiated prior to the man's going into the service.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. And then you want to add to it a provision that will cover a man who has settled on unsurveyed land, or on land withdrawn for resurvey, and who had no application pending in the land office.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. The amendment is a very proper one.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MONDELL: Page 2, line 5, after the word "State," strike out the period and insert the following: "which affidavit shall be as binding in law and with like penalties as if taken before the register of the United States Land Office."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wyoming.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. TIMBERLAKE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REQUEST TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROSE] be given unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a patriotic speech made by Theodore Roosevelt at Johnstown on Sunday, and the remarks made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROSE] in introducing him to the meeting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROSE] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing the matter referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. KEATING. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MADDEN. This was at a meeting of the labor men.

Mr. KEATING. I realize that, but objection has been made uniformly here to requests of this kind.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no; not for that.

Mr. KEATING. Just the other day my colleague from Colorado requested the privilege of extending in the RECORD a patriotic address by Gov. Adams, of my State, welcoming the Belgian Commission to this country. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] objected to that, as he had to others.

Mr. MADDEN. This is quite a different proposition.

Mr. KEATING. It is exactly a similar proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. No; a Member of the House——

Mr. KEATING. It is to insert an address by Theodore Roosevelt.

Mr. MADDEN. And also to insert the remarks made by a Member of the House in introducing him.

Mr. KEATING. I must object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado objects. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, ITASCA AND CASS COUNTIES, MINN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2435) authorizing the counties of Itasca and Cass, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River in said counties.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask if this bridge is anywhere near the other bridge that was the subject of a prior bill?

Mr. KNUTSON. They are about 20 miles apart.

Mr. WALSH. It is not the same bridge?

Mr. KNUTSON. No; they are two different bridges.

Mr. WALSH. Across the same stream?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Both are highway bridges?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the counties of Itasca and Cass, in the State of Minnesota, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation in township 144 north, on or near the range line between ranges 25 and 26 west, fifth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. KNUTSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NATURALIZATION.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to recur to No. 12 on the Unanimous Consent Calendar for the purpose of taking up H. R. 3132. I do not believe the gentleman from Illinois will object now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to return to Unanimous Consent Calendar No. 12.

Mr. KNUTSON. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DURANT, OKLA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6094) amending the act to increase the limit of the cost of certain public buildings, etc.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know something about this bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public buildings act, approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes" (Public, No. 432), and all other authorizations and appropriations passed in pursuance thereof for the construction of a post office at Durant, Okla., be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to authorize and appropriate the use of funds apportioned to Durant, Okla., for the construction and equipment of a United States post office and other Government offices at Durant, Okla.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this bill is so clearly not a war bill that I object.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I reserve the right to object until the gentleman from Oklahoma explains the bill.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The situation is just this: The public-building act of 1913 provided for a post-office building at Durant, Okla. At that time there were no other Government activities at the city of Durant. Since that time there have been established other Government agencies there which embrace probably 12 or 15 people. Under the authorization of 1913 this money can not be used to provide for these other offices. The money that was appropriated for the construction of a post office at Durant can be used only for the construction of a post office, but not for the construction, for instance, of an Indian agency or an agricultural agency.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman the necessity for passing this bill at this session of Congress?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The contract has already been made with the contractor for a one-story building in conformity with the present law. The Treasury Department holds that it can not provide for a building for these other Government activities there.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the work being impeded?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The work is being impeded and the contractor is being held up now, after he has the excavation made and is preparing for the foundation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. What is the attitude of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds toward this bill?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The bill has a unanimous favorable report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BURNETT. There is a unanimous favorable report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and this does not require another dollar of appropriation. They will build it within the appropriation, but if they do not get this action they will have to pay for the rent of outside buildings.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. While it is not a war measure it relieves a situation that impedes a public work.

Mr. BURNETT. The contract was let on the 15th of June, and they have been held up ever since.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would like to ask the gentleman if this increases the appropriation?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It does not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 5839. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River in Aitkin County, Logan Township, State of Minnesota; and

H. R. 4280. An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes.

SIX MONTHS' GRATUITY FOR BENEFICIARIES OF RETIRED OFFICERS OR ENLISTED MEN ON ACTIVE DUTY.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6306) to provide for the payment of six months' gratuity to the widow, children, or other previously designated dependent relative of retired officers or enlisted men on active duty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. On yesterday the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asked unanimous consent that the business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent be transferred from to-day until to-morrow, and that order was agreed to by unanimous consent of the House. The parliamentary inquiry I wish to submit is whether under that order the consideration of business to-day was limited to the consideration of bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has not examined the language, but the Chair heard the request, and the Chair is of the opinion that the spirit and purpose was to make all business that would be in order yesterday in order to-day.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not going to raise the question of order now, but I was here and listened to the request and paid particular attention to the form in which the request was made. The request as made by the gentleman from North Carolina was not that business in order to-day shall be in order to-morrow, but only as stated here and as repeated by the Speaker in submitting the request. "The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the business in order to-day on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent shall be transferred to to-morrow."

There is a further objection to considering bills reported yesterday. These bills were not on any calendar yesterday. They were merely reported by the committee, being then dropped into the basket. These bills would not have been considered yesterday even under suspension of the rules, because they were not on any calendar. This order, as submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina and submitted by the Chair and agreed to, limited it merely to bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the Speaker was called from the room, and he left with the present occupant of the chair a list of gentlemen to be recognized to move to suspend the rules. The present occupant of the chair infers from that that the Speaker was of the opinion that under the order made yesterday all the business would be in order to-day, and the question rests with the House whether it will consider it. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 6306. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, may we have the bill reported?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the paragraph of the act approved August 22, 1912, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Naval Service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of March 3, 1915, which provides for the payment of six months' gratuity to the widow or children or other previously designated dependent relative of a deceased officer or enlisted man on the active list of the Navy and Marine Corps, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the words "on the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps" a comma and the words "or of any retired officer or enlisted man serving on active duty during the continuance of the present war."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that the letter of the Secretary of the Navy be read to the committee, and I make that request for the reason that this bill was reported only yesterday, and no copies of the bill or the report could be obtained until this morning, and no Member of the House has probably had time to read it.

Mr. PADGETT. I am perfectly willing that the letter should be read. I want to say that the only effect of this bill is not to change existing law except to give the benefit of existing law to officers on the retired list who are called into active duty during the present war. In other words, if an officer on the active list is killed, his widow or beneficiary under existing law gets six months' pay. If a retired officer is called into active service and he is killed, his widow would not get anything. This simply provides that he shall have the same benefit that the officer on the active list would have under the same circumstances, and it also applies to enlisted men. It does not change the law at all, except as I have stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object until the letter from the Secretary of the Navy to the Speaker be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, May 2, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The naval appropriation act of August 22, 1912 (37 Stat., 328), reads in part as follows:

"That hereafter immediately upon official notification of the death, from wounds or disease not the result of his own misconduct, of any officer or enlisted man on the active list of the Navy and Marine Corps the Paymaster General of the Navy shall cause to be paid to the widow, and if no widow, to the children, and if there be no children, to any other dependent relative of such officer or enlisted man previously designated by him, an amount equal to six months' pay at the rate received by such officer or enlisted man at the date of his death, less $75 in the case of an officer and $35 in the case of an enlisted man, to defray expenses of interment, and the residue, if any, of the amount reserved shall be paid subsequently to the designated person."

The act of March 3, 1915 (38 Stat., 938), contains the following proviso:

"That no deduction shall hereafter be made from the six months' gratuity pay allowed under the naval act of August 22, 1912, on account of expenses for preparation and transportation of the remains."

It will be noted that the laws quoted do not cover the cases of retired officers and enlisted men when on active duty. When a retired officer or enlisted man is on active duty, he is subject to orders for the performance of like duties and to exposure to the same hazards as an officer or enlisted man on the active list. The department therefore believes that their beneficiaries should be accorded the same benefits as the beneficiaries of officers and enlisted men on the active list of the Navy and Marine Corps, and it is recommended that appropriate legislation be enacted to allow them these benefits.

There is inclosed herewith a proposed draft of a bill which, if enacted into law, would accomplish the above purpose, and same is commended to your favorable consideration and to that of the committee to which you may deem it proper to refer same with a view to its enactment. A similar provision is contained in the bill (S. 1786) "To amend certain sections of the act entitled 'An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes,' approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes," now pending in the Senate.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I wish to propound to the chairman of the committee a case and inquire whether it would be within the scope of this amended act. Suppose a retired naval officer in active service should collapse, drop dead, while in the performance of his duty; would the widow under the provisions of this act, or the widow of an active naval officer, be entitled to six months' pay?

Mr. PADGETT. I am not prepared to answer definitely whether either one of them would. I am under the impression that if an officer dies while in the line of active duty, regardless of the cause of the death, his widow gets six months' pay.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the six months' pay extend to the enlisted man?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and it does now.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why is it the purpose to extend the provision of the amendment so as to include enlisted men now on active duty during the continuance of the present war?

Mr. PADGETT. In introducing the bill I added the words "during the continuance of the present war." That was not in the draft as sent down by the Secretary. I do not think there ought to be an indefinite extension. They have the right to call retired officers and assign them to active duty, and those officers get full pay when so assigned. It might be interpreted that if they died after the war from any cause, that would give that six months' insurance or gratuity, so I limited it to the continuance of the war. It places them upon the same basis identically with the men upon the active list.

Mr. STAFFORD. I direct the gentleman's attention to the words "enlisted men." If under existing law the beneficiaries of an enlisted man are entitled to six months' pay, what is the necessity for inserting a provision here?

Mr. PADGETT. Enlisted men retire, and under the law passed three or four years ago all enlisted men who retire after that, receiving retired pay, are subject to be called into active duty, the same as officers. Before that time when an enlisted man retired he was not subject to be called back into active service. When called back into active service he has to perform the same duties as a man upon the active list.

Mr. STAFFORD. And when he is called back he does not reenlist?

Mr. PADGETT. No; he is called back as a retired man.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, this is on the Union Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House and in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

OFFICERS ON NAVAL COURTS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6363) to provide for the service of officers of auxiliary naval forces on naval courts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when actively serving under the Navy Department in time of war or during the existence of an emergency, pursuant to law, as a part of the naval forces of the United States, commissioned officers of the Naval Reserve Force, Marine Corps Reserve, National Naval Volunteers, Naval Militia, Coast Guard, Lighthouse Service, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service are hereby empowered to serve on naval courts-martial and deck courts under such regulations necessary for the proper administration of justice and in the interests of the services involved, as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That so much of the act approved August 29, 1916 (39 Stats., p. 556), as reads as follows is hereby repealed, viz:

"That when serving under the call of the President, officers of said Volunteers may serve on courts-martial for the trial of officers and men of the United States Naval or Naval Militia service, or of said Volunteers, but in the cases of courts-martial convened for the trial of officers or enlisted men of the United States Navy or Marine Corps the majority of the members shall be officers of the Regular Naval service, and officers and enlisted men of the said Volunteers may be tried by courts-martial, the members of which are members of the Regular Naval service or of said Volunteers, or any or all of the same."

Provided further, That so much of the Naval Militia act of February 16, 1914 (38 Stats., p. 283), as reads as follows is hereby repealed:

"That when in the service of the United States officers of the Naval Militia may serve on courts-martial for the trial of officers and men of the Regular or Naval Militia service, but in the cases of courts-martial convened for the trial of officers of the Regular service the majority of the members shall be officers of the Regular service; and officers and men of the Naval Militia may be tried by courts-martial the members of which are officers of the Regular or Naval Militia service, or both."

And provided further, That any act or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions hereof are hereby repealed.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 5, after the word "follows," strike out the words "is hereby repealed, viz."

Page 2, line 17, after the words "all of the same," insert the words "is hereby repealed."

Page 2, line 21, strike out, after the word "follows," the words "is hereby repealed."

Page 3, line 5, after the words "or both," insert the words "is hereby repealed."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand this bill, it seeks to provide for certain officers from various branches of the naval service for the trial by court-martial of certain offending seamen and subordinates.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And it is pressingly recommended by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and by the Judge Advocate General. I had a personal letter from him, saying that the exigency of the service called for it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman have any objection to inserting in the RECORD the letter of the Secretary of the Navy approving of this bill?

Mr. PADGETT. I shall be glad to have that done, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the letter of the Secretary be inserted in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, August 1, 1917.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I am transmitting herewith a proposed draft of a bill, which I desire to commend to your favorable consideration and to that of the committee to which you may deem it proper to refer same.

The purpose of this bill is to render it lawful for officers of the Naval Reserve Force and other kindred auxiliary forces, now serving with the Navy under the Navy Department in conformity with law, to act as members of courts-martial or as deck court officers. Cases arise frequently in which the crews of vessels engaged in patrol service are of the regular Navy, whereas the only officers attached to the vessel are from the Naval Reserve Force or National Naval Volunteers. These officers may not, under existing law, sit as members of a naval court for the trial of members of the regular service unless a majority of the members of the court belong to the latter service. Deck courts can not be held on such men until the vessel on which they are serving falls in with the senior officers present afloat. This involves delay and impedes the normal and proper administration of justice. It would appear that both reason and efficiency require that all officers placed in command afloat, of whatever service, whether regular or reserve, should be afforded equal opportunities for enforcing discipline in their respective commands; and officers of these auxiliary services should be authorized to sit on courts under the same conditions that prevail with regard to regular officers.

At present cases are frequently arising in which, by reason of the present restrictive legislation, the discipline of the various branches of the Naval Establishment is being seriously impaired. I always have in mind regulations that will suitably protect the interests of the several services involved, while at the same time giving the necessary latitude to permit of that prompt administration of justice which is such a strikingly necessary feature to naval efficiency. I therefore hope that this proposed legislation will be considered as urgently and immediately necessary for the welfare of the Navy, and that it may be practicable to have the measure enacted at an early date. It is equally important with those matters which this department recently brought to the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives by special letter.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy.

The committee amendments were severally read, severally considered, and severally agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EFFICIENCY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6362) to promote the efficiency of the United States Navy, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in construing the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of the selective-draft act, approved May 18, 1917, the word "Army" shall extend to and include "Navy"; the word "military" shall include "naval"; "Article of War" shall include "Articles for the Government of the Navy"; the words "camps, station, cantonment, camp, fort, post, officers' or enlisted men's club," in section 12, and "camp, station, fort, post, cantonment, training, or mobilization place," in section 13, shall include such places under naval jurisdiction as the President may prescribe, and the powers therein conferred upon the Secretary of War with regard to the military service are hereby conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy with regard to the naval service.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that sections 12 and 13 of the selective-draft act, referred to in the bill and which are contained in the report, may be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the sections referred to by him may be read. Is there objection?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I join in the request, and, pending that, I desire to make this statement: The only effect of this bill is to make clear that the provisions of the Army bill apply to the Navy. It does not change existing law at all. It merely puts the Navy and the Army upon identically the same status with respect to the selective-draft act.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman would hardly think that it did not change existing law. If a law now applying only to the Army is made to apply to the Navy, that would be some change of existing law?

Mr. PADGETT. I am speaking of changing existing law in substance. It just embraces the Navy as well as the Army. The Attorney General delivered an opinion in which he said that under the law the Navy was embraced in it, but there is some doubt about that and it is in order that the two services may be identically alike. This simply puts the Navy under the provisions of the law with reference to the Army.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand from a hurried reading of sections 12 and 13, they are the provisions that sought to throw the protecting arm of the Government over the enlisted men of the Army so that intoxicating liquors would not be sold to them, and also authorized the establishment of a nonvice zone in the neighborhood of Army posts.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, from the explanation that has been made by the gentleman from Tennessee, I withdraw the request to have sections 12 and 13 read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withdraws his request for the reading of the section. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. ROSE extend his remarks on the subject matter referred to a few moments ago. The gentleman who made the objection has withdrawn it, I understand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject indicated a few moments ago. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

AIR-STATION SITE, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2437.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

To provide for the acquisition of an air-station site for the United States Navy.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, including all easements, riparian and other rights appurtenant thereto, for use for naval purposes, the tract of land situate at Cape May, N. J., lying between Princeton and Kansas Avenues and the water front and Cape May Avenue, comprising, exclusive of Pennsylvania Avenue, which intersects the tract and is to remain a public thoroughfare, approximately 57.73 acres, or such enlarged area for which he may be able to contract within the appropriation, and there is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the acquisition of said property and of all easements, riparian and other rights appurtenant thereto, the sum of $150,000: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall authorize the payment of no part of this sum, except for perfecting the title and dredging Cold Spring Harbor and the entrance thereto, in order to make it more available for naval purposes: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, empowered, in his discretion, to acquire, if possible, additional acreage without increased cost, and to exact guaranties for the maintenance of the electric railway now running through the above-described land; and power is hereby conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy to condemn the land for naval, aviation, and kindred purposes on the New Jersey coast adjacent to Cold Spring Harbor; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed, in conducting his negotiations with the Cape May Real Estate Co., to maintain intact the obligation existing between the United States and the Cape May Real Estate Co., executed by the said company June 25, 1907; and that this contract shall not be regarded as a waiver of either the obligation of the company or the rights of the United States.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 2, line 16, after the word "condemn," insert the words "the said tract of."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I believe this bill should be amended. If the gentleman proposes to move to suspend the rules, it would probably save time——

Mr. PADGETT. Under unanimous consent, the bill will be open for consideration for amendment, and if there are any proper amendments I will be glad to have them.

Mr. MADDEN. Who is supposed to decide what is a proper amendment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state what the proposition is——

Mr. PADGETT. The House would decide as to the propriety of amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to have an opportunity to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question or two.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee to make a statement. I do not want to delay the passage of the bill, but I believe the bill ought to be amended, and I do not think it can be amended under unanimous consent.

Mr. PADGETT. Under unanimous consent it is open for amendment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If there is no objection, I will proceed now.

Mr. PADGETT. Just ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the request of the gentleman from Tennessee for unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill, the gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes upon the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. That will be with the understanding that the right to object is reserved?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, a tract of land 57.73 acres in extent in the vicinity of Cold Spring Harbor, Cape May, N. J., for the purposes of an aviation station. I believe the location is an entirely proper one and approve of its selection. The price that has been fixed in this bill for the purchase of this 57.73 acres is $150,000, which is nearly $3,000 an acre. It is proposed that this $150,000 shall be used to perfect title to and to dredge Cold Spring Harbor and entrance thereto in order to make it more available for naval purposes. Now, I have no objection to the use of the money provided if the Government gets full title for this land. Nor do I object to the use of this money for dredging purposes. But I understand the bill to mean that the owner of the property gets nothing except indirect benefits that would come from the dredging of Cold Spring Harbor, which would incidentally enhance the value of other property in the neighborhood.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania know that the Secretary of War has already expended $100,000 on this property before he had any authority from anybody to expend it?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The report sets that out.

Mr. PADGETT. That has been expended, as it has been in numbers and numbers of other places, under the general authority of the President in the expenditure of lump-sum appropriations for war purposes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Well, my recollection is that it was proposed in the beginning that the lump sum of $150,000 should be paid without reference to dredging this 57 acres——

Mr. PADGETT. One hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then it was much more than $3,000 an acre.

And now it is proposed to reserve to the Government the use of the money, the owners to get nothing except the incidental benefits to be derived from the dredging of Cold Spring Harbor.

Mr. PADGETT. The $150,000 is to be expended in the dredging and improvement of the harbor so that it can be used for submarines, torpedo-boat destroyers, and hydroplanes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; and I approve of that heartily. But I would like to ask why, having said in the first part of the bill that the Secretary of the Navy "is hereby authorized to acquire, by purchase or condemnation, including all easements," and all that sort of thing, it is proposed in a proviso that additional land is to be acquired without increased cost; that is to say, without increased cost, which apparently is fixed in this bill at less than $3,000 per acre?

Mr. PADGETT. It is without any additional cost. If you want to change the word "increased" and put it "additional"——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Would the gentleman consent to strike out the words "without increased cost" and insert the words "within the appropriation," as applied to any additional lands to be acquired?

Mr. PADGETT. I would have no objection if you can not make it more clear by other language.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield? What is the proposed amendment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I propose to amend line 13, page 2, by striking out the words "without increased cost" and inserting "within the appropriation."

I would also ask the gentleman why, general power to condemn having been conferred in the first page, this proviso is inserted on line 15, page 2, "and power is hereby conferred on the Secretary of the Navy to condemn"—I am leaving the committee amendment out now—"to condemn land for naval, aviation, and kindred purposes on the New Jersey coast adjacent to Cold Spring Harbor"? Does that mean a new condemnation, or is it the condemnation mentioned in the first paragraph?

Mr. PADGETT. It means here the condemnation provided in the first paragraph of the bill. You notice the committee reports the amendment limiting the condemnation to the said tract of land, inserting those words. There seemed to the committee to be a general power in the bill as it came from the Senate. The Naval Affairs Committee did not want to confer unlimited power, and for that reason we inserted the amendment limiting the powers of condemnation to the said tract of land authorized to be purchased.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] a question or two. I do not understand here why, when provision is made in the opening of the bill for the power to condemn easements, riparian and other rights appurtenant thereto, and the land itself, that it then should have been inserted in the bill in a subsequent paragraph "that power is hereby conferred on the Secretary of the Navy to condemn land for naval, aviation, and kindred purposes on the New Jersey coast adjacent thereto," and so forth.

Mr. PADGETT. That is not in a different paragraph. It is in the same paragraph and is just an express authority to exercise the power of condemnation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let us have it clear, if the gentleman pleases, because I have been informed that a gentleman who owns 400 acres of land in the vicinity of this tract has tendered it to the Government for this purpose, for a nominal consideration, which makes this a rather important transaction of the Government. Is it the purpose of this bill to confine the expenditure to $150,000, and is that $150,000 to cover all that is to be spent for the acquisition of land for this particular purpose?

Mr. PADGETT. That was stated over and over again by Admiral Benson, who appeared before the committee, and it is shown in the hearings, and also by Capt. Irvin, who has charge of aviation work. We asked them specifically if there was contemplated the purchase of any other land, or the acquirement of any other land, or the condemnation of any other land, and they said "No." And in order to make it specific, so that there would be good authority, and that authority would be limited to the acquisition of this land, it says here:

And power is hereby conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy to condemn—

And the committee inserted:

the said tract of.

Which is the only tract that is mentioned in the same paragraph.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman object to striking out the words?—

And power is hereby conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy to condemn the said tract of land for naval, aviation, and kindred purposes on the New Jersey coast adjacent to Cold Spring Harbor.

Mr. PADGETT. I think he ought to have explicit power.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. But agrees that whatever additional land is to be acquired it is to be acquired within the appropriation of $150,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the gentleman does not object to the inclusion of the words "within the appropriation" on line 13? I think it had better come in after "without increased cost." If the gentleman will accept that amendment——

Mr. PADGETT. I will join with the gentleman in asking for it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask a question about this. Is it the object of this bill to spend this $150,000, if necessary, for dredging Cold Spring Harbor and perfecting the title?

Mr. PADGETT. It is for the dredging? The perfecting of the title is an incidental part of it there. If there is anything to be perfected in making the title good, the Government would see that it was done and paid out of this money. But the purpose of it is to have this $150,000 expended for the benefit of the Government in dredging this harbor, which is a harbor of refuge, and on which the Government has heretofore expended large sums of money, and to make it available for the use of submarines, torpedo-boat destroyers, and hydroplanes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, am I right in supposing that under the language of this bill no part of this $150,000 can be expended for the acquisition of new land?

Mr. PADGETT. You are right, sir.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Now, the right of condemnation presupposes payment of compensation, does it not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. But under this bill the condemnation will be paid, and the parties have given an option or made a contract in which they state that this money will be expended for that purpose, and unless it is expended in that way it can not be expended at all.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The question in my mind is, If the power of condemnation is given some one, will you not necessarily have to pay something for the land condemned? In other words, the starting of the condemnation proceedings presupposes that they are going to pay for it.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and you have to under the Constitution. But the parties owning the land have made a contract with the Government, stipulating that among themselves——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And there is a stipulation that you are cognizant of that will cover that proposition?

Mr. PADGETT. Exactly so.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state for the benefit of the two gentlemen who have spoken that there is no doubt about the title to this land at all. This land was sold at receiver's sale, and when the title came from the receiver of the State of New Jersey the title was perfectly good.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, as I take it from the chairman of the committee, this is really a harbor-improvement proposition, so far as the $150,000 appropriation is concerned?

Mr. PADGETT. This $150,000, which is the purchase price of the land under stipulation, is to be expended for the benefit of the Government in the improvement of this harbor. The Government is getting the benefit of that $150,000 in the improvement of one of the important harbors upon the coast.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Cold Spring Harbor project is not new to this House.

Mr. PADGETT. No. We have spent a good deal of money up there under the administration of Mr. Burton, when he was chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. STAFFORD. When Mr. Burton was chairman the item was first brought up in this House, and it involved a serious controversy. At that time a great number questioned whether the appropriation was anything more than a land-project scheme, rather than a harbor scheme. I recall distinctly the acrimonious debate that was participated in when that appropriation was under consideration.

I wish to inquire what agreement has been entered into between the Secretary of the Navy and this real estate company toward the improvement or development of this site?

Mr. PADGETT. There is no agreement, except the stipulation, as I understand it, that this $150,000 is to be used in the dredging of the harbor. The harbor has 30 feet and above, except that there are certain spots that are shallow, and this is to dredge out these shallow spots, so that the whole harbor will have the 30 feet or more—have a minimum of 30 feet.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has there been any estimate as to the total appropriations that will be needed for dredging these spots so as to have the available depth for naval purposes?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. You see, if the Government purchases this property the money is the property of the vendors of the property, and they are allowing their money to be expended for the benefit of the Government, and this act provides that all of it shall be expended in dredging and improvement of the harbor, so that the Government gets the whole $150,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, as I understood the gentleman, there has been no estimate made as to the total appropriation that will be needed to put this land in condition for naval purposes?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. There was one made, about $203,000, for the improvement of the land for naval purposes. This $150,000 is for the dredging of the harbor, and that would be the other man's money; but the Government has already expended something like $100,000 in putting up war improvements on the land which they have under lease, with the right to take them off. They are going to spend about $203,000, as is estimated. Now, then, the question is between the purchasing of the land and owning it, where we say we must have it, and it is intended not only for war purposes but, after the war, for peace purposes, and owning the land and saving our $203,000, or, when the war is over, taking off our $203,000 worth of improvements that would be thrown into the heap.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand the War Department has expended the $203,000, or the Navy Department?

Mr. PADGETT. The Navy Department has expended about $100,000, and is going to spend about $100,000 more.

Mr. STAFFORD. What has that money that has been expended up to this time been used for?

Mr. PADGETT. For hangars and barracks and other improvements; provisions for taking care of the men and handling the airplanes and minor repairs of airplanes in use at the station; things along that line.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, the consideration of this bill brings up the question as to the policy of the Navy Department in renting land or owning land for these respective aviation sites. I wish to inquire of the gentleman what is its policy, if he is not disclosing any secrets that should not be given to the public?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. Some of the places the Government has leased and others of them it is trying to purchase. This is one of them that is regarded as of such prime importance that the Army board and the Navy board, acting together, inspected the circumstances of the case and recommended very strongly the acquisition of a site for the protection of Delaware Bay at the mouth of Delaware River, and this is the site that has been selected under that recommendation of the Army board and the Navy board acting jointly. Admiral Benson stated before the committee, as you will find in the printed hearings, that not only for the purposes of the war, but after the war, it is one of the sites that the Government must have on account of its geographical position and its proximity to insure the protection of Delaware Bay and the Delaware River. It is about 10 or 12 miles, I think, from that location, and it is needed for a submarine harbor, a harbor for torpedo-boat destroyers, and a safe place for our airplanes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice in the report submitted with this bill that there is no letter of the Secretary of the Navy approving it, although the report refers to its approval at a hearing by Admiral Benson, Chief of Naval Operations, and Admiral Taylor, Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; the Secretary does approve it very strongly and recommends it very urgently. I do not remember whether I have his letter or not. However, I saw the Secretary personally. I invited him to come before the committee when we had the hearing, but he was out of the city and could not come, and sent Admiral Benson, Admiral Taylor, and Capt. Irvin, who appeared before the committee with reference to the matter and submitted all of the facts.

Mr. FESS. I would like to ask the chairman how near the famous million-dollar hotel there at Cape May this land is located?

Mr. BROWNING. Adjoining it.

Mr. FESS. It does not include that property?

Mr. BROWNING. No; it adjoins it, on what we used to call Sewells Point.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should like to have a positive statement, if gentlemen can give it, as to the amount of money that will be required to place this harbor in condition for naval purposes.

Mr. PADGETT. There is an itemized statement in the report, and I think it is $203,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, that has nothing to do with the harbor at all. That is merely for the improvement of the land.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know a thing in the world about the improvement of the harbor. I do not know whether the Committee on Rivers and Harbors are going to report a dollar. However, this $150,000 will put it in condition for better use than it is now. It can be used now.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think that the House is entitled to some positive information as to the total cost that will be required to put this harbor in condition before we launch permanently on this scheme?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know anything about the work of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. STAFFORD. You are providing in this bill for the improvement of the harbor.

Mr. PADGETT. No; I am not. I am simply asking that these men shall be permitted to use their private money.

Mr. STAFFORD. To a certain amount, and burden the Government to the extent of $150,000, and if we launch upon this scheme it may involve us in an appropriation of $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 for aught we know.

Mr. BROWNING. I should like to say for the benefit of the gentleman that the harbor is in good condition now. There are some shoals in the harbor. At the present time there are some submarines in the harbor. This $150,000 is merely for the purpose of dredging the harbor so that they will have a little deeper water where these shoals are.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much money will be required, I will ask of the gentleman who formerly represented this district and who may represent it now?

Mr. BROWNING. No; it is not in my district.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BACHARACH] represents it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The late Mr. Loudenslager represented it at the time this appropriation was originally procured for the improvement of Cold Spring Harbor.

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should like to know as to the amount of appropriation that will be required to put this harbor in condition for naval purposes.

Mr. BROWNING. The harbor is already in condition, excepting a few shoals, and this $150,000 will dredge it out and leave it in absolutely good condition. I do not know what will come in there afterwards. The submarines are already in the harbor.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; I do not question that they are there, but I should like to have some definite statement from some Member as to how much money will be required to put this harbor in condition when we once undertake to use this property as a permanent naval base.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know that anyone knows.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The report indicates that $203,000 has already been spent.

Mr. STAFFORD. It does not say that amount has already been spent. That is for the future.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then that answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I am seeking for information which the gentleman from Pennsylvania ought to be able to give to the House, because he is a river and harbor expert, particularly on the Delaware River and Delaware Bay, as to how much will be required for the improvement of this naval base at Cold Spring Harbor.

Mr. PADGETT. There is no way in the world of answering the gentleman's question, because there is no project now submitted, and we do not know whether in the future they would want 30 feet of water, or 35 feet, or 40 feet, for the accommodation of ships of a greater or less depth.

Mr. MONDELL. What depth of water do they now have?

Mr. PADGETT. They have 30 feet and above in all of the harbor except a few points that jut up, and this $150,000 is to be used in dredging out those jutting points.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I see here the gentleman who represents this district [Mr. BACHARACH], who has been listening very attentively, and perhaps he may be able to furnish the information which I have been seeking for the last few minutes.

Mr. BACHARACH. What is it the gentleman from Wisconson wishes to know about?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It is all in the report. Apparently the gentleman from Wisconsin has not read it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman certainly has not read the report. Otherwise he would not make that flippant remark, which I will not take from the gentleman.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; the gentleman will take it from me, because I love him so much.

Mr. STAFFORD. I love the gentleman personally.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the regular order.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I can not get the information I desire, I will object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT]?

Mr. STAFFORD. I desire to get certain information.

Mr. ROBBINS. I will object unless I can get some information.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] demands the regular order, and the regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. ROBBINS. Then I object, if I can not get the information.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 2437.

Mr. ROBBINS. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will object unless I can get the information I desire.

Mr. PADGETT. There is no way of getting the information the gentleman desires.

Mr. STAFFORD. I want to inquire about another matter.

Mr. PADGETT. Go ahead, then.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman will withdraw the demand for the regular order for a moment, I am sure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is for the gentleman to say. The regular order is demanded. The regular order is——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I will temporarily withdraw my demand for the regular order, but I shall renew it if we are going into river and harbor and other matters which have no relation to the bill.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, I will state that the first time this bill was before the committee an appropriation of $175,000 was considered. It was then thought necessary to dredge the harbor and expend some additional money on a bulkhead. Since then the department has agreed that $150,000 would make it of sufficient depth to allow submarines and torpedo-boat destroyers to get into the harbor. The amount of money to be spent would depend entirely on the depth that they propose to make it. I will say for the benefit of the Members of the House that there is plenty of water inside the harbor; the difficulty is, as the chairman of the committee has stated, that there are a few bar sections that require some dredging. In the last river and harbor bill was an appropriation to make the channel 20 feet in depth, and I think about $15,000 was thought necessary for the inlet of Cold Spring Harbor itself, the whole appropriation being $45,000 for that and Absecom Inlet, of which $15,000 was estimated as being sufficient for the Cold Spring Inlet.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, there is another inquiry I wish to make. The phraseology found on page 2, lines 15 to 18:

> And power is hereby conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy to condemn land for naval aviation and kindred purposes on the New Jersey coast adjacent to Cold Spring Harbor.

There is no limit whatever as to the extent of the land which the Secretary of the Navy may condemn for this purpose.

Mr. PADGETT. The committee reported an amendment which the gentleman will see in italics, on page 2, line 16, where the words "the said tract of" is inserted. So the power of condemnation is limited absolutely to the condemnation of the tract of land mentioned in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. And that is 57 acres.

Mr. PADGETT. Fifty-seven acres and such as may be necessary in addition to it.

Two years ago we had a bill authorizing the acquiring of 88 acres of land, and when it was measured out it was found to consist of 102 acres. We had to come in and get an amendment to the bill authorizing the acquiring of that tract of land because it embraced more than 88 acres. This is simply to allow them to acquire the 57 acres and seventy-three one-hundredths, and such additional land without additional cost. The gentleman from Pennsylvania wanted to know if there was any objection to adding the words "within the appropriation," and I said to him that I would favor it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. "Within the appropriation herein authorized."

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I direct the gentleman's attention that the language which he seeks to amend does not limit the authority of the Secretary as to the extent of the land that he may condemn. I think there ought to be some limit as to extent of the power of the Secretary of the Navy as to the amount of land he may condemn.

Mr. PADGETT. Does it not make it as plain as the gentleman wants when it says it is limited to the said tract of land?

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is the amendment that the gentleman states? I have a copy of the bill as reported.

Mr. PADGETT. The committee has reported an amendment which will be found on page 2, line 16.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Wisconsin has the wrong print of the bill.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the contract referred to in lines 23 and 24 as executed by the Cape May Real Estate Co., June 25, 1907?

Mr. PADGETT. That is a contract with reference to a line of railway that runs through there and is to be maintained.

Mr. ROBBINS. The company went into a receivership, as I understood.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I want to further call the attention to the contradiction in the legislation. The bill authorizes the Secretary to condemn a certain tract of land, assumed to be 57 acres and a little over, near Cold Spring Harbor, although that is not very clear. The bill also appropriates $150,000 for the acquisition of said property. It also provides that no part of this $150,000 shall be spent except to perfect the title, which the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] says is perfect, and for the dredging of Cold Spring Harbor. So that if this very important provision of the bill—it occurs twice—is utilized, if the Government should condemn this property referred to in the bill, no part of the appropriation could be used.

Mr. PADGETT. That is correct under condemnation.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it true that the double provision for condemnation is to be used as a club over the Cape May Real Estate Co. to compel them to stand by an agreement which has been entered into?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know as I should put it in that way but I can not say that the gentleman is very far afield.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was again reported.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 13, after the word "cost," insert the words "and within the appropriation herein authorized."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask if there is any disposition to make this more than an aviation station.

Mr. PADGETT. And in connection with it a harbor for submarines, torpedo boats, and small craft that may be operating up there. It is largely a place of refuge for them.

Mr. FOSS. All the land that the department contemplates purchasing is this 57 acres?

Mr. PADGETT. Fifty-seven acres, and it might measure a little more.

Mr. FOSS. There is no disposition to purchase a larger tract?

Mr. PADGETT. No; Admiral Benson and Capt. Irwin stated time and again in the hearings that this was all that they expected or contemplated purchasing.

Mr. FOSS. I notice in the report that there has been an Army and Navy board which made an inspection along the coast for other aviation fields. Is that true?

Mr. PADGETT. They took in the whole coast, and this one they recommended especially. It is the one that the department has asked for immediately.

Mr. FOSS. And they have in contemplation aviation stations at other points.

Mr. PADGETT. I should say so, yes; but they have not been submitted, and I could not give the gentleman any detailed information.

Mr. FOSS. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I believe this an excellent site for an aviation station; but I do not want to see navy yards or naval stations, in a general sense, built up on the Atlantic coast any more than we have at present.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman is no more averse to that than I.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] to what contract he refers when he calls attention to the necessity of the Secretary of the Navy maintaining the contract existing between the Government and the real estate company at Cape May, made in 1907. Is that the contract under which the Government of the United States appropriated $1,000,000 for the improvement of Cape May, to create a lot of city lots, on which a great many people who like to attend summer resorts built their homes and furnished facilities for the railroad company and its terminals, and all that?

Mr. PADGETT. I am not familiar with the details of the legislation or with the contract in 1907. That was under the administration of Mr. Burton, when he was chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and was entered into by the Government under authority granted. What the details are I do not know.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me that in presenting a bill some one on the floor of the House ought to know what the contract is that we are legislating about.

Mr. PADGETT. This simply provides that the contract shall remain intact, and not be abrogated or changed, so that it was unnecessary to go into the details of it.

Mr. MADDEN. Who knows what it is?

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman can get the information from the department.

Mr. MADDEN. It seems to me, now, there are Members on the floor of the House who were not here in 1907, who are entitled to know what the contract is, and when the gentleman comes here with a bill proposing to ratify a contract made in 1907——

Mr. PADGETT. We do not ratify it. This simply says that it will not be changed, and leaves it in statu quo.

Mr. MADDEN. Even so, it ought to be explained to the Members of the House who do not understand about it.

Mr. PADGETT. I confess to the gentleman frankly that I can not give him the details of it, because I did not think it important to go into it, when it was to be left unchanged and in statu quo.

Mr. MADDEN. We are asked to legislate about something that the chairman himself does not know anything about.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think we are asked to legislate about that. You are asked to legislate about this land. The other is an incidental statement that a contract existing between the Government and that company is not in any way altered, modified, or affected.

Mr. MADDEN. Then there ought not to be anything in the bill about it, if it does not make any difference.

Mr. PADGETT. I think I can safely say that we leave it as it is.

Mr. MADDEN. There is one thing I do know about, and that is that we appropriated $1,000,000 to create a lot of city lots down there that were advertised at the time the money was appropriated and afterwards expended, and whether the United States Government is going to get any advantage——

Mr. PADGETT. And the Cape May company at the same time under that contract agreed to expend a certain amount of money in addition to and in cooperation with the Government expenditure.

Mr. MADDEN. The question is, Have they expended that money?

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. BROWNING. They have expended that amount of money and a great deal more. They have the largest dredge that was ever built in the United States.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Is not this the fact, that while not legislating about that contract, there is simply a reservation that it shall remain in statu quo?

Mr. MADDEN. Why should we have anything in the bill about something that is already settled? Nobody seems to know why it is in the bill or what it pertains to, and it seems to me it is asking a good deal of the Congress to vote on a question about which even the chairman of the committee who presents the bill says he does not know anything.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN]. I want to know whether we confine the aviation activities in the Navy wholly to hydroaeroplanes?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; the Navy uses only hydroaeroplanes; it does not use land planes.

Mr. FESS. Will this be one of the training stations?

Mr. PADGETT. I would not say it would be a regular training station. It will be one of the smaller stations, largely used as an operating base.

Mr. FESS. A hydroaeroplane station would not take any great amount of territory.

Mr. PADGETT. No. They have their hangars alongside the water, where they have their inclined planes running into the water, and off them they get into the water.

Mr. FESS. My first impression was that the 57 acres would not be a very large station, since the average aviation field contains 2,500 acres.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; that is for Army planes—land planes.

Mr. FESS. For hydroplanes, of course.

Mr. PADGETT. For hydroplanes. The hydroplane has its field out on the water.

Mr. FESS. Well, I have been on this coast, and I think it is one of the most beautiful locations for a station of this sort on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. PADGETT. It is one of the most desirable also. Mr. Speaker, I will ask for a vote.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PADGETT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STATUS OF UNITED STATES CITIZENS IN FOREIGN MILITARY SERVICES.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2623.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2623) defining the status of citizens of the United States who have entered the military or naval services of certain countries during the existing war in Europe.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person who while a citizen of the United States and during the existing war in Europe entered the military or naval service of any country at war with a country with which the United States is now at war shall be deemed to have lost his citizenship by reason of any oath or obligation taken by him for the purpose of entering such service.

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That any person formerly an American citizen who may be deemed to have expatriated himself under the provisions of the first paragraph of section 2 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad," by taking, since August 1, 1914, an oath of allegiance to any foreign State engaged in war with a country with which the United States is at war and who took such oath in order to be enabled to enlist in the armed forces of such foreign State and who actually enlisted in such armed forces and who has been or may be duly and honorably discharged from such armed forces, may upon complying with the provisions of this act reassume and acquire the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States: Provided, however, That no obligation in the way of pensions or other grants because of service in the army or navy of any other country, or disabilities incident thereto, shall accrue to the United States.

Any such person who desires so to reacquire and reassume the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States shall, if abroad, present himself before a consular officer of the United States, or, if in the United States, before any court authorized by law to confer American citizenship upon aliens, shall offer satisfactory evidence that he comes within the terms of this act and shall take an oath declaring his allegiance to the United States and agreeing to support the Constitution thereof and abjuring and disclaiming allegiance to such foreign State and to every foreign prince, potentate, State, or sovereignty. The consular officer or court officer having jurisdiction shall thereupon issue in triplicate a certificate of American citizenship, giving one copy to the applicant, retaining one copy for his files, and forwarding one copy to the Secretary of Labor. Thereafter such person shall in all respects be deemed to have acquired the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States. The Secretary of State and the Secretary of Labor shall jointly issue regulations for the proper administration of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I do not intend to object, because I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose of the bill—I take it that the purpose of the bill is to grant repatriation to the American boys who enlisted in the allied armies, large numbers of whom went across the border and enlisted in the American Legion and other companies of Canadian battalions.

Mr. GORDON. That is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish just simply to make the inquiry as to the purpose of the last paragraph where this repatriation is authorized of those domiciled abroad.

Mr. GORDON. The last paragraph of the amendment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; I assume the House will adopt the amendment.

Mr. GORDON. Well, the purpose, of course, is to accomplish the purpose sought. The real truth is the bill as passed by the Senate is wholly ineffective to accomplish the purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. I quite agree with the gentleman, and I am directing this inquiry as to why it is desirable to have this power vested in American officials living outside the country. I thought these American boys would apply for repatriation when they return to this country.

Mr. GORDON. They might want to join our forces over there, and they can not do it until they are made American citizens.

Mr. STAFFORD. I had that surmise and thought that might be the purpose. Also that it might be for their readmission to this country to avoid the requirements of the immigration law.

Mr. GORDON. Unquestionably that is also one of the purposes.

Mr. FESS. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Has my colleague any information as to the number of American citizens who have taken service abroad?

Mr. GORDON. I will say to the gentleman there is no definite information upon that subject. I think the estimate is 15,000 or 20,000, although I have heard it estimated higher; but there is no reliable data as to the exact number.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have seen it stated before we entered the war that there were at least 50,000 Americans who had entered the foreign service.

Mr. GORDON. That statement has been made, but Capt. Benson, of the British service, was before our committee at the hearing on the draft law, and he was interrogated upon that subject. He was asked if there were as many as 50,000, and he said there were not; that his best judgment was that there were between 15,000 and 20,000 American citizens in the British armies.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And it is discretionary with the former American citizen as to whether he avails himself of this act?

Mr. GORDON. Oh, absolutely. You can not make a man a citizen without his consent, as the Senate bill seeks to do.

Mr. CANNON. Of course, if he does avail himself of this act, he would forfeit the pension that is granted by Canada, for instance, or any other country?

Mr. GORDON. That would depend upon the terms of the act granting the pension. I am not so sure. If they confine their pensions wholly to British subjects he would forfeit it, but our laws do not confine pensions to citizens of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. Anyway, it is up to him?

Mr. GORDON. Exactly; he has the option.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GORDON. I will.

Mr. IGOE. Does this take care of only those who have enlisted in these foreign armies prior to the passage of this act, or, also, does it take care of those who may subsequently join these foreign armies for some reason or other?

Mr. GORDON. Well, it is intended to take care of those who have already joined, because they are the only ones interested.

Mr. IGOE. There are a great many young men who joined, for instance, the flying corps of Canada, they having been rejected here for some reason. I was just wondering if the bill was that broad.

Mr. GORDON. Undoubtedly it would include those.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. There is another provision of the immigration laws to the effect that a man can not lose his American citizenship while the United States is at war. So that, I think, would probably dispose of what was in the gentleman's mind.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to ask the gentleman having charge of the bill whether or not this matter was submitted to the Department of Labor?

Mr. GORDON. It was submitted to the Department of State, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. It is purely a matter in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Mr. GORDON. Well, no; not quite. It is perhaps a matter that would come within the purview of that committee ordinarily, but this is a question purely for the State Department—a question of citizenship. Now, the Senate bill simply provides that although a man may have forsworn his allegiance to the United States and become a foreign subject, he shall not be deemed to have done so. We concluded, and the State Department so advised, that if a man had renounced his allegiance he had renounced it, and the only way he could become a citizen again would be by complying with the provisions of the statutes for naturalization of foreigners; hence the reason for this bill.

Mr. RAKER. You have no report from the Secretary of State that you have printed?

Mr. GORDON. We have a report——

Mr. RAKER. Have you a letter from the Secretary of State to this committee that has been printed or can be presented to the House?

Mr. GORDON. No; I do not know that we have.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that all the departments, if I recollect correctly, reported adversely on this legislation. The Committee on Immigration had this matter under investigation for some three or four weeks, and had hearings, and had a report from the Department of Labor, and they seemed to be all adverse, as my recollection is. It is purely a matter within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, because it relates to the naturalization of the man who has expatriated himself by his own act. Now, the gentleman does not intend to tell the House that this man can not become a citizen by his own act under the law as it now stands, does he?

Mr. GORDON. No. I do not claim that. What I intended to say was that under the Senate bill it undertook to make him a citizen without his own act. What we seek to do by this legislation is to facilitate his repatriation.

Mr. RAKER. Let me ask the gentleman, does he know of any cases that are concrete—that have applied for repatriation or naturalization?

Mr. GORDON. Do I know of any?

Mr. RAKER. Any cases; yes.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, a great many.

Mr. RAKER. From what department did they come? Now, I want to tell the gentleman that this matter has had a good deal of investigation by the committee——

Mr. GORDON. We have investigated it, too. We are entirely satisfied with this bill. This is a unanimous report; and I think we know as much about it as your committee does.

Mr. RAKER. That does not spell anything here; it does not bring any results. Let us get down to the facts.

Mr. GORDON. All right.

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman know to what nationalities this will apply?

Mr. GORDON. It will apply to all nationalities who come within the terms of the bill.

Mr. RAKER. What ones are they?

Mr. GORDON. British subjects is one. There may be others. There is no reason why a man who joins the French forces or the Italian forces, for example, should be discriminated against. This applies to all of them.

Mr. RAKER. Let me ask the gentleman this question——

Mr. GORDON. Of course, he must come within the terms of the act. He must have been a citizen of the United States, and must have been required to renounce his allegiance in order to get into the military forces of the allied nation.

Mr. RAKER. Just what would a man do if he were an American citizen who joined the English Army?

Mr. GORDON. He would have to comply with our naturalization law, like any other foreigner.

Mr. RAKER. You do not quite understand me. He joined the English Army; what did he do?

Mr. GORDON. He had to take an oath of allegiance to the King and renounce his American citizenship.

Mr. RAKER. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Did this man take the oath of allegiance to the English King when we were neutral and at peace with all the world?

Mr. GORDON. I suppose he did. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. He could not get in the army without.

Mr. GORDON. An American citizen has a perfect right to abandon his own country and become a citizen of another country.

Mr. RAKER. You think it right and proper, when the President of the United States sent out a message that we should be neutral; that this man, notwithstanding that, renounced his allegiance to his own country, forswore his right to be a citizen, and went to a foreign country to fight?

Mr. GORDON. Certainly. That was right. He renounced his allegiance so that he would not violate our neutrality. Just as soon as he became a British subject he was no longer under any obligations to the United States. [Applause.] Certainly that is a very proper thing to do. If I were going to fight in a foreign army, that is exactly what I would do.

Mr. RAKER. What you would do would not affect the bill.

Mr. GORDON. You asked me my opinion about it, and I was trying to give it to you.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman is doing it nicely and in a very clear way. I appreciate it very much. [Laughter.] Was there any law that this man would violate by thus leaving——

Mr. GORDON. Oh, no. There was a statute passed in 1907 by Congress defining the duties of an American citizen, and this statute is referred to in the committee's report on this bill in the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. RAKER. What was the offense?

Mr. GORDON. It was an act defining the duties of citizens of the United States. There is no law that prevents a man from abandoning his country and becoming a citizen of another country.

Mr. RAKER. If that is the case, when we were neutral, when it became absolutely necessary to remain neutral to keep this country out of trouble with other countries that were belligerent, will you state now to the House the necessity why this act should be passed immediately to repatriate these men?

Mr. GORDON. It is to be passed simply for the purpose of affording them an opportunity expeditiously to become American citizens. Many of them want to join our Army in this war, and they can not do it in Europe. They want to fight for the United States. The United States was not at war when they expatriated themselves, and the United States had no special reason then for their services.

Mr. RAKER. Have they withdrawn from the English Army?

Mr. GORDON. No. They will obtain their discharge from the English Army. They will have to do that, because if they take the oath of allegiance to the United States their English allegiance will be abandoned. The English are allies of the United States in this war.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, no; they are fighting——

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman must suppose that they are.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, we are all interested in this colloquy. Let the gentleman from California speak up.

Mr. WALSH. The regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. MADDEN. You can not object when the regular order is demanded.

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I can.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I move you that the rules be suspended and that the bill S. 2623 be passed with an amendment as reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves to suspend the rules and pass Senate bill 2623 as amended. Is a second demanded?

Mr. STAFFORD and Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania demanded a second.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the question is, the gentleman from Ohio is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] to 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. No one seemed to want to debate, and the Chair is not cultivating oratory here. [Laughter and applause.] If anybody wants time, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] has 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] has 20 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I think the Chair is not cultivating any unfairness to Members of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 20 minutes if he wants it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The practice is for the Chair to state——

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows what the practice is as well as the gentleman does. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. GORDON. If I do not use the floor now, can I take any of that 20 minutes later?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can reserve his time.

Mr. GORDON. Then I reserve it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I like to see bills passed in legislative form, and it seems to me proper, when a suggestion is made to amend a bill time should be allowed to consider it. On page 2, lines 13 to 16, there is a proviso that might be subject to change if the House should see fit to accept it. It might be accepted under a unanimous-consent arrangement; but as it was not accepted, I bring it up in this way, so that the House may have the advantage of the suggestion for what it is worth.

The proviso referred to is:

Provided, however, That no obligation in the way of pensions or other grants because of the service in the army or navy of any other country, or disabilities incident thereto, shall accrue to the United States.

That is not good legislative language.

Mr. GORDON. What is your objection to it?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. My objection to it is that the phrase "in the way of pensions" is not very elegant language in a bill of this kind.

Mr. GORDON. Is that your only objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the word "accrue" means accretion. It means "an addition to." I question whether "accrue" is the proper word there.

Mr. GORDON. What would you use? Would you use the word "result"?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would suggest the words "devolve upon."

Mr. GORDON. I do not know but that that would be all right.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. "Or incurred by the United States." That is not sarcasm, I will say to the gentleman, but it is one of the things that arise in the course of a discussion of this kind to which the attention of the House should be called.

Mr. GORDON. Do I understand you to say that this bill is not open to amendment?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. GORDON. Certainly it is.

The SPEAKER. You can not amend a bill under suspension of the rules.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I could not get the right to amend without unanimous consent; but I will make a request now, Mr. Speaker, that the words "by way of" be stricken out and the words "with respect to" inserted, and that the words "to accrue" shall be stricken out and that the words "shall not be imposed upon the United States" be inserted in lieu thereof.

Mr. GORDON. I think they all mean the same thing. The new language may be a little more elegant, but I do not think your suggestion would change it. I do not believe it is material.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania can ask unanimous consent to modify it. That is the only way it can be done.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that those substitutions may be made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please repeat them, so that the Clerk can get them.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I suggest that the words "in the way of" be stricken out in line 14, page 2, and that the words "in respect to" be inserted; that the words "accrue to," in line 16, page 2, be stricken out and that in lieu thereof there be inserted the words "incurred by."

Mr. GORDON. "Devolves upon" would be better. Of course, the United States does not incur an obligation for a pension.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the modification of this bill in the respect which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 2, line 14, strike out the words "in the way of" and insert in lieu thereof the words "with respect to"; and in line 16, page 2, strike out the words "accrue to" and insert in lieu thereof the words "devolve upon."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GORDON. I have no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, as I gather, the gentleman proposes a change of meaning of the bill with respect to pensions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. You do not want to assume any pension obligations of any foreign country, as I understand it. The word "accrue" might mean that you wanted to add to——

Mr. GORDON. It might, but it does not.

Mr. WINGO. In line 14, page 3, you propose to strike out the words "in the way of" and to substitute "with respect to."

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The way the language reads now it is—

No obligation in the way of pensions.

You propose to make it read—

No obligation with respect to pensions.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. There is a clear distinction in law between the two expressions. The words used by the committee express exactly what they propose to do. Your expression is a restrictive term. The committee expression is much broader. For that reason I object.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Very well, Mr. Speaker; if the committee does not care to accept the amendment, the objection settles it.

Mr. GORDON. We can not accept it as long as there is objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. I objected, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas objects.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 15 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. This is a very important bill, which ought to be discussed if anyone wants to discuss it, and I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of this bill, and I want to give the House, and particularly the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], who was speaking a moment ago, a concrete instance that will show the importance of passing this bill. I refer to the case of Lieut. Lester Elliott, a young man, just 27 years old, who formerly lived in my own district in Illinois, and who before the war went down to Australia on a matter of business and was living at Sydney, Australia, when the war broke out in Europe. He wanted to get into the war on the side of the allies, and so he enlisted in the Australian Army and was sent to the Dardanelles and was in the first landing forces at the Dardanelles when every commissioned officer in the landing party was killed. He landed, although twice wounded. He served during the campaign in the Dardanelles and was afterwards sent back to Australia on account of disability. He then returned to France and served 10 months in the trenches, fighting with the Australian forces. Of course, he had to take the oath of allegiance in Australia, and by so doing he, in a sense, expatriated himself as a citizen of this country. He served 10 months in the trenches in France, received a lieutenant's commission, and became an expert in bombing. He was a leader of a bombing squad at the battle of the Somme, made a good record, and was finally invalided back to Australia on account of what they call "trench" feet. His feet were swollen from standing in the mud and dampness so long. He became disabled in that way and had to go back, but he subsequently recovered and spent some time in Australia training recruits and getting them ready for service in the war. I mention these facts to show that he is a very competent man; he proved his ability to fight and to train others to fight, and became an expert in scout work, in bombing in the trenches, and in other present-day methods of trench warfare.

When the United States entered the war Lieut. Elliott naturally wanted to come home and join the United States forces; so at his own request he was discharged from the Australian Army and came all the way from Sydney, Australia, to Washington at his own expense for the purpose of going into the American Army as a commissioned officer and helping to drill or train our new army, and with the hope of going back to France and fighting there again with the soldiers of his own country. After he came here it was held that he could not get a commission in the National Guard because of his having taken the oath of allegiance to Australia. It was also held that he could not get a commission in the Regular Army for the same reason. The Judge Advocate General gave an opinion the he was disqualified from holding a commission either in the National Guard or in the Regular Army, although he has been offered a commission in the National Guard of at least two States.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is there any law which would prevent the enlistment of such a man after he made his first application for citizenship?

Mr. DENISON. He can enlist but can not become a commissioned officer.

Mr. MONDELL. Had he not been discharged from service in the Australian Army?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; but he wanted a commission in our Army.

Mr. MONDELL. He could have entered our service as an enlisted man.

Mr. DENISON. Yes; but having served for three years in the war in Europe, having become a commissioned officer in the Australian Army, and having become an expert along certain lines of trench warfare, he thought he was competent to receive a commission in our own Army and to help drill our troops for service in France, where he wants to go as soon as possible with the soldiers of his own country.

Mr. RAKER. As soon as he landed he could have declared his intention to become an American citizen, and 10 minutes afterwards he could have entered either the Army or Navy.

Mr. DENISON. Not as a commissioned officer.

Mr. RAKER. I am not saying he could as a commissioned officer. That is not what I am talking about.

Mr. DENISON. I am.

Mr. RAKER. He could have entered the Army 10 minutes after he declared his intention to become an American citizen.

Mr. DENISON. He could have entered the Army as a private, of course. But, Mr. Speaker, I think that loyal Americans, who, like Lieut. Elliott, have proven what is in them, who have been on the firing line, and who are trained in actual warfare are entitled to a commission. We are to-day taking men from civil life, who have never had a gun in their hands, and giving them commissions after three months' training in the training camps. Why should we not have the benefit of the services of men who have had three years' training in actual war? Lieut. Elliott was examined by officers of our War College, and found well qualified for a commission. His application was indorsed by several Members of the Senate and of this House, as well as by military men with whom he had talked and who had become convinced of his loyalty and the valuable service he could render in helping to train our new army.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER. Ten minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. Now, I was going to say the Judge Advocate General held that the only way he could get a commission to serve in our Army was to have the commission given him in the new National Army by the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War, through The Adjutant General, insisted upon his furnishing a statement or recommendation from his superior officers in the Australian Army, which it would require several months to obtain. So this is a case where if it was not for his expatriation he could be given a commission in the National Guard of Illnois or some other State, or could have entered the service as a commissioned officer in the Regular Army. I think this bill ought to pass so that men such as Lieut. Elliott—patriotic, brave, competent men who have served in foreign armies and who want to serve in our Army—can obtain a commission to help train our troops for the service upon which they are to enter on the other side. Mr. Speaker, I confess my admiration for those Americans who felt the call to espouse the cause of our allies so strongly that they were willing to enter the military service of the countries that were fighting Germany before our own country was drawn into the struggle. I admire even more those who, when we entered the war, came home to serve their own country. Lieut. Elliott traveled all the way from Australia to join the forces of his own country. He was deeply disappointed to find that by a technicality he was disqualified for a commission. I am sure there are many other cases similar to his, and I hope this bill may become a law at once without opposition, so that we may have the benefit of their service now when we need them.

Mr. RAKER. I wish the gentleman from Pennsylvania would yield me five minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have promised to yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska, and if there is any further time left I will yield to the gentleman from California. Mr. Speaker, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the gentleman in charge of the bill [Mr. GORDON] did not agree to accept the second amendment suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Without stopping to discuss the first amendment, as I probably would not have the time, I want to call the attention to the purpose of the last sentence in that paragraph:

Provided, however, That no obligation in the way of pensions or other grants because of service in the army or navy of any other country, or disabilities incident thereto, shall accrue to the United States.

That last clause should read "shall be incurred by the United States." The word "accrue," of course, does not relate to a burden; it relates to an addition; it has relation to benefits or valuable attachments, while "incur" relates to taking on of burdens or responsibilities. This will relate to pensions or grants, and if it says shall not be incurred by the United States, it disavows the purpose of the legislators to allow any burden by the way of pensions or grants to be incurred or taken on by the Government of the United States.

With your permission I shall read a definition of the word "accrue":

Accrue: To come as a natural result or increment, as by growth, business, etc.; come into existence, as a right or the like; arise, as an addition, accession, or advantage; accumulate, as six months' interest has accrued.

The word "incur" means—

To bring upon oneself indirectly by some act, as to incur a liability as distinguished from a debt by contract; to render liable for something.

The purpose is to prevent this liability coming against the Government, which might be incident to the passage of this bill. So it seems to me that all gentlemen should agree that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania—that is, the second one, at least—should be adopted in the interest of good language, precision of diction, and wholesome legislation.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. The definition that the gentleman read of the word "accrue," as I understood, brings it squarely and fairly within the language the committee has used, and that it was the right word to use.

Mr. SLOAN. That is what I have been arguing, that it does nothing of the kind, and if these definitions do not make it clear, then Mr. Webster wrote and I have spoken in vain.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to the bill; I am in favor of it. I am in favor of discussion on bills of this importance, and do not like to see anyone cut off because some one gets tired. Many of us get tired sitting here listening to debate, but we have to endure it, and when great bills come along gentlemen should not get restless. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has two and a half minutes.

Mr. RAKER. I would like five minutes.

Mr. GORDON. I will yield two and a half minutes to the gentleman from California.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, it is easy to rush a bill through and give it but little consideration. Mr. MEEKER, a member of the committee, for instance, spent at least two months investigating this matter and gathering data from all countries of the world. It is all right now, because this country is joined with England and France, but gentlemen, you forget that when these men joined the belligerent armies the President of the United States and all public officials enjoined on our people to be neutral. It was an offense to participate in many of the things that were done by some of these men according to the testimony which we had before us when the country was neutral.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman recall the men who came over and helped us in our war for independence?

Mr. RAKER. We are dealing with another thing. Sentiment I know will appeal because our boys have joined the Army, but you forget that this country was neutral, that the man owed allegiance to the United States and that he left his country, forswore it, and took the oath to support the King of England and all her laws and all her powers as against the United States. Now, no one knew at the time what the result would be. Two years had to elapse before we knew, and now without any restrictions, without any safeguards that any man who entered these foreign armies as named in the bill, becomes a citizen of the United States. Wounded, the Government they fought for does not provide for them, but they come as citizens without making any application, without being heard, without even coming to this country, something that has never been permitted in any other piece of legislation that has ever been enacted.

They go before a consul or some other officer in a foreign country and make affidavit, and he issues a certificate in triplicate. The applicant then gains all his rights of American citizenship that he was willing to forego and set aside when he swore allegiance to a foreign country. It is war time, and because of a few statements of men who have come back, the House seems to have forgotten just the exact effects of this bill. While the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] that one man came back is all right, yet, after investigation by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, it was found that there was not one case which anyone was able to present where the man could not comply with the law and become a citizen of the United States. Within 10 minutes after he landed on our shores he could have taken the oath of allegiance and could have entered the Army or the Navy and obtained all of the other rights pertaining to those who file their first papers. But the only suggestion made is that he might desire a commission that would give him a higher rank and more salary. I feel impressed with the feature that once the country needed the men again when we should have any further trouble, he can forswear his own country, leave his own home, and neglect all of the rights and duties that he had to maintain, and go to some other country and swear allegiance to some foreign prince, king, or potentate and become a subject of that country, and then the moment that trouble starts here it is said that we should repatriate him.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I will take the leave granted me by the House, and on a later date make a statement of my position on this bill.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I yield three and one-half minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. FESS.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, if the membership of the House will indulge me for just a moment, I would like to call attention to a specific case that is of interest in this discussion. Soon after the war broke in Europe, one of the brilliant young physicians of Ohio went into one of the convalescent camps of Canada to assist in taking care of the wounded. After being there for a while he learned that he did not have very much discipline over the returning wounded soldiers because he did not have the military position of a soldier. He was a mere civilian, wearing civilian clothing, and was not considered with authority of an officer. He was advised by those in charge that it would be better for him to apply for a commission and therefore secure the needed discipline on the part of these convalescents. The young doctor took up the matter through me. I took it up with the State Department, and asked the Secretary whether if the physician should take a commission he would have to renounce his allegiance to our own country. The Secretary said that he would, and he advised that it would be unwise to do so, as it might lead to complications and result in some inconvenience and probably embarrassing conditions for the physician if he desired to remain a citizen of this country although resident of Canada.

The physician acted upon my recommendation that he remain a civilian and not renounce his allegiance. He has written me several times that the position he occupies is rather nil, that he can not do what otherwise he might do. If this bill or something like it had been on the statute books, there would have been no embarrassment whatever. He could go on with his work and take a commission, and if he had wanted to return when war broke upon us he could very easily have relieved the situation by making application of this law. It seems to me that the law can do no harm, and it surely can do a great deal of good. I mention this one specific case because it shows what the law will be in its effect. Not only that, but it will make a better community of interest between us and our allies, and will be proper treatment of the patriot who responded to the call of patriotism in the hour when he thought his ideals were in jeopardy.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, there does not seem to be anyone opposed to this bill except the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], and I shall not detain the House more than a few minutes in making some observations in reference to objections. Of course, there is the matter of pride, it seems, for the Committee on Naturalization had this bill under consideration and smothered it. That ought not to weigh one way or the other. This bill is a good bill and ought to pass. If the Committee on Naturalization overlooked its merits, that is its fault and not ours. The objection which he makes to the bill is, first, that it would apply to those who had violated the neutrality laws of the United States. It does not apply to those at all; it applies to those who did not violate the neutrality laws of the United States, but who joined the forces of these nations when it was necessary for them to renounce their allegiance to the United States in order to do it. They did not violate any neutrality law of the United States. They took an oath of allegiance, we will say, to Great Britain, for the purpose of going into her Army. They did it solely to fight in this war. Now, we are in the war and they want to come back. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] says they could make application to become a citizen within 10 minutes. Of course they could make application, but they could not become a citizen for two years under our present law.

Mr. ROGERS. Five years.

Mr. GORDON. Yes; five years. The committee considered this question very fully in all of its details. We considered all of the objections that the gentleman from California has made to it, and we concluded that they were unsubstantial, and I think anyone who inquires closely into the question will come to the same conclusion. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Yes; for what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman raises the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Ninety-three gentlemen are present, not a quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. ROGERS and Mr. SABATH) there were—ayes 34, noes 52.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will lock the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROGERS. Is this an automatic roll call on the passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. Why, we have got one anyway, so there is no use determining that.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, is this call of the House vote on the question of suspending the rules?

The SPEAKER. Yes; the House was dividing when the point of order was made.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 232, nays 4, answered "present" 5, not voting 190, as follows:

YEAS—232.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. DOWELL, and therefore I answer "present."

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to keep my session pair with my colleague, Mr. STEELE, by withdrawing my vote of "aye" and answering "present."

The name of Mr. BUTLER was called and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendments, and that the Speaker be authorized to appoint conferees on behalf of the House.

The SPEAKER. Before we do that, we want to get rid of the call.

Mr. GORDON. I move that the House dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] asks unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendments to the Senate bill and asks for conferees. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Clerk will announce the conferees.

The Clerk announced the following conferees: Mr. DENT, Mr. FIELDS, and Mr. GREENE of Vermont.

BRIDGE ACROSS MAHONING RIVER, OHIO.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House consider the bill H. R. 6310 at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6310) granting the consent of Congress to the Trumbull Steel Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, complete, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRITTEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, before this bill is considered I would like to make a unanimous-consent request. I have just returned from the Congressional Library——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Pennsylvania rise?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. To reserve the right to object to this unanimous-consent request. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he proposes to speak on a personal matter?

Mr. BRITTEN. No, sir. I want to try to get some time on a personal matter for to-morrow after I have explained to the House the reason for my unanimous-consent request. I have just come from the Congressional Library on a little matter, and I think the House ought to hear me for a minute or two.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I ask the gentleman whether this has any reference to any pending personal controversy?

Mr. BRITTEN. Not so far as I am concerned.

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the gentleman be permitted to proceed.

Mr. BRITTEN. I have not made my request yet.

Mr. HEFLIN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] objects.

Mr. BRITTEN. I have not made my request yet.

The SPEAKER. I know; but he seems to know what it is to be.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am sure if the gentleman knew he would not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama, whether he knew or not, objected. It is not debatable.

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRITTEN. Can I not make a request for a unanimous consent, and can a Member object to that before he knows what the request is?

The SPEAKER. Well, he did object, whether he knew or not. The Chair is not a mind reader.

Mr. POU. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] can not object before the House knows what the request is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did object.

Mr. POU. I mean as a parliamentary proposition.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I wish, if I may have a moment, to submit this suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN]: It does not seem to me it is good practice where a request is made for the consideration of a bill for gentlemen to reserve the right to object to the consideration of that bill in order to present a request for consent to make a speech. Now, I am not making any suggestion as to any objection to the gentleman from Illinois speaking. It does seem to me, however, that perhaps we are falling into a rather bad practice in the House about that. Now, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] has asked unanimous consent for the consideration of a bill. That is business. I submit for the consideration of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] that he ought to make that request at some other time, and get it acted upon, and then, at the proper time, obtain the floor.

Mr. BRITTEN. I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee is perfectly proper. It is not my intention to make a speech. My intention only is to make a unanimous-consent request. I will be glad to defer it until this bill is passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Trumbull Steel Co. and its successors and assigns to construct, complete, maintain, and operate, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River, near the city of Warren, in the county of Trumbull, in the State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 5, by striking out the word "complete."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. COOPER of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be changed so as to conform to the text.

There was no objection; and the title was changed so as to read, "A bill granting the consent of Congress to the Trumbull Steel Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio."

REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

Mr. BRITTEN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. BRITTEN. I desire to make a unanimous-consent request. I have just returned from the Congressional Library, and I have looked over several newspapers coming from all parts of the United States. Some of those papers have me generally linked with gentlemen on this side and on the other side of the Capitol who are opposing certain legislation for which I voted and for which I talked on the floor of the House. I wanted to have my own position in the House defined clearly for the benefit of myself and for the benefit of the country at large. If there is any suspicion held against me by Mr. HEFLIN, I want it pointed out in a perfectly friendly way. There is nothing personal about this with me. I want to be taken away from any company that is opposed to legislation for which I voted and for which I talked on the floor of the House.

My unanimous-consent request is this: That to-morrow, after the Speaker's table has been cleared of its usual business, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] be given 5 or 6 or 7 or 10 or 15 minutes—as many as he desires—to single me out and not talk about anybody else on the floor of the House, and say wherein my actions have been suspicious to him. He says he has no proof of anything; but let him give his own opinion as to my actions. It will then be my pleasure to reply to him direct on his assumption.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has gone far enough to justify me in saying I will not give my consent to any such arrangement. I demand the regular order; I object.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will you not reserve your objection for a moment?

Mr. GARNER. I will not reserve it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

COMMISSIONS IN RESERVE CORPS AND NATIONAL ARMY.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6350) to authorize the issuance of Reserve Corps and National Army commissions in the lower grades of staff corps, and to remove the fixed age limits requiring the discharge of Reserve Corps officers.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6350) to authorize the issuance of Reserve Corps and National Army commissions in the lower grades of staff corps, and to remove the fixed age limits requiring the discharge of Reserve Corps officers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska to explain just what this does.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, the law at present does not authorize the appointment of officers in The Adjutant General's Department under the rank of major, or in the Quartermaster's Department under the rank of captain, or in the Signal Corps under the rank of first lieutenant in the Reserve Corps or the Regular Army.

This bill proposes to allow the appointment of men to the rank of first lieutenant and second lieutenant and captain in these respective departments. Also, the Signal Corps has a provision that when a man becomes an aviator, a first lieutenant immediately commences to rank as captain and to draw the pay of captain. We are taking a great many aviators into the Signal Corps now because of the development of aviation, and the Chief of the Signal Corps, Gen. George O. Squier, has stated in a letter contained in this report that he has about 150 candidates who have completed satisfactorily the prescribed aviation course and are awaiting commissions to become aviators, and that this number will be increased to about 700 in six weeks, and further increased to about 2,000 in three months. The Adjutant General has ruled that a man can not be commissioned as an aviator under the rank of first lieutenant, and under the present law as soon as he is commissioned as first lieutenant he takes the rank and pay of captain. These men coming in at present and the thousands to follow would have to take the rank of captain.

This bill enables them to take the rank of second lieutenant. Gen. Squires says that in his department it will result in a saving of at least $1,500,000 a year and will permit the appointment of lieutenants and captains into offices where the law now requires higher rank. It is for the economy of the service that this bill should pass, and it will promote efficiency also.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the existing emergency the President is authorized, in addition to the grades now authorized, to appoint in the Officers' Reserve Corps and the National Army in the grades of second and first lieutenant in the Quartermaster Corps; second lieutenant in the Ordnance Corps and Signal Corps; second lieutenant, first lieutenant, and captain in The Adjutant General's Department, such citizens as shall be found physically, mentally, and morally qualified for appointment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHALLENBERGER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ISSUE OF NOTES OF SMALL DENOMINATIONS.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 6180, having reference to an increase in the issue of notes of one and two dollar denominations.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 6180) to amend the laws relating to the denominations of circulating notes by national banks, and to permit the issuance of notes of small denominations, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I expect to support this bill, but it involves one or two questions that I think the chairman of the committee ought to explain. I have not had a chance to read the bill, but one of the questions that I have in mind relates to the charge which, I understand, this bill may make against the banks for the printing of the notes.

Mr. GLASS. It is proposed to make the usual charge against the banks for printing the notes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let the bill be read, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of June 3, 1864 (Rev. Stats., sec. 5175), which prohibits national banks from being furnished with notes of less denomination than $5, be, and it is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That that part of the act of March 14, 1900, which provides "that no national banking association shall, after the passage of this act, be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency, or to issue or reissue, or place in circulation more than one-third in amount of its circulating notes of the denomination of $5, be, and it is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 3. That from and after the passage of this act any national banking association, upon compliance with the provisions of law applicable thereto, shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency, or to issue or reissue, or place in circulation notes in denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100 in such proportion as to each of said denominations as the bank may elect: Provided, however, That no bank shall receive or have in circulation at any one time more than $25,000 in notes of the denominations of $1 and $2.

SEC. 4. That all acts or parts of acts which are inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I know there is an urgent demand for more $1 and $2 notes, of which there has been a great scarcity in recent times, probably due to war necessities and war business. But can the gentleman explain whether the repeal of the act of March 14, 1900, involves the question of a charge for the printing of the notes?

Mr. GLASS. This does not at all alter the law or the practice in the matter of the charge for printing the notes. It simply gives to the national banks the right that they have not heretofore had of issuing their notes in denominations of $1 and $2 in order to facilitate the business of pay rolls throughout the country. There has been a very universal demand from the banks of the country for this legislation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is true; but does the act of March 14, 1900, which I have not had time to produce here, provide that the banks shall pay for the printing of $5 notes?

Mr. GLASS. The charge of one-half of 1 per cent, the tax on circulation, covers the charge for printing.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That now applies only to $5 notes?

Mr. GLASS. Yes. They are the lowest denomination that national banks can now issue.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And the effect of the enactment of this bill would be to apply that charge to the issuance of $1 and $2 notes?

Mr. GLASS. Precisely so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would simply be carrying over to the one and two dollar notes the charge that now applies to the $5 notes.

Mr. GLASS. That is the situation. Under existing law there is a limitation upon national banks in the issuance of $5 notes. No national bank can issue more than one-third of its entire circulation in $5 notes. The Treasury Department is engaged in the conversion of $5 Treasury notes into denominations of $1 and $2, and in order to supply the amount of $5 notes the limitation on national banks as to $5 notes is removed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. May I ask the gentleman why the issue of $1 and $2 notes is limited to $25,000 for each bank?

Mr. GLASS. It is thought that only the smaller banks will care to issue these notes at all. The gentleman understands that the national banks have no such privilege now and never have had the privilege of issuing ones and twos. With the 8,000 national banks in the country, it was thought that the limitation of $25,000 ought to be made.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the $25,000 limit be for the $1 and $2 notes separately or for both?

Mr. GLASS. Both the ones and twos.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It would not mean $50,000 of both?

Mr. GLASS. No; $25,000 for each bank.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The $25,000 covers both ones and twos?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is this bill unanimously reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I know there is a very urgent demand on the part of the banks and business men of the country for the issuance of notes of the smaller denominations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. DENISON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he happens to know the reason why national banks have been forbidden heretofore to issue ones and twos?

Mr. GLASS. No; I do not.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, I think the object was to force the silver dollar into circulation; but, as I understand it, the silver dollar is now represented substantially by the silver certificates, is it not?

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I take it there is no reason to prevent the Government from printing $1 and $2 silver certificates.

Mr. GLASS. Not at all. There are $277,000,000 silver certificates in ones and twos now.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and the silver bullion and silver dollars in the Treasury now are represented almost entirely by silver notes, are they not?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; almost entirely.

Mr. CANNON. And it is supposed that the banks will pay the one-half of 1 per cent for the privilege of issuing $1 and $2 notes?

Mr. GLASS. It is thought that they will, in order to facilitate the transaction of local business.

Mr. DENISON. Will not this have a tendency to do away with the silver dollar in circulation?

Mr. GLASS. Oh, I think not. The committee did not think so.

Mr. STAFFORD. Every one who is at all acquainted with the silver agitation knows that no matter how earnestly the Treasury Department tried to have the silver dollars put into circulation, they always came back, because the commercial world would utilize only so many coined silver dollars.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FESS. Reserving the right to object, there is a general stringency of smaller notes. I have many communications on the subject, which I have referred to the Secretary of the Treasury. As I understand it, the silver certificates are the only paper money that we have in the denominations of $1 and $2.

Mr. GLASS. No; the Secretary of the Treasury recently, under authority of the law of 1907, has been converting Treasury bills of the denomination of $5 into $1s and $2s.

Mr. FESS. I was not aware of that fact. That would increase the number of them.

Mr. GLASS. Yes.

Mr. FESS. But this is to add to the general circulation of national-bank notes in the denominations of $1 and $2.

Mr. GLASS. That is true.

Mr. FESS. Do I understand that we have never had any national-bank notes of less than $5 denomination?

Mr. GLASS. Yes; we give the national banks a right they never possessed before, to issue one and two dollar notes, supplementing the orders of the Treasury Department to increase the issue of one and two dollar Treasury notes and silver certificates.

Mr. FESS. Has the chairman any opinion as to why there seems to be such a demand for bills of small denominations?

Mr. GLASS. I think it is obviously because of the tremendous increase in pay rolls throughout the country.

Mr. FESS. I should judge that it is not because of the advanced price of silver bullion.

Mr. GLASS. Oh, no; I think it has no relation to that subject.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the gentleman will allow me, a great many notes are issued by the Federal reserve bank. Is it intended that they will issue any denominations in small amounts?

Mr. GLASS. Not in one and two dollar notes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it intended to be compulsory on the banks to issue a certain amount of their circulation in one and two dollar notes?

Mr. GLASS. No; it is altogether optional with the banks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2922) to amend the laws relating to the denominations of circulating notes by national banks and to permit the issuance of notes of small denominations, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of June 3, 1864, Revised Statutes, section 5175, which prohibits national banks from being furnished with notes of less denomination than $5, be, and it is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That that part of the act of March 14, 1900, which provides "that no national banking association shall, after the passage of this act, be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency, or to issue or reissue, or place in circulation more than one-third in amount of its circulating notes of the denomination of $5," be, and it is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 3. That from and after the passage of this act any national banking association, upon compliance with the provisions of law applicable thereto, shall be entitled to receive from the Comptroller of the Currency, or to issue or reissue, or place in circulation notes in denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100 in such proportion as to each of said denominations as the bank may elect: Provided, however, That no bank shall receive or have in circulation at any one time more than $25,000 in notes of the denominations of $1 and $2.

SEC. 4. That all acts or parts of acts which are inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GLASS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The House bill of a similar tenor was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 2776) providing for the classification of lands under the stock-grazing homestead act in certain States, and for other purposes, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

Senate concurrent resolution 14.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 3932) to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to insert in line 2 of section 20 of the conference report as agreed to, after the word "occur," the words "or which since the commencement of the present war have occurred," and also, in line 4 of said section, after "all," insert the word "other."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4280) to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 5839) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, in Aitkin County, Logan Township, State of Minnesota.

EXPLOSIVES.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate concurrent resolution No. 14.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Let it be reported.

The Clerk read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. I object.

CHAPLAINS IN THE ARMY.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2917) to amend section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. MONDELL. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman make a statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let the bill be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 15 of the act approved June 3, 1916, entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," as amended by the act approved May 12, 1917, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 15. Chaplains: The President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, chaplains in the Army at the rate of not to exceed, including chaplains now in the service, one for each 1,200 officers and men in all branches of the Military Establishment, with rank, pay, and allowances as now authorized by law: Provided, That there shall be assigned at least one chaplain for each regiment of Cavalry, Infantry, Field Artillery, and Engineers."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think this bill should have been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The invariable practice of the Chair is, if a gentleman asks for a bill to remain on the Sepaker's table for a reasonable time, for the Speaker to hold it. But ordinarily, if no request is made, the Chair refers it at once. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska if the committee has taken any action on the Senate bill or a House bill involving the same subject matter?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; it has not. I will say for the information of the House that the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee stated that the committee had finished its work and did not expect to have any further hearings. The bill came over to the Speaker's table to-day and I asked to have it considered.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe the Military Affairs Committee of the House met as late as yesterday and reported numerous bills. Is there any reason why they should not meet during the remainder of the session and consider the bills that come over from the Senate?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. No; I do not know of any reason.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill has not been considered by the Military Committee, and I object.

CONVEYING CERTAIN LANDS IN PORT ANGELES, WASH.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the committee on the Public Lands from further consideration of the bill (S. 309) authorizing the county of Clallam, in the State of Washington, to convey to the city of Port Angeles certain lands, and for present consideration of the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 309, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to discharge the committee from further consideration of this bill and for its present consideration. Is there objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the tract of land that was conveyed or deeded to the State with a limitation upon the right of the State to convey?

Mr. HADLEY. That is correct. The limitation consisted in the words of the grant from the Government "for county purposes," and the county now desires to convey a portion of the tract to the city of Port Angeles, in which the tract is situated, in order that they can coordinate and centralize the activities of the two municipalities. The temporary purpose is for a library.

Mr. MONDELL. And the public purposes contemplated by the original grant will be carried out by the legislation now before us?

Mr. HADLEY. Exactly. The question of a cloud on the title has been raised by reason of the words of limitation in the grant from the Government. The report from the department is favorable. The only reason the Committee on the Public Lands has not acted upon the bill is that I did not insist against their wishes that matters not purely of a military character should not be reported.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HADLEY. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will say that the Committee on the Public Lands has no objection to this request. This is certainly a very meritorious proposition, and it is an urgent measure, but it was really not a war measure, and therefore the committee did not take it up.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the county of Clallam, in the State of Washington, through its proper officials duly authorized to convey real estate for the county, is hereby authorized to convey to the city of Port Angeles, in said county and State, in fee simple, any part of that parcel of land situated in said city, county, and State described in the act of Congress of January 12, 1903, as a parcel of land 220 feet in width off the east side of suburban block No. 26, as shown on official plats of the town site of Port Angeles, in said county, and as subsequently conveyed in the patent of the United States of America to the said county of Clallam, dated March 21, 1903.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HADLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DRAFTING SUBJECTS OF ALLIED COUNTRIES.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 115, requesting the Secretary of State to open diplomatic negotiations with certain governments with a view to obtaining their approval and sanction for action by the United States permitting the inclusion in the armed forces of the United States of such citizens of the countries of such governments as are within the United States, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suggest that the gentleman ask that just that part of the resolution be reported that is not stricken through.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the preamble which was stricken out by the Committee on Foreign Affairs before the resolution was reported to the House be omitted in the reading by the Clerk, and that he simply read the substance of the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I am reserving the right to object, but I would like to have the resolution reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to have the preamble omitted and that simply the resolution itself be read. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to open diplomatic negotiations with the Governments of the several countries at war with a country with which the United States is at war with a view to obtaining their approval and sanction for action by the United States looking to the imposition upon such citizens of those countries as are within the United States of the liability to and performance of military service in the armed forces of the United States during the continuance of the present war between the United States and Germany, and to report to the Congress of the United States as soon as practicable the result of such negotiations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if I may have the attention of the House for a moment, I understand that this resolution was favorably reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs unanimously, and I further understand that the State Department interposes no objection to its passage. That I learned in the Committee on Rules this morning when the committee had under consideration a resolution to provide for its consideration. But, Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that it is really and entirely a useless resolution. It will accomplish nothing. It requests the Secretary of State to do that which he is now doing. It has a paragraph at the conclusion, the exact wording of which I do not recall, which I think makes it mandatory upon the Secretary of State to report the results of his efforts to the Congress. I do not know whether the State Department in not interposing objection gave consideration to that paragraph or not, but to my mind that might lead to some difficulties and embarrassment, and, in view of the fact that the resolution is entirely needless, in view of the fact that the State Department is now doing, according to the statement made by the Secretary of State before the Committee on Military Affairs, precisely what this resolution requests him to do, I feel constrained to object.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for just one moment?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the letter sent to Mr. FLOOD, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, by the Hon. Frank L. Polk, Acting Secretary of State, which reads as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 28, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. FLOOD: Referring to your letter of July 16, in regard to H. J. Res. 115, introduced in the House by Mr. Rogers, and to the department's telephone communication to your clerk of July 25 to the effect that this resolution, together with other bills on the same subject, had been laid before the President for his consideration, I beg now to advise you that the President informs me that of the bills before the Congress relating to the enlistment or drafting of alien residents in the United States H. J. Res. 115 (or S. J. Res. 83, which appears to be identical) seems to him most appropriate in the circumstances, as, in his opinion, the matter is properly a subject for negotiation with the countries concerned.

Very sincerely, yours, FRANK L. POLK.

Hon. HENRY D. FLOOD,
House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee has stated with sufficient accuracy the substantive facts involved. But I can not agree with him in his conclusion that the passage of this resolution would accomplish nothing. The section of the country which I represent is greatly exercised over the alien-slacker situation. We are getting letters, we are reading in the newspapers, we are receiving personal calls—all deploring the fact that the House is doing nothing to meet the difficulty. The Senate passed the Chamberlain bill. At the request of the Secretary of State the House Committee on Military Affairs has decided to do nothing at this time. Very likely it was entirely wise in reaching that decision. But, Mr. Speaker, I want the House of Representatives in some affirmative, definite way to show its interest in this most important problem and its determination to grapple with it, and, so far as may be, to solve it. Here we have a resolution which has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which has received the express sanction in writing of the President of the United States and of the Secretary of State. I hope that under the circumstances the gentleman will be constrained to withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee objects, and the Chair will recognize the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HOOD].

BRIDGE ACROSS WACCAMAW RIVER, N. C.

Mr. HOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2878) granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Waccamaw River.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2878) granting the consent of Congress to the Whiteville Lumber Co. to construct a bridge across Waccamaw River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Whiteville Lumber Co. and its successors and assigns to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Waccamaw River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Pireway Ferry, in the counties of Columbus and Brunswick, in the State of North Carolina, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. HOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PERMISSIONS TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. Four gentlemen have received permission of the House to make speeches, Mr. WILLIAMS, of Illinois, for 30 minutes; Mr. GALLIVAN for 10 minutes; Mr. BANKHEAD for 20 minutes; and Mr. POU for 40 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Colorado rise?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. To submit a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 40 minutes to-morrow after the Journal is approved, not to interfere with any privileged matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to address the House to-morrow after the business on the Speaker's table is cleared up, not to interfere with any privileged matter. Is there objection?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. What became of my unanimous-consent request, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. It was granted. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU]. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, I make a similar unanimous-consent request, to follow the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] for not more than 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT] asks unanimous consent for not more than 15 minutes, to follow the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] to-morrow. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state on what subject he wishes to speak?

Mr. HULBERT. Yes. I want to speak on the subject of American patriotic loyalty, not, however, connected with any controversy that has heretofore arisen in this House.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, did not the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] give notice that he would call up the civil-rights bill in the morning immediately after the reading of the Journal?

The SPEAKER. I think he did. But the House can do anything it chooses by unanimous consent. Mr. Speaker CANNON once said that you could pass an elephant through the House by unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. If these requests for opportunity to address the House are granted, they will come after the consideration of the bill that has just been referred to, will they not?

The SPEAKER. They undoubtedly will.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I give notice in the interest of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] that I will object to these requests after the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT] has been put.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WELTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the bill (S. 2623) defining the status of citizens of the United States who have entered the military or naval services of certain countries during the existing war in Europe.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] had the first privilege of the floor for 30 minutes, and I was to come second, but we have changed places.

The SPEAKER. Very well. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

THE "ALIEN-SLACKER" SITUATION.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I intend to discuss in the time allotted to me the very question that came up a few moments ago on the request of my colleague [Mr. ROGERS], that a joint resolution requesting the State Department to take action on the "alien-slacker" situation be considered.

It is all very well for a Member of this House to say that the State Department is now doing that very thing, and it is all very well for the members of the Committee on Military Affairs, as I understand they have done, to defer action on the so-called Chamberlain bill, a Senate measure which provides for the conscription of aliens, but what this House wants and what the people of this country want is action.

And I desire the attention of the House for a few moments to the condition that now confronts the young men of this country.

Mr. Speaker, on June 5 of the current year, in accordance with an act of Congress, 10,000,000 men between the ages of 21 and 31 were registered for the purpose of selecting from their number a national army that might carry out the purposes of our Government, as these purposes were announced by the President of the United States when he thundered to Prussia, and through Prussia to the world, that the world must be made safe for democracy.

The response to this call of the Government was prompt, vigorous, and eager. Almost 10,000,000 men were registered, and from these 10,000,000 the first draft of 687,000 has already been made; the American youth has taken his place in the various cantonments scattered throughout the country to prepare himself to do such work that, as soon as may be, peace may again be exercising her sweet influence upon earth.

The departure of these young men from their homes has been attended in large measure with heartbreakings. The mothers of the Nation, brave and patriotic though they are, have had a natural reluctance to being separated from their sons, for whom they have lived and from whom they have had during the years of childhood and early manhood so much of comfort in the struggle for existence.

But there has been, unfortunately, accompanying this eager speeding of the boys on their way, a feeling in some places that a great injustice has been done these young men, citizens of the United States by choice or birth. They have been taken from their various occupations to perform this great duty of patriotism, and they find their places occupied by others who have enjoyed the same beneficent institutions that they have enjoyed, who have rejoiced in the protection of the Government of the United States, and the various Commonwealths comprehended therein, and who yet at the same time feel no such thrill of patriotism as these other young men who have been selected; but, on the contrary, have been quite content to fill in the places left vacant by the citizens and still enjoy the protection of our Government without making one single effort by way of return.

I have said, Mr. Speaker, that the National Army has already been recruited to the number of 687,000 by a process of selection. Does it occur to you that this number represents pretty nearly half the population of the colonies when the first shot was fired in the American Revolution, and Crispus Attucks, and the rest of them went down to a glorious death in the Boston massacre?

Figures are hard to get together, but I am credibly informed that there are in the United States to-day about a million and a quarter of men who are not under obligation to serve under the Stars and Stripes, and who, because they are on American soil and protected by the laws of the United States, can not be forced to join the armies of the various countries to which they severally owe allegiance. Of this number fully one-half are of the so-called draft age. When these immigrants came here we received them with open arms, and were glad to welcome them to the protection of our free institutions, and we taught them that so long as the Stars and Stripes waved on high their souls, yes, and in America, their bodies, were free. What are we asking of them in return? We are asking them simply to be grateful. We are surely grateful to them for the spiritual and material wealth that they have contributed to our beloved country, but we are obliged to remind them that unless the soul of the manhood of the country is free; unless the principle which animates human action be the principle of justice; unless a man translate a large part of his activity and his aspiration into patriotism or love of country, then that man's service is in vain, for it is not by what we receive that we are blessed, but rather by what we give.

To the stranger from the land of Dante, Petrarch, and Tasso we have said "Come," for we would add to the already choice possessions coming to us from immigration the warm, sunny hearts of the descendants of Imperial Rome. We have told the Pole to come, for we had not forgotten Sobieski, Pulaski, and the later Louis Kossuth. Mindful of the charming literature and the scientific achievements of the French, and not forgetful of the duty contracted in the American Revolution, when Lafayette and the French clergy came to our aid, in the dark days of the American Revolution, we have with all the warmth of our American hearts welcomed to our shores the citizens of La Belle France. I need not enumerate further, for when we extended this welcome to these foreign peoples we did not mean that they should simply tarry with us for a while. We felt that we could show them the greatest democracy upon which the sun ever shone, and we welcomed them to a participation in its citizenship so that they might stand before the world an example of the same wealth in Government institutions as ourselves.

So we ask them now, in the light of their need and the need of their native country much more than ours, that as they are enjoying the fruits of democracy, so they may, in a most substantial way, contribute their share of these fruits, and in return for what they have received from us make at this time the only kind of a return that will or can be accepted as proof positive that they are not ungrateful to us for the privileges which they have enjoyed under the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

Time and again, Mr. Speaker, in the history of our country it would seem as if the principles upon which this Government was founded trembled in the balance. In the War of the Revolution these principles became our fixed standard. By adherence to them we have made progress beyond the power of man to conceive or dream. Our material progress makes puny the wealth of Ormus and of Ind, and these flattering results have been due in no small measure to the fact that the immigrant, from whatever country he came, no matter how downtrodden he had been hitherto, the very moment he stepped foot on the American shore and began to take in the atmosphere of American institutions, felt himself transformed and almost transfigured by the change. In the mother countries he was, or at least had felt himself, a slave. Now he felt he was free; that he was a free man. As he compared his second state with his first, and asked himself for a reason for the change, he was fain to admit, with Emerson, that "America" was only another word for "opportunity." He forswore his allegiance to the mother country, sometimes regretfully, for who can forget the mother that bore him, and then took an oath to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.

When the War of Rebellion was on, when the boys in gray fought according to their lights, with as much conscience as did the boys in blue, when it seemed as if this great country of ours must be torn asunder, Joseph Story, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, a Massachusetts man, said in an address which he made in my own Boston that "We are the latest, and if we fail the last experiment of self-government by the people fails," and he further declared that there could be no neutrals in that war, only patriots and traitors. How true this is of this war. Mr. Speaker, if there be in this House—and I believe there is not—a single Member who doubts the justice which inspires the Chamberlain bill, if there be one here who is so little mindful of all that our Government is and has been to him, if there be one who can see a shred of justice in sending more than a million men, citizens of the United States, to the western front while the alien who has not yet declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States takes his position in the counting room or the factory and in smug complacency says to himself that he will enjoy all the benefits to be derived from the registration and conscription, but will suffer none of the burdens, if such a man is a Member of this House I ask him on what principle of justice he relies to sustain his contention? Frankly, I can see none. We are in a world war. The alien has as much interest in the outcome as the citizen, and if this be so why does he not take the position that if the result is to be a victory of the United States of America he will swear under heaven to contribute to this victory, if he is entitled to share in its fruits?

Again, Mr. Speaker, what does the alien, reluctant to enter into the service, expect as the result of his attitude? Will he, as he looks into the future, have the assurance to profit by the victory? Does not the very fact that he left his own country to improve his condition prove that he is a select and superior being? Did he come to America for the purpose of acquiring wealth only, like a miser, to sit down and gloat over it, or did he come here that his soul might be free, and that he might exercise like a free man those faculties in man that make him like unto the Divine? These men enjoy material comforts the like of which they had never dreamed of. I say, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt and where thieves do not break through nor steal." This is the counsel of the Eternal Wisdom itself. That is the advice, more than any other, that America now needs. The demand is for a more simple life, a life rather of aspiration than of perspiration, a life that does not forget that the greatest thing in the world is man, and the greatest thing in man is mind; a life which, if lived rightly, will guarantee the perpetuity of our institutions, a pledge and promise of happiness here and eternal well-being in the hereafter.

It was with great trepidation and with more than ordinary apprehension that this Government declared a state of war existed between this Government and Germany. We had been lulled to sleep by protestations of friendship masking treachery, intrigue, and murder. The people were engaged in their peaceful pursuits, little knowing of the storm which was to burst. The Government maintained a neutrality under most trying circumstances for fear lest the war that was the suicide of Europe might become the suicide of the world. International law and laws seemed to have been suspended. Peoples that had been leaders in philosophy seemed to feel that destiny pointed either to world power on the one hand, or ruin on the other, and finding that ruin seemed to be the goal, vowed that in this ruin would come the ruin of the entire world; that governments would pass away from the earth; that conscience should no more have place as a guiding principle in the conduct of man; that human beings would go back to savagery; that everything would be in a condition of primeval chaos.

No wonder, Mr. Speaker, that you and I hesitated as we stood upon the brink of war; no wonder that we viewed with scepticism the departure from the volunteer system to that of registration and the selective draft; no wonder that we feared that the people who had been asleep for so long, not understanding that the enormity of the struggle which was being waged on the other side of the water was really close to us, showed signs of reluctance and resentment when the suggestion of a draft army for a free people was first made. We all shared in this reluctance. We knew the patriotism of the American youth. We had tried it when it was coming into being in the War of the Revolution. We had experienced it again in 1812, in 1846 to 1848; in 1861 to 1865, I care not under what color of his military garb the soldier fought, for both sides in that conflict thought they were right. We saw it again in 1898, when proof was given, though proof was not necessary, that we had become a united country and that the wounds of '61 to '65 had been healed, and that not a trace of them was to be seen; and we shall see this patriotism exemplified again in this greatest war that has ever convulsed the world; this war that has made men, unfortunately, wonder whether there is a great overruling Providence, but at the same time has done more than any other event in the world's history that I know of to bring man's mind back to religion.

Do I need to say that this is not an ordinary war? Nation after nation has ranged herself on the side of justice against a Government that has vowed that it will make the world safe for hypocrisy. The evidence of the last few days, the revelations coming from the office of the Secretary of State, are all we need to convince us that the extraordinary method for the selection of men for the great Army was under the circumstances an absolute necessity. Any other system would have been too slow. Any other system would have given heart and comfort to the enemy, not of the United States, but of the world; any other method of recruiting would have convinced the megalomaniac, the swaggering butcher of Europe, the blasphemer who takes the Almighty into junior partnership with him, and when the contest is going against him shakes his fist into the face of the Eternal and cries out, "Where have you been?" Any other system, I say, would have convinced this autocrat, whom to call a "Hun" is to do a wrong to Attila, that the American people were not behind the Government; that we were a soft people; that we were interested only in the accumulation of wealth; and that we adored only the golden calf.

And so the selective draft became necessary, and the result is that Prussia has at last become convinced that it is a mistake to stir the anger of a patient people. And in view of the many suggestions of peace coming from the central powers, it has made up his mind that doom is written for the throne of the Hohenzollerns and that the great empire built by Bismarck, Moltke, and Von Roon, founded not upon love, but hate, is ready for dismemberment because it has gone after false gods and has forgotten that word which was in the beginning, and that word was God.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether upon the return of this Congress in December we shall find that the State Department has effected its negotiations with our allies and the foreign powers, but I sincerely hope that the men in Congress, as well as the men and women of the country, who believe that something must be done speedily and before the second call of the draft comes——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I ask for five minutes more, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I sincerely hope that all this attempted dodging, that the postponement and delays, will at last have come to some end, and that by a rearrangement of treaties, or by some legislation before the second draft comes, we will have the alien who has been here a reasonable time, and who is of the draft age, doing his bit for his adopted country. [Applause.]

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman used one expression there that I think probably he did not intend to use, and that is "this attempted dodging." Will the gentleman state what he refers to about dodging, in Congress or otherwise?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Not in the Congress.

Mr. GARNER. Do you know of any in any executive or administrative branch of the Government?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I have heard of it.

Mr. GARNER. Where they dodged the question?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman ought to give the House the benefit of it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I have heard of it.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman ought to give the House and the country the benefit of that information.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I have heard of it, and I think several other Members have heard of it. It has been printed in the newspapers, and I do not think there is any doubt but what somebody has attempted to dodge the whole situation.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. No; I will not. I have only a few minutes left, and I want to say a great deal in that time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, the object of the legislation I advocate is simply to bring into the service of the Government in a selective way the entire man power of the country within the ages defined. Why should your boy or mine serve in the Army or in the Navy, on a destroyer or the mine sweeper, in the air or in the trenches, except to preserve for the purposes for which they were established these glorious institutions in which we rejoice? Why should my neighbor's son be selected for service and mine, equally strong physically and mentally, be allowed to stay at home to enjoy his own sweet will and fancy unless by staying at home he makes some contribution to that wealth of the country most necessary at this hour, ready to join the Army if it be necessary?

But more than all this, Mr. Speaker, what about him who acknowledges allegiance to a foreign State, which foreign State is willing to suspend all treaties, the man who can not, for obvious reasons, return to his country now? Has he not for the time being at least preferred this country to his own? Does he not get aid and comfort from it? And is this aid and is this comfort to be guaranteed to him for the future because of the sacrifice of the American citizen or his son, who by this sacrifice assures the alien that his condition of comfort shall endure?

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, is simply a corrective of what would otherwise be a gross injustice. As many men are at the cantonments to-day as the result of the first draft as there are aliens within the scope of this bill. When we get the action on this proposition we hope for then the mothers of these young men will know that there is no discrimination—that rich and poor, high and low, citizen and noncitizen, ready volunteer and slacker are within the power of the Government, which is simply exercising a right to require service for service already rendered. The Nation will then truly stand as a symbol of inviolable justice. Then shall we know that the foundations of the Government structure are sound and deep, and we shall become more convinced than ever that as the ages pass and the historian takes his pen in hand he will never choose for his subject "The decline and fall of the United States of America." [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is recognized for 20 minutes.

WHY WE ARE AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, we are approaching the closing days of the most momentous and epoch-making session ever held by the Congress of the United States. In a few days we shall return to our people at home, to meet them eye to eye and heart to heart, to give an account of our stewardship here as their Represenatives during the ever memorable days of this historic session.

They have a right to ask, and it shall be our solemn duty to tell them of the reasons, why our country is at war, and to tell them of the facts upon which our participation in this war is justified. We should not deceive ourselves as to the state of mind back home. This war in its various effects has reached, or will yet reach, every hearthstone and threshold in America. The ordinary man, the man who toils, the farmer, the miner, the artisan, the clerk, the heads of families, the fathers of sons of military age, the bread earners, the providers of small incomes—in short, the average man in our districts is asking himself, and especially is asking you and me, what are the facts, the reasons, which justified our Government in taking up the gage of battle thrown down to us by Germany?

It is a fair question. The interrogation imputes no disloyalty. He has the right to ask it, because he is the type of citizen who is called, or whose son is called, to service in the Army; he is called upon to pay his tithe of the heavy tax levies provided for and yet to be provided to finance this great conflict; he is one of the burden bearers of the Republic who must make his sacrifice and endure his pain.

War is abhorrent to all of us. It is the most abnormal and most indefensible of all human institutions, judged by ethical and humanitarian standards, but, unhappily, its cruel arbitriment is still the last resort of nations. So that to appeal to that resort in this case our President and this Congress must have had very unbearable, very intolerable provocation. The undisputed facts show that such was the case. If they did not show it, then no Member of Congress who voted for the declaration of war could hope for or expect the indorsement of his people on such a vote.

This war, deliberately entered upon by us, is solely and entirely a war of self-defense, and one for the protection of the lives of our citizens and their property; the security of our national sovereignty on land and sea, and for the protection of our people and our land from invasion and destruction by the most arrogant and brutal temporal Government that ever profaned God's universe. [Applause.] I did not vote for the resolution primarily to make the world safe for democracy, but as a Representative of a part of my country, and, in a sense, as a Representative of all its people, I voted to make the United States of America safe for its own conception of democracy [applause] and to make its citizens safe from murder and piracy on every inch of the sailed seas while engaged in legitimate business under the protecting stars and stripes of our national flag. [Applause.]

I did not vote for the declaration of war because we had no grievance of our own, as some men seek to falsely represent the statement of the President on a certain occasion; but I voted for it, and you voted for it, because we not only had a grievance, not only because we had a special grievance, but a long series of accumulated grievances of the most specific and brutal nature. These other considerations of world democracy and the rights of small nations were to me of very grave and compelling nature, incidental to our entering the contest, but not its justification; and the sooner those in authority make it unmistakably plain that we are fighting our own fight primarily to protect our own people and to avenge the death of our own fellow citizens, and to perpetuate our own institutions, the better will it be for the solidarity of our national spirit and for the strengthening of our arms on land and sea.

Now, what are the facts, or at least the controlling facts and circumstances, somewhat in logical sequence, which directly led to war, and upon which we must justify our conduct before our people, before posterity, and before God, whose vengeance I verily believe will not be always withheld from that people who engage in war without just cause? [Applause.]

In July, 1914, we little imagined that this country was standing upon the threshhold of such an imminent and wholesale tragedy. We were little concerned with the politics of Europe or the machinations and intrigues of its diplomats. Happy in the presumed security of our geographical isolation, and counseled by the admonition of the fathers of the country to hold ourselves aloof from intermeddling in or becoming parties to entangling alliances with foreign powers, we busied ourselves with our own domestic problems in the evolution of national progress and economic and social growth. And then suddenly and without expectation the hour of destiny struck, the blow fell which was to embroil practically the whole world in the most stupendous Saturnalia of misery and destruction ever wished by the fury of Diabolus.

But in the origin and first effects it was not our war. It did not touch our people nor our territory nor our vested national rights or prerogatives. It is true that we deplored its existence; we condemned the brutal and lustful methods with which it was conducted; we held up to shame and execration the rape of Belgium, with all the sordid and unmentionable atrocities inflicted by the German invaders upon that helpless and unoffending little nation and its people, whose only crime was that it lay between the lair of the national wolf and the sunny hills of heroic France, which were first on the program for desolation and conquest. But still it was not our war, for we had not yet a national grievance.

You recall the very strict and impartial proclamation of neutrality which President Wilson issued and enjoined upon the American people.

He demanded of all Government officials, and urged earnestly that all private citizens refrain from public expressions of sympathy or allegiance to either the central or entente powers. We were exercising our traditional policy of noninterference and no intermeddling, but we were not called upon either by the law of nations or by the dictates of expediency, reasonably interpreted, to waive any of our well-established and immemorial national rights.

But in the light of subsequent developments we now know with what supreme and arrogant contempt and disregard the honest efforts of our President to preserve a strict neutrality between all belligerents was treated by the German Government, acting through and under the specific direction of the accredited representatives of that Government to our country. The revelatons, now proven without doubt, show, as President Wilson said in his address to Congress on April 2, that—

> One of the things that has served to convince us that the Prussian autocracy was not and could never be our friend is that from the very outset of the present war it has filled our unsuspecting communities and even our offices of Government with spies and set criminal intrigues everywhere afoot against our national unity of counsel, our peace within and without, our industries and our commerce. Indeed, it is now evident that its spies were here even before the war began; and it is unhappily not a matter of conjecture but a fact, proved in our courts of justice, that the intrigues, which have more than once come perilously near to disturbing the peace and dislocating the industries of the country, have been carried on at the instigation, with the support, and even under the personal direction of official agents of the Imperial Government accredited to the Government of the United States.

While professing friendship for our Government, while enjoying the hospitality of its National Capital, and while being credited by us with the observance of friendly relations and honest purposes, the German Government, through its highest official of state, entered into a deliberate and cold-blooded conspiracy to engage Mexico and Japan against us in war, and promised Mexico as her reward the sovereign territory of New Mexico, Arizona, and Texas. The official proposal was as follows:

> On the 1st of February we intend to begin submarine warfare unrestricted. In spite of this it is our intention to endeavor to keep neutral the United States of America. If this attempt is not successful, we propose an alliance on the following basis with Mexico: That we shall make war together and together make peace. We shall give general financial support, and it is understood that Mexico is to reconquer the lost territory in New Mexico, Texas, and Arizona. The details are left to you for settlement. You are instructed to inform the President of Mexico of the above in the greatest confidence as soon as it is certain there will be an outbreak of war with the United States, and suggest that the President of Mexico, on his own initiative, should communicate with Japan, suggesting adherence at once to this plan; at the same time offer to mediate between Germany and Japan. Please call to the attention of the President of Mexico that the employment of ruthless submarine warfare now promises to compel England to make peace within a few months.
> (Signed) ZIMMERMANN.

And bear in mind that was many weeks before we declared a state of war to exist.

Not only this, but it has been proven in the courts of our country that the officials of the German Government have through hired agents inspired and set afoot the destruction of industrial plants, the dynamiting of bridges and canals, the burning of millions of dollars' worth of private property, and even the murder of innocent citizens. And yet there are those who say that we had no grievance and that Germany had done us no harm!

Within the last few days it has been disclosed that on January 22, 1917, Count von Bernstorff, the then German ambassador to the United States, sent to his Government the following communication:

I request authority to pay out up to $50,000 in order, as on former occasions, to influence Congress through the organizations you know of, which can perhaps prevent war. I am beginning in the meantime to act accordingly. In the above circumstances a public official German declaration in favor of Ireland is highly desirable in order to gain the support of Irish influence here.

Thus Germany's highest diplomatic agent in our country was seeking corruptly and covertly to influence the Congress of the United States by the use of money and thereby attack the integrity of our Government at its very heart. And still there are those claiming to be loyal citizens of this Republic who assume to say that Germany is as blameless as a "sucking dove."

But the things before mentioned did not form the basis of our declaration of war. They are only sidelights to the real issues.

As the war in Europe progressed the submarine question from time to time assumed very serious and portentous aspects to us and to our interests.

The submarine as an agent of destruction was a new thing in naval warfare. The status of this new weapon, as it affected belligerents and noncombatants, had not been determined by the maritime precedents nor international law at the beginning of this war. But surely the submarine, because of its deadly and diabolical destructiveness, could not claim immunity from the human edicts of the law of the seas built up through the centuries. Since the beginning of time the high seas have been recognized as the legitimate highways of all commerce between nations, and the principle that during a war naval operations should be so conducted that injury and death should be spared to noncombatants and the citizens of neutral countries is as old as civilization.

At this point in my address I desire to incorporate, by his permission, a part of the admirable address delivered by Hon. HENRY D. FLOOD, of Virginia, in the House of Representatives on April 5, 1917, on the occasion when Mr. FLOOD, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs presented the declaration of war for the consideration of the House. I take this liberty because said address presents in chronological order the developments of the submarine controversy up to the time of the declaration of war:

Germany gave notice on the 4th day of February, 1915, of her purpose to sink merchant vessels on the high seas without safeguarding the lives of noncombatants and the crews and passenger lists. Our Government on February 10 sent, through our Secretary of State, the Hon. William Jennings Bryan, a note of protest to the German Government, taking positive and splendid issue with it upon its proposed ruthless submarine warfare; and I will say, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Bryan never produced a finer document than the note to Germany on that occasion. It protested against the German proposed disregard of the precepts of international law and the instincts of humanity. This splendid document seemed to be effective, for on the 16th day of February the Imperial German Government replied to it in a friendly and satisfactory manner, conceding the propriety, the legality, and the right of the position taken by our Government.

That Government declared on the 16th of February that—

"It is very far indeed from the intention of the German Government * * * ever to destroy neutral lives and neutral property."

That was promise No. 1, made by the German Government to this Government, to respect the lives of neutrals and neutral properties. Their reply goes on to say:

"The commanders of the German submarines have been instructed, as was already stated in the note of the 4th instant, to abstain from violence to American ships when they are recognizable as such"—

A distinct promise on the part of the German Government to respect the rights of American ships when they are recognized as such. And yet within the past three weeks, Mr. Chairman, they have sent to the bottom of the ocean seven American merchant ships which they recognized as such, and which they torpedoed and sunk without warning and without notice and without the slightest opportunity for the passengers and crew to have their lives saved.

That is war. That is the war that the German Government is making upon this country to-day.

Our Government had every right to believe that this promise of February 16, 1915, could be relied upon, and our Government did rely upon that promise. Nevertheless the German Government proceeded to carry out its plans of submarine warfare as if that promise had never been made, and it torpedoed on March 27, just a little over a month after that promise was made, the British passenger ship Falaba, with Americans on board, on which occasion one American lost his life. On April 28, less than two months and a half after this first promise was made, the American steamer Cushing was attacked by airships, and on May 1 the American tank steamer Gulflight was attacked by submarines; and on May 7, less than three months after the promise was made, the British passenger liner Lusitania was sunk, when 114 American lives were lost; and later on in that month, the American steamer Nebraskan was attacked by submarines and sunk; in all of which ships there were 125 citizens of the United States murdered and hundreds of noncombatants, including men, women, and children of other nations, lost their lives, and a number of American citizens had their lives put in jeopardy. Later on, on June 28, the British mule boat Armenian was torpedoed, and 20 Americans lost their lives.

The American Government vigorously protested against these outrages, expressing its condemnation of Germany's violation of the laws of nations, the instincts of humanity, and her agreements with this country in murdering innocent American citizens and noncombatants of other nations. The German Government replied to these protests, making one excuse after another, and impressing our Government with its intention in the future to observe the rules of the sea, the laws of nations, and the principles of humanity.

On July 8, 1915, in a note to Ambassador Gerard, arguing in defense of its method of warfare, and particularly of the submarine commander in the Lusitania case, the German Government stated—and here is promise No. 2; listen to what the German Government said to the United States on that occasion:

"The Imperial Government therefore repeats the assurances that American ships will not be hindered in the prosecution of legitimate shipping and the lives of American citizens on neutral vessels shall not be placed in jeopardy.

"In order to exclude any unforeseen dangers to American passenger steamers * * * the German submarines will be instructed to permit the free and safe passage of such passenger steamers when made recognizable by special markings and notified a reasonable time in advance."

This promise was unequivocal—there was no string to it—but notwithstanding that fact seven American ships have been sunk in violation of it in the last few weeks.

This was a promise to safeguard American ships and American passengers upon neutral ships. But notwithstanding this, subsequent to the 8th of July, 1915, a number of vessels—namely, the Orduna and Leo, July 9; Leelanaw, July 25; Arabic and Nicosum, August 19; and the Hesperian, September 4—carrying American citizens were attacked and sunk by submarines and 25 American lives were lost in such ships.

Following these events, conspicuous by their wantonness and violation of every rule of humanity and maritime warfare, the German ambassador, by instructions from his Government, on December 1, 1915, gave the following assurances to the Government of the United States. This is promise No. 3. Here is what the German Government promised upon this occasion:

"Liners will not be sunk by our submarines without warning and without safety of the lives of noncombatants, provided that the liners do not try to escape or offer resistance."

That promise seems clear and very distinct.

On September 9, in reply to the submarine attack on the Orduna, the German Government gave assurance No. 4, in the following language:

"The first attack on the Orduna of a torpedo was not in accordance with the existing instructions, which provide that large passenger steamers are to be torpedoed only after previous warning and after the rescuing of passengers and crew."

The German Government, Mr. Chairman, could not more clearly have stated that liners or large passenger steamers would not be torpedoed except upon previous warning and after the passengers and crew had been put in places of safety.

On November 29 the German Government stated in connection with the case of the American vessel William P. Frye—and this is pledge No. 5, given by the German Government to our Government not to conduct a ruthless submarine warfare. It said:

"The German naval forces will sink only such American vessels as are loaded with absolute contraband when the three conditions provided by the declaration of London are present. In this the German Government quite shares the view of the American Government that all possible care must be taken for the security of the crews and passengers of the vessels to be sunk. Consequently the persons found on board of a vessel may not be ordered into a lifeboat except when the general conditions—that is to say, the weather, the condition of the sea, and the neighborhood of the coast—afford absolute certainty that the boats will reach the nearest port."

Mr. Chairman, there could hardly be a more positive and definite agreement made by the German Government with this Government not to sink passenger liners until they had been warned, and not only until the passengers and crew had been afforded an opportunity to escape with their lives, but the commanders of the German submarines were to take into consideration the conditions surrounding the liner—the condition of the weather, the condition of the sea, and its proximity to a port—and they should not be ordered into boats unless those conditions gave absolute certainty that they could reach land in safety.

Following this accumulated series of assurances though, which were brought about by the strong protest of our Government against the violation of their previous promises and their illegal submarine warfare, there does not seem to have been the slightest abatement in the rigor of submarine warfare, for attacks were made in the Mediterranean upon an American steamer on December 3, upon another American steamer on December 5, a Japanese steamer on December 21 of that year, and the passenger liner Persia on December 30. In the sinking of the Persia, out of a total of 500 human beings on board only 165 were saved. Among those lost was an American consul traveling to his post.

On January 7, eight days after the sinking of the Persia, after a protest had been sent by us to the German Government, that Government again notified our Government through its ambassador in Washington that it would no longer pursue this character of submarine warfare, saying:

"First, German submarines in the Mediterranean had from the beginning orders to conduct cruiser warfare against enemy merchant vessels only in accordance with the general principle of international law, and in particular the measures of reprisal as applied to the war zone around the British Isles were to be excluded."

But yet we have never heard of the punishment of the submarine commanders and crews who destroyed these vessels and murdered these people in the Mediterranean in violation of that instruction of their Government.

"Second. German submarines are, therefore, permitted to destroy enemy merchant vessels in the Mediterranean—that is, passenger as well as freight ships—as far as they do not try to escape or offer resistance, only after passengers and crews have been accorded safety."

That is all that our Government demanded of them. That is all that the United States required of the German Government in the conduct of its submarine warfare. We demanded that they should not murder unoffending noncombatants—men, women, and children—upon the high seas, but that when they determined to sink a merchant vessel they could do so only after they had given warning to that vessel and provided for the safety of the people on board. And here is the sixth distinct, positive, clear, and unequivocal promise that the German Government made to the Government of the United States to observe these rules of submarine warfare. Clearly, Mr. Chairman, the assurances of that Government that neutral and enemy merchant vessels, passenger as well as freight ships, should not be destroyed, except upon the passengers and crews being accorded safety, were by these promises declared to be the official position of the Imperial German Government.

On February 16, 1916, the German ambassador communicated to the Department of State an expression of regret for the loss of American lives on the Lusitania and proposed to pay a suitable indemnity. In the course of this note the seventh promise is made to this Government to conduct a decent submarine warfare. It said:

"Germany has * * * limited her submarine warfare because of her long-standing friendship with the United States and because by the sinking of the Lusitania, which caused the death of citizens of the United States, the German retaliation affected neutrals, which was not the intention, as retaliation should be confined to enemy subjects."

But notwithstanding this assurance, on March 1, 1916, the unarmed French passenger steamer Patria, carrying a number of American citizens, was attacked without warning. On March 9 the Norwegian bark Silius was torpedoed by an unseen submarine and one of the seven Americans on board was injured. On March 16 the Dutch passenger steamer Tubantia was sunk in the North Sea by a torpedo. On March 16 the British steamer Berwindale was torpedoed without warning, with four Americans on board. On March 24 the British unarmed steamer Englishman was, after a chase, torpedoed and sunk by the submarine U–19, as a result of which one American on board perished. On March 24 the unarmed French cross-channel steamer Sussex was torpedoed without warning and several of the 24 American passengers were injured. On March 27 the unarmed British liner Manchester Engineer was sunk by an explosion without prior warning, with Americans on board, and on March 28 the British steamer Eagle Point was chased, overtaken, and sunk by a torpedo after the persons on board had taken to the boats.

These lawless acts upon merchant vessels and the lives of American citizens and the repeated violation of promises made by the German Government to our Government, and also the violations of the treaty obligations brought us to the point where it seems there was nothing for our Government to do but to break off diplomatic relations with the German Government and take whatever steps a breach of diplomatic relations might lead to.

In a communication of April 8, 1916, the American Government said:

"If it is still the purpose of the Imperial Government to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines without regard to what the Government of the United States must consider the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the Government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue. Unless the Imperial Government should not immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels the Government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire altogether."

The German Government replied to this communication on May 4, 1916, giving definite assurances that new orders had been issued to the German naval forces "in accordance with the general principles of visit and search and the destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law," and again assured our Government that under these rules no American citizens' lives would be taken and no merchant vessel would be sunk without warning and without an opportunity for the people, passengers, and crew aboard the ships to escape with their lives.

Under this assurance the country breathed easier. The breach of diplomatic relations was avoided and war seemed to have been averted. I believed, and many other people in this country believed, that President Wilson had accomplished the greatest diplomatic triumph of the century. Germany had given this promise to abandon and not resume ruthless submarine warfare, and we credited her with sincerity. She had promised that in the future this warfare would be conducted according to the principles of visit and search, that passenger vessels would not be sunk, that due warning would be given the vessels, and that submarines might seek to destroy only when resistance was offered or escape attempted.

This method of submarine warfare which Germany promised to conduct was substantially lived up to from the 4th of May, 1916, to the 1st day of February of the present year. But on January 31, 1917, the German Government served this notice upon our Government:

"Germany will meet the illegal measures of her enemies by forcibly preventing in a zone around Great Britain, France, Italy, and in the eastern Mediterranean all navigation, that of neutrals included, from and to England and from and to France, etc. All ships met with in that zone will be sunk."

That notice was not only opposed to every principle of international law but to every dictate of humanity, and it was in direct contravention of these eight promises that the German Government had during the preceding two years made to our Government. It is in contravention of the treaty between this country and Prussia entered into in 1828, and to which Germany has appealed recently in some of her controversies with our country.

In view of these facts and of this Government's warning of April 18, 1916, and the pledge of the Imperial German Government of May 4 of the same year, it could not have been expected by the German Government that this Government would permit it to fence off the high seas at its pleasure, to deny American ships and American citizens the right to go upon these seas in safety, where every nation, including Germany, conceded they had a perfect right to go, so that Government's notice of January 31 was little short of a declaration of war against this country.

On the 3d of February, 1917, our Government sent the following declaration to the Imperial German Government through its ambassador, Count von Bernstorff:

"In view of this declaration, which withdraws suddenly and without prior intimation the solemn assurance given in the Imperial Government's note of May 4, 1916, this Government has no alternative consistent with the dignity and honor of the United States but to take the course which it explicitly announced in its note of April 18, 1916, it would take in the event that the Imperial Government did not declare and effect an abandonment of the methods of submarine warfare then employed and to which the Imperial Government now purpose again to resort.

"The President has, therefore, directed me to announce to your excellency that all diplomatic relations between the United States and the German Empire are severed and that the American ambassador at Berlin will be immediately withdrawn, and in accordance with such announcement to deliver to your excellency your passports"—

Thus breaking off diplomatic relations, recalled our ambassador in Germany, and gave the German ambassador, Count von Bernstorff, his passports. On February 3, 1917, following the breaking off of diplomatic relations one American ship was sunk, and since that date seven ships flying the American flag and bearing American registry have been torpedoed. One of these vessels was an armed merchant vessel. The loss of life on these ships has been between 25 and 30 American souls. Twenty-five or 30 American citizens traveling on American ships under the American flag, expecting its protection, as they had a right to expect, have been ruthlessly murdered by the German Government. In addition to that, many foreign vessels of both belligerents and neutrals have been sunk since February 1, 1917, and a number of American lives destroyed and many more put in jeopardy.

Mr. Chairman, this is war; it is nothing but war—war waged by the German Government upon the people and the flag of the United States.

The note from the German Government dated January 31, 1917, addressed to our Secretary of State, contained the following conditions and stipulations under which they would allow American vessels, under the American flag, manned by American sailors, carrying American passengers and commerce, to sail the high seas to their destination:

Sailing of regular American passenger steamers may continue undisturbed after February 1, 1917, if—

(a) The port of destination is Falmouth.

(b) Sailing to or coming from that port, course is taken via the Scilly Islands and a point 50° north, 20° west.

(c) The steamers are marked in the following way, which must not be allowed to other vessels in American ports: On ships' hull and superstructure three vertical stripes 1 meter wide each to be painted alternately white and red. Each mast should show a large flag checkered white and red, and the stern the American national flag. Care should be taken that, during dark, national flag and painted marks are easily recognizable from a distance and that the boats are well lighted throughout.

(d) One steamer a week sails in each direction with arrival at Falmouth on Sunday and departure from Falmouth on Wednesday.

(e) The United States Government guarantees that no contraband (according to German contraband list) is carried by those steamers.

This order from the German Government covered a zone 1,200 miles long and 1,000 miles wide along the western coast of Europe and deliberately warned us, a neutral Nation, that any ship entering that part of the high seas would be torpedoed and sunk without warning and without any opportunity for the passengers and crews to escape death in the waters of the ocean. Through that zone it was estimated that last year three-fifths of our export foreign trade passed. Through it passed last year two-thirds of our export of wheat, five-sixths of our hog products, and six-sevenths of our cotton products. In other words, the German Government said to the cotton farmer of my section of the country, that this product of his farm, which was his chief money crop and the price of which was absolutely fixed by the amount of foreign consumption, should not be sent through the legimitate channels of commerce in American vessels to cotton consumers in Europe. Those same cotton farmers well remember what happened to them in 1914 at the outbreak of the war when the foreign trade in cotton was shut off and the price immediately dropped to 5 and 6 cents per pound. The German Government said to us that our people should not exercise the right in a legitimate way to use the high seas created by God Almighty for the honest purposes of men, to be used as highways of communication; and that if we attempted to exercise that right our vessels and our commerce and our people would be sent to the bottom of the sea. Before the declaration of war, in the course of her submarine operations, Germany deliberately and in cold blood and in wanton violation of all the laws of God and man sent to their tombs in the shifting sands of the sea 235 American citizens—men, women, and little children.

The Secretary of State had prepared at my request a list of names of said victims, the vessel upon which they were murdered, and the date of their death, which list, for the information of the House and country, I shall insert in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks.

Do not forget, gentlemen, that all of these were American citizens, claiming the protection of the American flag. Suppose all of the 235 had been resident citizens of my district or yours—our neighbors and our friends—what would have been our indignation and resentment over their assassination? Because they came from scattered sections of the country is no reason to diminish our righteous protests against their unlawful and savage slaughter. [Applause.]

If a great Nation like ours, claiming to be the greatest Republic on the face of the earth, to whose flag and whose institution we devote our loyalty and allegiance, would not take up arms to resent and to prevent such outrages as these, then I am constrained to confess that we have forgotten the heritage of our fathers and are no longer worthy to claim a place either in the respect or admiration of the world. [Applause.]

Let me suggest a homely comparison of the principle invoked by us. Running east and west through the little city in which I live is a fine county and part of a national highway. For generations it has been a public road over which the farmers have brought their cotton and farm products to market. It is a highway of trade, the only one available to many of my people. Suppose some farmer living along the road should get into a dispute with his neighbor and serve notice on him that if he attempted to travel that road to take his cotton to market he would stand behind a tree and kill him on sight in day or night time; and moreover, served notice on all his neighbors living on that road, with whom he had no quarrel, that they nor their families should pass that way to market under pain of assassination? And to make the illustration more complete he carried his threat into execution; he waylaid a peaceable and unsuspecting citizen traveling that highway and shot from ambush without any sort of warning and killed the man's mules and also the man, and his wife and his infant child, who were in the wagon with him. What standing would such a desperado have in a court of justice or what mercy could he expect? And that was exactly what the German Government was doing to American ships and American citizens on the highway of the seas where they had every legal right to be to carry American commerce to legitimate markets of the world; and although we protested and almost upon our supplicating knees begged them to stop this outrageous action, the Imperial German Government said, "No; we know no law save that of power and necessity and we propose to keep on sinking your ships and murdering your citizens as long as we please and as many as we please." There was nothing for us to do as a Nation except either to crawl and whine and cringe before the behest of our masters—the Hohenzollerns—or to fight. And we chose to fight. [Applause.] As President Wilson said in his memorable address to this body:

There is one choice we can not make—we are incapable of making—we will not choose the path of submission and suffer the most sacred rights of our Nation and our people to be ignored or violated.

We are fighting a war of self-defense, because there can be no question of doubt that it was the dream, the philosophy, the teaching, the inexorable purpose of the Prussian dynasty to subjugate by force and to rule the world.

Hear the words of Frederick II, one of the greatest of his house, whose policy of statecraft has been followed and enlarged in viciousness by the present Kaiser:

If possible, the powers of Europe should be made envious against one another in order to give occasion for a coup when the opportunity arises.

If a ruler is obliged to sacrifice his own person for the welfare of his subjects, he is all the more obliged to sacrifice treaty engagements the continuance of which would be harmful to his country. Is it better that a nation should perish or that a sovereign should break his treaty?

Statesmanship can be reduced to three principles: First, to maintain your power, and, according to circumstances, to extend it; second, to form an alliance only for your own advantage; third, to command fear and respect even in the most disastrous times.

Do not be ashamed of making interested alliances from which you yourself can derive the whole advantage. Do not make the foolish mistake of not breaking them when you believe your interests require it.

Above all, uphold the following maxim: To despoil your neighbors is to deprive them of the means of injuring you.

When he is about to conclude a treaty with some foreign power, if a sovereign remembers he is a Christian he is lost.

The following is an extract from a book written a few years ago by Freiherr von Edelsheim, a member of the German general staff in 1901:

It is questionable whether there is anything to be gained in occupying for any length of time so large a territory as the United States. The fact that one or two of her provinces were occupied by invaders would not alone move the Americans to sue for peace. To accomplish this end the invaders would have to inflict real material damage by injuring the whole country through the successful seizure of many of the Atlantic seaports in which the threads of the entire wealth of the nation meet.

It should be so managed that a line of land operations would be in close juncture with the fleet, through which we would be in a position to seize within a short time many of these important and rich cities, to interrupt their means of supply, disorganize all government affairs, assume control of all useful buildings, confiscate all war and transport supplies, and, lastly, to impose heavy indemnities. For enterprises of this sort small land forces would answer our purpose, for it would be unwise for the American garrisons to attempt an attack.

Their excellently developed railways will enable them to concentrate their troops in a relatively short time at the various recognized landing places on the coast. But there are many other splendid landings, and it appears feasible for the invading corps to conduct its operations on these points with the cooperation of the fleet. The land corps can either advance aggressively against the concentrated opposing forces or through embarking evade an attack and land at a new place.

As a matter of fact, Germany is the only great power which is in a position to conquer the United States.

I also quote from the utterances of a few of the leading German soldiers, statesmen, and philosophers:

As the German bird, the eagle, hovers high over all the creatures of the earth, so also should the German feel that he is raised high above all other nations who surround him, and whom he sees in the limitless depth beneath him. (Prof. W. Sobart, H. U. H., p. 143.)

A war fought and lost would destroy our laboriously gained political importance * * * would shake the influence of German thought in the civilized world, and thus check the general progress of mankind in its healthy development, for which a flourishing Germany is the essential condition. Our next war will be fought for the highest interest of our country and of mankind. This will invest it with importance in the world's history. "World power or downfall!" will be our rallying cry. (Gen. v. Bernhardi, G. N. W., p. 154.)

We have become a nation of wrath; we think only of the war. * * * We execute God's Almighty will, and the edicts of His justice we will fulfill, imbued with holy rage, in vengeance upon the ungodly. God calls us to murderous battles, even if worlds should thereby fall to ruins. * * * We are woven together like the chastening lash of war; we flame aloft like the lightning; like the gardens of roses our wounds blossom at the gates of Heaven. (F. Philippi, quoted in H. A. H., p. 52.)

We are beginning slowly, humbly, and yet with a deep gladness, to divine God's intentions. It may sound proud, my friends, but we are conscious that it is also in humbleness that we say it; the German soul is God's soul; it shall and will rule over mankind. ("On the German God," by Pastor W. Lehmann, quoted in H. A. H., p. 83.)

Verily the Bible is our book. * * * It was given and assigned to us, and we read in it the original text of our destiny, which proclaim to mankind salvation or disaster—according as we will it. ("War Devotions," by Pastor J. Rump, quoted in H. A. H., p. 134.)

We want to become a world people. Let us remind ourselves that the belief in our mission as a world people has arisen from our originally purely spiritual impulse to absorb the world into ourselves. (Prof. F. Meinecke, D. D. E., p. 37.)

Our frontiers are too narrow. We must become land hungry, must acquire new regions for settlement, otherwise we will be a sinking people, a stunted race. True love for our people and its children commands us to think of their future, however much they may accuse us of quarrelsomeness and lust of war. If the Germanic people shrank from war it would be as good as dead. (Baron v. Vietinghoff-Scheel, at meeting of Pan-German League, Erfurt, Sept. 1912. Nippold, D. C., p. 72.)

Every great people needs new territory; it must expand over foreign soil; it must expel the foreigners by the power of the sword. (K. Wagner, K., p. 80.)

If we do not soon acquire new territory a frightful catastrophe is inevitable. It signifies little whether it be in Brazil, in Siberia, in Anatolia, or in South Africa. * * * To-day, as 2,000 years ago, when the Cimbriand the Teutons beat at the gates of Rome, a cry arises ever louder and louder, "Give us land, give us new land!" (A. Wirth, V. U. W., p. 227.)

Such was the damnable doctrine of force, reprisal, treachery, and conquest with which Prussian dominion was to ultimately rule the world, the calm and submissive United States of America included.

But, sir, they forgot the fiber, the temper, the traditions, the soul of America. They forgot that we yet remember for what Washington fought, for what Jefferson and Hamilton dreamed and builded; for what Andrew Jackson and Winfield Scott led their conquering legions. They forgot that in America there yet runs in the veins of her people the same kind of blood which pulsed in the heart of Ulysses S. Grant and Robert E. Lee. [Applause.] They do not seem to remember the booming of Dewey's guns at Manila nor of Schley's at Santiago Bay. [Applause.]

They forget that as a people we propose to perpetuate our gratitude for the sacrifices of our sires at Valley Forge and Lexington and Kings Mountain, and that the long struggles of our people through the years of our history in peace and war to build up and sustain here in the Western World a Republic of freedom and security for men, in which to work out their destiny of peace and a better civilization, shall not be dissipated and destroyed to satisfy the brutal ambition of a Prussian King. [Applause.]

The President is sending our armies abroad to help our allies fight back the invader because it is better for our men to fight on foreign soil than on our own. When you have an enemy to destroy and want to do it as quickly as possible, you must go where that enemy is. We sought our enemy in Mexico, in Cuba, and in the Philippines, and in the Mediterranean with the Barbary pirates.

If Germany is not defeated in Europe, as sure as fate, they will invade our shores. Do the men of America want to take any chances on having their glorious womanhood suffer the unspeakable shame of the 10,000 Serbian girls taken behind the German lines; or to have our children and old men desecrated as were those in Belgium and northern France? Shall we hazard for a minute the chance of having set up in our midst a code of moral conduct referred to in the editorial I read? God forbid!

IN LEAGUE WITH HELL.

Germany has lost thousands and hundreds of thousands of her men in the effort of the war lord to dominate the earth. It is being published in England and America that the German Government, seeking to replace these men, has practically commanded the girls and widows of the nation to bear children and that these fatherless children will be called "legitimate" and that the Government will support them. A cannibal chief would hardly stoop to such a course to repopulate the jungles in which he reigns. A government, claiming to be civilized, that would thus encourage and even command prostitution on the part of its women deserves death. Surely it is in the interest of the Germans themselves that the world is resisting such monstrous power. The government that makes war on women and children, drops its bombs on sleeping towns, and sinks ships of neutrals, and forces its own women to play the part of harlots should be utterly annihilated. Its promoters are in league with hell, and Satan doubtless as soon as possible will share his kingdom with them.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

If this Nation, with its creed of freedom and its Constitution of justice, was worth the sacrifices of our fathers to establish, surely it has not degenerated into such miserable station that it is unworthy for the present generation to defend.

Unwillingly forced into a contest for the preservation of our right to live under the humane law of nations and the benign dictates of a quickened national conscience, we will not now sheathe the sword until this modern "scourge of God" shall have been swept from his throne of barbaric power and the world made safe for eternal peace and against all future war by having it written above the ruins of the now glittering palace of the Hohenzollerns at Potsdam at least the spirit of Poe's Ode to the Coliseum of the Cæsars:

Here, where a hero fell, a column falls!
Here, where the mimic eagle glared in gold,
A midnight vigil holds the swarthy bat!
Here, where the dames of Rome their gilded hair
Waved to the wind, now wave the reed and thistle!
Here, where on golden throne the monarch lolled,
Glides, specterlike, unto his marble home,
Lit by the wan light of the horned moon,
The swift and silent lizard of the stones!

[Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have to proffer his request to-morrow, when the Chair will put it to the House.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. JAMES. I announce that my colleague [Mr. BECKHAM] is detained from the Senate on account of illness. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

Mr. GERRY, Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. FALL, Mr. KELLOGG, and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] is unavoidably absent owing to illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-six Senators having answered to the roll call, there is a quorum present.

AMENDMENT OF THE NATURALIZATION LAWS.

Mr. CALDER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business, the bill (S. 2854) to amend the naturalization laws, be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5723, commonly known as the war-risk insurance bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, as chairman of the Finance Committee, I referred this bill to a subcommittee, of which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] was chairman. When that subcommittee reported I was still unable, by reason of my other duties, to attend the meetings of the committee while the bill was being considered. The Senator from Mississippi has had absolute charge of the matter both in the subcommittee and in the full committee, and I have asked him, and he has very graciously consented to my request, to take charge of the bill and manage it upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for action on the committee amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Let me suggest to the Senator that the bill is not very long, and while we have a number of Senators here, it might be well to have the bill read through. The bill with the amendments has just been placed upon our desks this morning, and as many Senators have not read the bill it seems to me it would be wise to read the bill through now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withdraw the request under those circumstances, although it seems to me that Senators could read the bill as we go along just as well.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we can not hear a word on this side on account of the confusion in the Chamber.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have withdrawn the request to dispense with the formal reading of the bill in consequence of what was said by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. President, before the Secretary proceeds with the reading, I want to express the hope that we may get the bill with the amendments through by to-morrow before we adjourn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"ARTICLE I.

"SECTION 1. That there is established in the Treasury Department a bureau to be known as the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, the director of which shall receive a salary at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

"That there be in such bureau a Division of Marine and Seamen's Insurance and a Division of Military and Naval Insurance in charge of a commissioner of Marine and Seamen's Insurance and a commissioner of Military and Naval Insurance, respectively, each of whom shall receive a salary of $4,000 per annum."

SEC. 2. That such act of September 2, 1914, as amended, is hereby amended by adding new sections, as follows:

"SEC. 12. That sections 2 to 9, inclusive, shall be construed to refer only to the Division of Marine and Seamen's Insurance.

"SEC. 13. That the director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall administer, execute, and enforce the provisions of this act, and for that purpose have full power and authority to make rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this act, necessary or appropriate to carry out its purposes, and shall decide all questions arising under the act, except as otherwise provided in sections 5 and 405. Wherever under any provision or provisions of the act regulations are directed or authorized to be made, such regulations, unless the context otherwise requires, shall or may be made by the director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury. The director shall adopt reasonable and proper rules to govern the procedure of the divisions, to regulate the matter of the compensation, if any, to be paid to claim agents and attorneys for services in connection with any of the matter provided for in articles 2, 3, and 4, and to regulate and provide for the nature and extent of the proofs and evidence and the method of taking and furnishing the same in order to establish the right to benefits of allowance, allotment, compensation, or insurance provided for in this act, the forms of application of those claiming to be entitled to such benefits, the method of making investigations and medical examinations, and the manner and form of adjudications and awards.

"SEC. 14. That the bureau and its divisions shall have such deputies, assistants, actuaries, clerks, and other employees as may be from time to time provided by Congress. The bureau shall, so far as practicable, by arrangement with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively, make use of the services of surgeons in the Army and Navy. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to establish an advisory board consisting of three members skilled in the practice of insurance against death or disability for the purpose of assisting the Division of Military and Naval Insurance in fixing premium rates and in the adjustment of claims for losses under the contracts of insurance provided for in article 4 and in adjusting claims for compensation under article 3; compensation for the persons so appointed to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, but not to exceed $20 a day each while actually employed.

"SEC. 15. That for the purposes of this act the director, commissioners, and deputy commissioners shall have power to issue subpœnas for and compel the attendance of witnesses within a radius of 100 miles, to require the production of books, papers, documents, and other evidence, to administer oaths and to examine witnesses upon any matter within the jurisdiction of the bureau. The director may obtain such information and such reports from officials and employees of the departments of the Government of the United States and of the States as may be agreed upon by the heads of the respective departments. In case of disobedience to a subpœna, the bureau may invoke the aid of any district court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence, and such court, within the jurisdiction of which the inquiry is carried on, may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any officer, agent, or employee of any corporation or other person, issue an order requiring such corporation or other person to appear before the bureau, or to give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. Any person so required to attend as a witness shall be allowed and paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witnesses in the district courts of the United States.

"SEC. 16. That the director shall submit annually to the Secretary of the Treasury estimates of the appropriations necessary for the work of the bureau.

"SEC. 17. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, for the payment of all expenses incident to the work authorized under this act, including salaries of the director and commissioners and of such deputies, assistants, accountants, experts, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary, traveling expenses, rent and equipment of offices, typewriters and exchange of same, purchase of law books and books of reference, printing and binding to be done at the Government Printing Office, and all other necessary expenses. With the exception of the director, the commissioners, and such special experts as the Secretary of the Treasury may from time to time find necessary for the conduct of the work of the bureau, all employees of the bureau shall be appointed from lists of eligibles to be supplied by the Civil Service Commission and in accordance with the civil-service law.

"SEC. 18. That there is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $141,000,000, to be known as the military and naval family allowance appropriation, for the payment of the family allowances provided by Article II. Payments out of this appropriation shall be made upon and in accordance with awards by the commissioner of the division of military and naval insurance.

"SEC. 19. That there is hereby appropriated, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,150,000, to be known as the military and naval compensation appropriation, for the payment of the compensation, funeral expenses, services, and supplies provided by Article III. Payments out of this appropriation shall be made upon and in accordance with awards by the director.

All premiums that may be collected for the insurance provided by the provisions of Article IV shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury to the credit of this appropriation.

"Such sum, including all premium payments, is hereby made available for the payment of the liabilities of the United States incurred under contracts of insurance made under the provisions of Article IV. Payments from this appropriation shall be made upon and in accordance with awards by the director.

"SEC. 21. That there shall be set aside as a separate fund in the Treasury, to be known as the military and naval pay deposit fund, all sums held out of pay as provided by section 203 of this act. Such fund, including all additions, is hereby made available for the payment of the sums so held and deposited, with interest, as provided in section 203, and the amount necessary to pay interest is hereby appropriated.

"SEC. 22. That for the purpose of this act marriage shall be conclusively presumed, in the absence of proof, that there is a legal spouse living, if the man and woman have lived together in the openly acknowledged relation of husband and wife during the two years immediately preceding the date of the declaration of war, or the date of enlistment or of entrance into or employment in active service in the military or naval forces of the United States if subsequent to such declaration, or during the two years immediately preceding the man's death or the beginning of the disability.

The monthly compulsory allotment shall be in an amount equal to the family allowance hereinafter specified except that it shall not be more than one-half the pay, or less than $15; but for a wife living separate and apart under court order or written agreement or for a former wife divorced, it shall not exceed the amount specified in the court order or agreement to be paid to her.

Such deposits shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum, with semiannual rests and, when payable, shall be paid principal and interest to the enlisted man, if living, otherwise to any beneficiary or beneficiaries he may have designated, or if there be no such beneficiary, then to his next of kin.

SEC. 204. The family allowance shall be paid from the time of enlistment to death in or one month after discharge from the service, but not for more than one month after the termination of the present war emergency. No family allowance shall be made for any period preceding declaration of war. SEC. 205. That family allowances for members of class A shall be paid only if and while a compulsory allotment is made to a member or members of such class. The monthly family allowance to a former wife divorced shall be payable only out of the difference, if any, between the monthly family allowance to the other members of class A and the sum of $50. For a wife living separate and apart under court order or written agreement or to a former wife divorced the monthly allowance, together with the allotment, if any, shall not exceed the amount specified in the court order or agreement to be paid to her.

SEC. 206. That family allowances to members of class B shall be granted only if and while the member is dependent in whole or in part on the enlisted man, and then only if and while the enlisted man makes a monthly allotment of his pay for such member or members equal to the amount of the monthly family allowance as hereinabove specified, except that—

(a) The maximum monthly allotment so required to be made to members of class B shall be one-half of his pay.

SEC. 208. That as between a wife, including a former wife divorced, and the children not in her custody, and as between children, the amount of the allotment and family allowance shall be apportioned as may be prescribed by regulations.

SEC. 209. That allotments and family allowances shall be paid to or for the beneficiaries, as may be provided by regulations to be made by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, respectively.

SEC. 210. That upon receipt of any application for family allowance the commissioner shall make all proper investigations and shall make an award, which award shall be certified to the War Department or Navy Department, as may be proper. Whenever the commissioner shall have reason to believe that an allowance has been improperly made or that the conditions have changed, he shall investigate or reinvestigate and may modify the award. The amount of each monthly allotment and allowance shall be determined according to the conditions then existing.

ARTICLE III.

COMPENSATION FOR DEATH OR DISABILITY.

SEC. 300. That for death or disability resulting from personal injury suffered or disease contracted in the course of the service in the line of duty, by any commissioned officer or enlisted man or by any member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) when employed in the active service under the War Department or Navy Department, the United States shall pay compensation as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 301. That if death results from injury—

If from a marriage contracted before or within 10 years after the injury the deceased leaves a widow or child, or if he leaves a widowed mother substantially dependent upon him for support, the monthly compensation shall be the following percentages of his pay:

(a) For a widow alone, $35.

(b) For a widow and one child, $45.

(c) For a widow and two children, $52.50, with $5 for each additional child up to two.

(d) If there be no widow, then for one child, $20.

(e) For two children, $35.

(f) For three children, $45, with $10 for each additional child up to two.

(g) For a widowed mother, $30. The amount payable under this subdivision shall not be greater than a sum which, when added to the total amount payable to the widow and children, does not exceed $75. This compensation shall be payable for the death of but one child, and no compensation for the death of a child shall be payable if such widowed mother is in receipt of compensation under the provisions of this article for the death of her husband. Such compensation shall be payable whether her widowhood arises before or after the death of the person and whenever her condition is such that if the person were living the widowed mother would have been substantially dependent upon him for support.

If the death occurs after discharge or resignation from service, the United States shall pay burial expenses not to exceed $100, as may be fixed by regulations.

The payment of compensation to a widow or widowed mother shall continue until her death or remarriage.

The payment of compensation to or for a child shall continue until such child reaches the age of 18 years or marries, or if such child be incapable, because of mental or physical infirmity, of pursuing any substantially gainful occupation, then until marriage or death or until such incapacity ceases.

Whenever the compensation payable to or for the benefit of any person under the provisions of this section is terminated by the happening of the contingency upon which it is limited, the compensation thereafter for the remaining beneficiary or beneficiaries, if any, shall be the amount which would have been payable to them if they had been the sole original beneficiaries.

As between the widow and the children not in her custody, and as between children, the amount of the compensation shall be apportioned as may be prescribed by regulations.

SEC. 302. That if disability results from the injury—

(1) If and while the disability is total so as to make it impracticable for the injured person to pursue any gainful occupation, the monthly compensation shall be the following amounts:

(a) If he has neither wife nor child living, $40.

(b) If he has a wife but no child living, $55.

(c) If he has a wife and one child living, $65.

(d) If he has a wife and two or more children living, $75.

(e) If he has no wife but one child living, $50, with $10 for each additional child up to two.

(f) If he has a widowed mother substantially dependent on him for support, then, in addition to the above, $10.

To an injured person who is totally disabled and in addition so helpless as to be in constant need of a nurse or attendant, such additional sum shall be paid, but not exceeding $20 per month, as the director may deem reasonable: Provided, however, That for the loss of both feet or both hands or both eyes, or for becoming totally blind from causes occurring in the service of the United States, the rate of compensation shall be $100 per month: Provided further, That no allowance shall be made for nurse or attendant.

(2) If and while the disability is partial, the monthly compensation shall be a percentage of the compensation that would be payable for his total disability, equal to the degree of the reduction in earning capacity resulting from the disability, but no compensation shall be payable for a reduction in earning capacity rated at less than 10 per cent.

A schedule of ratings of reductions in earning capacity from specific injuries or combinations of injuries of a permanent nature shall be adopted and applied by the bureau. Ratings may be as high as 100 per cent. The ratings shall be based, as far as practicable, upon the average impairments of earning capacity resulting from such injuries in civil occupations and not upon the impairment in earning capacity in each individual case, so that there shall be no reduction in the rate of compensation for individual success in overcoming the handicap of a permanent injury. The bureau shall from time to time readjust this schedule of ratings in accordance with actual experience.

(3) In addition to the compensation above provided, the injured person shall be furnished by the United States such reasonable medical, surgical, and hospital services and supplies, including artificial limbs, trusses, and similar appliances, as the director may determine to be useful and reasonably necessary.

(4) The amount of each monthly payment shall be determined according to the family conditions then existing.

SEC. 303. That every person applying for or in receipt of compensation for disability under the provisions of this article shall, as frequently and at such times and places as may be reasonably required, submit himself to examination by a medical officer of the United States or by a duly qualified physician designated or approved by the director. He may have a duly qualified physician designated and paid by him present to participate in such examination. For all examinations he shall, in the discretion of the director, be paid his reasonable traveling and other expenses and also loss of wages incurred in order to submit to such examination. If he refuses to submit himself for, or in any way obstructs, any examination, his right to claim compensation under this article shall be suspended until such refusal or obstruction ceases. No compensation shall be payable while such refusal or obstruction continues, and no compensation shall be payable for the intervening period.

Every person in receipt of compensation for disability shall submit to any reasonable medical or surgical treatment furnished by the bureau whenever requested by the bureau; and the consequences of unreasonable refusal to submit to any such treatment shall not be deemed to result from the injury compensated for.

SEC. 304. That if the injured person be deemed competent and not likely to become a public charge, upon his application and evidence satisfactory to the director that it will be for his best interests and for the best interests of his dependents, if any, future compensation payments for disability may be commuted in whole or in part for a lump sum equal to the present value of such payments or the proportion thereof to be computed, and such lump sum paid to the injured person in lieu of all further compensation or of the proportion so commuted of all future payments of compensatin: Provided, however, That in case of partial disability rated at 30 per cent or more of total disability, or in case of total disability, not more than 50 per cent of the compensation payments as for a man without a wife or child shall be so commutable. The basis for determining present values of future payments of compensation shall be prescribed from time to time by regulation.

SEC. 305. That in cases of dismemberment, of injuries to sight or hearing, and of other injuries commonly causing permanent disability, the injured person shall follow such course or courses of rehabilitation, reeducation, and vocational training as the United States may provide or procure to be provided. Should such course prevent the injured person from following a substantially gainful occupation while taking same, a form of enlistment may be required which shall bring the injured person into the military or naval service. Such enlistment shall entitle the person to full pay as during the last month of his active service, and his family to family allowances and allotments as hereinbefore provided, in lieu of all other compensation for the time being.

In case of his willful failure properly to follow such course or so to enlist, payment of compensation shall be suspended until such willful failure ceases and no compensation shall be payable for the intervening period.

SEC. 306. That upon its own motion or upon application the bureau may at any time review an award, and, in accordance with the facts found upon such review, may end, diminish, or increase the compensation previously awarded, or, if compensation has been refused or discontinued, may award compensation.

SEC. 307. That in this article the term "pay" means the monthly pay at the time of the injury, or in case of disability resulting from disease, at the time of the beginning of such disability, unless at such time he is not in the service of the United States, in which case it shall be taken to refer to the monthly pay at the time of his leaving such service.

SEC. 308. That no compensation shall be payable for death or disability which does not occur prior to or within one year after discharge or resignation from the service, except that where, after a medical examination made pursuant to regulations, at the time of discharge or resignation from the service, or within such reasonable time thereafter, not exceeding one year, as may be allowed by regulations, a certificate has been obtained from the director to the effect that the injured person at the time of his discharge or resignation was suffering from injury likely to result in death or disability, compensation shall be payable for death or disability, whenever occurring, proximately resulting from such injury.

SEC. 309. That compensation shall not be payable for death in the course of the service until the death be officially recorded in the department under which he may be serving. No compensation shall be payable for a period during which the man has been reported "missing" and a family allowance has been paid for him under the provisions of Article II.

SEC. 310. That no compensation shall be payable for death inflicted as a lawful punishment for a crime or military offense except when inflicted by the enemy. A dismissal or dishonorable or bad conduct discharge from the service shall bar and terminate all right to any compensation under the provisions of this article.

SEC. 311. That no compensation shall be payable unless a claim therefor be filed, in case of disability, within 10 years after discharge or resignation from the service, or, in case of death in the course of service, within 10 years after such death is officially recorded in the department under which he may be serving: Provided, however, That where compensation is payable for death or disability occurring after discharge or resignation from the service, claim must be made within 10 years after such death or the beginning of such disability.

The time herein provided may be extended by the director not to exceed one year for good cause shown. If at the time that any right accrues to any person under the provisions of this article, such person is a minor, or is of unsound mind or physically unable to make a claim, the time herein provided shall not begin to run until such disability ceases.

SEC. 312. That no compensation shall be payable for any period more than two years prior to the date of claim therefor, nor shall increased compensation be awarded to revert back more than one year prior to the date of claim therefor.

SEC. 313. That compensation under this article shall not be assignable, and shall be exempt from attachment and execution and from all taxation.

SEC. 314. That compensation under this article shall not be paid while the person is in receipt of service or retirement pay. Existing pension laws and laws providing for gratuities or payment in the event of death in the service shall not be applicable after the enactment of this amendment to persons now in or hereafter entering the military or naval service, except in so far as rights under any such law shall have heretofore accrued.

Compensation because of disability or death of members of the Army Nurse Corps (female) or of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) shall be in lieu of any compensation for such disability or death under the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916.

SEC. 315. That if an injury or death for which compensation is payable under this act is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability upon some person other than the United States or the enemy to pay damages therefor, the director, as a condition to payment of compensation by the United States, shall require the beneficiary to assign to the United States any right of action he may have to enforce such liability of such other person or any right which he may have to share in any money or other property received in satisfaction of such liability of such other person. The cause of action so assigned to the United States may be prosecuted or compromised by the director and any money realized thereon shall be placed to the credit of the compensation fund.

ARTICLE IV.

INSURANCE.

SEC. 400. That in order to give to every commissioned officer and enlisted man and to every member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) when employed in active service under the War Department or Navy Department greater protection for themselves and their dependents than is provided in Article III, the United States, upon application to the bureau and without medical examination, shall grant insurance against the death or total disability of any such person in any multiple of $500, and not less than $1,000 or more than $10,000, upon the payment of the premiums as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 401. That such insurance must be applied for within 120 days after enlistment or after entrance into or employment in the active service and before discharge or resignation, except that those persons who are in the active war service at the time of the publication of the terms and conditions of such contract of insurance may apply at any time within 120 days thereafter and while in such service. Any person in the active service on or after the 6th day of April, 1917, who, while in such service and before the expiration of 120 days from and after such publication, becomes or has become totally disabled or dies, or has died, without having applied for insurance, shall be deemed to have applied for and to have been granted insurance, payable to such person during his life in monthly installments of $25 each. If he shall die either before he shall have received any of such monthly installments or before he shall have received 240 of such monthly installments, then $25 per month shall be paid to his wife, child, or widowed mother if and while they survive him: Provided, however, That not more than 240 of such monthly installments, including those received by such person during his total disability, shall be so paid; and in that event the amount of the monthly installments shall be apportioned between them as may be provided by regulations.

SEC. 402. That the director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall promptly determine upon and publish the full and exact terms and conditions of such contract of insurance. The insurance shall not be assignable and shall not be subject to the claims of creditors of the insured or of the beneficiary. It shall be payable only to a spouse, child, grandchild, parent, brother, or sister, and also during total disability to the injured person, or to any or all of them, and to such other persons as may be provided from time to time by regulations. The insurance shall be payable only in installments. Provisions for maturity at certain ages, for continuous installments during the life of the insured or beneficiaries, or both, for cash, loan, paid-up and extended values, and such other provisions for the protection and advantage of and for alternative benefits to the insured and the beneficiaries as may be found to be reasonable and practicable, may be provided for in the contract of insurance. Subject to regulations, the insured shall at all times have the right to change the beneficiary or beneficiaries of such insurance without the consent of such beneficiary or beneficiaries, but only within the classes herein or as in the regulations provided. If no beneficiary within the permitted class be designated by the insured, either in his lifetime or by his last will and testament, or if the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, the insurance shall be payable to such person or persons, within the permitted class of beneficiaries as would under the laws of the State of the residence of the insured be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy. If no such persons survive the insured, then there shall be paid to the estate of the insured an amount equal to the reserve value of the insurance at the time of his death, calculated on the basis of the American experience table of mortality and 3½ per cent interest in full of all obligations under the policy.

SEC. 403. That the United States shall bear the expenses of administration and the excess mortality and disability cost resulting from the hazards of war. The premium rates shall be the net rates based upon the American experience table of mortality and interest at 3½ per cent per annum.

SEC. 404. That during the period of war the insurance shall be term insurance for successive terms of one year each, convertible after war, without medical examination, into such form or forms of insurance and with such provisions for premium payments as may be prescribed by regulations. Payments of premiums in advance shall not be required for periods of more than one month each and may be deducted from the pay or deposit of the insured or be otherwise made at his election.

SEC. 405. That in the event of disagreement as to a claim under the contract of insurance between the bureau and any beneficiary or beneficiaries thereunder an action on the claim may be brought against the United States in the district court of the United States in and for the district in which such beneficiaries or any one of them resides. The court, as part of its judgment, shall determine and allow such reasonable attorney's fees, not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount recovered, to be paid by the claimant on behalf of whom such proceedings are instituted to his attorney; and it shall be unlawful for the attorney or for any other person, acting as claim agent or otherwise, to ask for, contract for, or receive any other compensation because of such action: And provided further. That no other compensation or fee shall be charged or received by any person except such as may be authorized by the commissioner in regulations to be promulgated by him. Any person violating this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every such offense, be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

During the reading of the bill,

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am compelled to leave the Chamber to attend a meeting of the conference committee on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. Before leaving I desire to submit three amendments to this bill. I ask that they be printed and lie upon the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be received, printed, and lie upon the table.

Mr. SMOOT. I also desire to give notice that I may tomorrow offer an amendment as a substitute for Article IV, which is the insurance title of the bill. I have not yet quite perfected it, or I would offer it at this time; but I will have it ready by to-morrow morning and will then offer it.

After the reading of the bill was concluded,

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I have just read a very fine digest of this bill which appears in the October number of the Review of Reviews, by Mr. Samuel McCune Lindsay, with an editorial comment on it. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask if it is very long?

Mr. SHIELDS. It is not very long, and will be very instructive reading.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Review of Reviews, October, 1917.]

The plan of applying the principles of life insurance and accident insurance in the case of a soldier going to war involves a profound change of policy on the part of the United States Government. It is now certain that this plan will be adopted. It originated in the Treasury Department under Mr. McAdoo's direction, and—with some amendments favorable to the soldiers—this immensely important bill was adopted in the House of Representatives by a unanimous vote on September 13. The Senate Finance Committee in turn favored the measure, and the only question remaining was whether the bill would become a law before the adjournment of Congress early in October, or would await the December session. Present Wilson asked for its immediate passage. Dr. Lindsay's article is an authoritative explanation of the measure.—THE EDITOR.

SOLDIERS' INSURANCE VERSUS PENSIONS.

(By Samuel McCune Lindsay, professor of social legislation, Columbia University.)

The principles of social insurance, applied to all sorts of risks and hazards in which the community has a stake or shares a responsibility, have been gaining in favor the world over in recent years. On the contrary, the principles of pension legislation in all countries have been found wanting and experience everywhere is leading to its abandonment.

Thirty-five years ago Germany began to apply scientific business management to the relations of government and the problems of social welfare in dealing with the public relief of distress, sickness, industrial accidents, invalidity, old age, and unemployment among wage earners. Under the masterful leadership of Bismarck, in harmony with a new national spirit and a modern sense of social responsibility and solidarity, a strongly centralized and comprehensive system of state insurance was started. Within 25 years this system not only became the characteristic and dominant feature of a powerful national government, but also became incorporated in its essential principles by the Governments of Great Britain, France, Italy, Russia, and practically every country of Europe into a new development of democracy, a new function of government, a new attitude of peoples in their conception of the possibilities of social organization.

THE UNITED STATES A LAGGARD.

The United States alone has lagged behind and relied upon the older individualism of the poor law, administered by the smallest units of local government, upon the personal initiative of the injured person or his representatives to secure redress under the common law or the law of torts, upon employers' liability statutes, and upon equity procedure to remedy evils and achieve social justice. Of course, such methods long ago proved themselves inadequate in the face of the wonderful development of highly centralized organization, not only national but international, in scope, which has characterized American industry during the past 50 years. The day of reckoning between the people and their governments, between effective business organization of common interests and political methods which are the last resort of privateering, has been postponed by the exceptional development of private philanthropy and its extension to fields and to tasks for which it is only just now proving itself also inadequate.

THE PATCHWORK OF PENSIONS DISCREDITED.

In one great department, however, where government has had to meet a national responsibility, namely, in the relief of soldiers and sailors and their dependents, the patchwork of pensions in the United States since the Civil War, based on the principle of gratuities and political favor rather than on a sense of social justice and mutual obligation, is universally recognized as a failure. Pensions have developed in hundreds of thousands of citizens precisely the attitude of mind toward government which real democracy seeks to dispel. If the collective wealth and power of the community becomes a prize which the individual seeks to control for his own benefit, no real democracy is possible. Only as we can cultivate the feeling on the part of every individual citizen that he can be stronger, freer, and happier in proportion as every other individual in the community is made stronger, more secure, and given larger opportunities for happiness will the foundations of democracy itself be safe.

DEMOCRATIC REORGANIZATION OF GOVERNMENTS.

We are just starting upon a world enterprise which has for its ultimate goal the democratic reorganization of the world. In the preparation of the Nation for the war there is no more striking and significant proposal that goes to the roots of our own unpreparedness, and there is no more timely and important war measure which may well test our national spirit than the proposal to provide a scientific system of social insurance instead of pensions to carry as many as possible of the risks of military service.

With the national purpose to participate in this world struggle for democracy defined and determined by the people themselves expressing their will in accordance with democratic principles, the conscription of men for military service on a scientific and impartial plan designed to secure those best able to render such service has been the most heartening evidence of real democracy in this country and its greatest gain in a century.

LIGHTENING BURDENS OF DRAFTED MEN.

The response of the people to the draft law has abundantly vindicated American patriotism and the virility of the Nation. It could have been made much easier, aroused greater enthusiasm, and contributed to the building up of an even stronger national spirit had Congress at the time it passed the draft law also enacted the war-insurance bill that was under consideration last month.

Every removable fear that may naturally enter into the mind of the man called upon to give his life in defense of his country should certainly be removed. The sacrifice of comfort and economic security can not be compensated for by any wage which the Government may pay its soldiers. The degrees of sacrifice are too varied and its economic value too great for that. The anxiety, however, which the man who goes to the front naturally feels lest those who are dependent upon him for support are left unprovided for, can be removed. Provision can be made not only for as strong economic protection for the comfort and welfare of the soldier's family as his own earning power gave them before he went to war, but his personal economic status, to whatever extent his earning power may be impaired if not destroyed by his military service may also be assured.

The cost of insurance will be great, and the challenge to business ability in the management of a highly complicated and stupendous business undertaking will be even greater. If the conscription of wealth is likewise necessary to make effective the conscription of men it will have no greater justification in any expenditure that Congress is called upon to make than in supplying the huge sums needed for the compensation and insurance of the unavoidable risks which those who fight must take and which the man at home can in this way and will cheerfully share.

WHAT THE WAR-INSURANCE BILL PROPOSES.

The bill to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department proposes to add to the existing bureau which insures ships and seamen in the merchant marine against war risks a new division of military and naval insurance to provide for three things:

(1) Governmental family allowances, and compulsory allotment of pay for support of dependents and for savings to safeguard the morale of the Army and Navy.

(2) Compensation for death or disability due to injury or disease incurred in the service.

(3) Ability to get additional insurance at low cost.

THE ENLISTED MAN MUST HELP HIMSELF.

Every enlisted man in the military or naval forces of the United States must allot for the benefit of a wife or child an amount equal to the Government's family allowance, with a maximum, however, of half his pay and a minimum of $15 per month. If he has no wife or child and makes no voluntary allotments for other dependents, or for other purposes, the Secretary of War or Navy may require him to deposit with the Government at 4 per cent compound interest half his pay, or so much of half his pay as he does not allot either for his dependents or for other purposes.

This puts the man with dependents more nearly on a democratic footing of equality with one who has none and the better-paid American soldier with the poorer-paid European with whom he is fighting.

The family allowances are based on a graduated scale, depending on the number of dependents, and are conditioned on allotments of equal amounts up to half pay. In no case, however, does the allowance exceed $50 for one family. An ordinary enlisted man, receiving $33 per month in foreign service, if his family is large enough, may be required to allot $16.50 per month, and secure thereby for his family a total income of $66.50 per month.

COMPENSATION FOR DEATH OR DISABILITY.

Compensation for death or disability resulting from personal injury suffered or disease contracted in the course of the service by any commissioned officer or enlisted man or by any member of the Army or Navy Nurse Corps, composed of women. This compensation is graded, like the compensation now provided for wage earners under workmen's compensation laws in 35 States, and under the Federal Government of the United States according to pay, and is made payable in monthly installments. It is not assignable and is exempt from taxation, attachments, and execution. It takes the place of any rights or expectations under pension laws, and is expressly granted in lieu of pension. It is not operative for persons receiving service or retirement pay. The scale is a fairly liberal one, and Congress, of course, may at any time make it more liberal; but, presumably, would do so only under general legislation for the entire service, thus precluding the inequalities and injustices of special pension legislation. Congress can not constitutionally bind future Congresses and prevent special pension legislation, but it can and in this law it seeks to create so fair, liberal, and satisfactory a system of meeting every just claim impersonally and as a matter of right that it will be practically impossible for any future Congress to consider a private pension bill and highly improbable that any soldier or his dependents would seek any other remedy than that provided for under this war compensation act.

INSURANCE OF INSURABILITY.

This is a novel, constructive, and at the same time perhaps the most contentious part of the new proposal. It is a departure from the accepted principles of industrial compensation legislation and from the practice of other countries in dealing with compensation for war risks, family allowances, and pensions. It is, however, vital and essential to a fair test of the proposal to which the Secretary of the Treasury and the President have given their unqualified indorsement, and without which that plan can not be fairly tested. It is the feature which specially marks this measure as a forward-looking experiment in social legislation. It is far-reaching and constructive and is a war measure in a real sense.

ADVANTAGES OF INSURANCE.

Americans are not laggards in their appreciation and use of the advantages of mutual insurance. A man fit for military service is physically the best insurable risk, and can purchase insurance at the lowest commercial rate. The minute he shoulders a gun he either can not purchase insurance at all or only in a limited way at a very high and practically prohibitive rate. This bill proposes to stimulate and encourage every enlisted man to use his own resources and to make use of the facilities of insurance to protect and safeguard his interests to the limit of his resources. To do this it offers him ordinary term insurance, renewable from year to year during the war and convertible at the end of the war, without physical examination, in amounts of $500 and multiples of $500, but not to exceed $10,000, at rates which he can afford to pay and approximately what he would pay for such insurance in times of peace. This means that $10,000 insurance would cost a young man about $7 per month. No additional charge is made to the man because of the fact that the mortality through the war will be heavier than in times of peace. This is the risk which the Government has created and which it alone should bear. He is given 120 days after enlistment in which to take out such amount of additional insurance as he may elect, and if he fails to exercise this privilege and dies or becomes totally disabled within this period he will be considered as insured and the benefit paid.

The insurance is payable only in monthly installments to the beneficiary during life. The maximum amount of $10,000 is estimated to yield about $50 per month, which for the enlisted man, when added to his compensation for death or disability, as based on his rate of pay, is none too liberal to maintain a decent standard of living for his family, deprived of its breadwinner.

The insurance companies do not favor State insurance nor like the idea of the Government going into the insurance business. They appreciate, however, the advertising value for the insurance business in general of this feature of the war-insurance bill.

Compensation plus insurance provides a just measure, which is based on democratic principles of independence, self-help, and individual foresight. Insurance and compensation should be inseparable.

WHAT IT COSTS THE GOVERNMENT AND THE INSURED.

Without compulsion and without the importunities of insurance agents, would the average man who needs it most take out this added insurance to any considerable extent? Could he afford to do so? Probably not more than $2,500 per man on the average would be written. In perfecting the details of the bill Congress may decide to limit the privilege of such subsidized insurance for officers and men whose rates of pay or private resources make the Government aid unnecessary. It may also decide to pay the full cost for certain amounts of such added insurance for those who can afford to take only small policies. The principle of the Government subsidy is, however, right and just. There is no discrimination at the expense of the insured taxpayer who pays the full commercial rate in favor of a class to whom we do not owe a greater debt than any subsidized insurance can possibly pay.

The cost to the Government, however great and however difficult to estimate exactly in advance, is sure to be less than that of any system of pensions and much fairer, because proportionate to what the insured person has done for himself. The soldier who does nothing for himself must be content with what his compensation yields or depend on private charity. After rejecting or neglecting so liberal an opportunity as this provision for the insurance of his insurability offers he can not with good grace appeal to the Government for a pension.

A NEW CHANCE FOR THE INJURED.

An extremely interesting and valuable provision is made for injured persons who may through a process of reeducation, rehabilitation, and vocational training which the Government will provide have their earning power restored. In cases of dismemberment or of injuries to sight or hearing and of other injuries commonly causing permanent disability persons may be required in lieu of compensation for the time being to enlist in a training branch of military and naval service entitling them to full pay, as during the last month of their active service, and to family allowance and allotments, as in the regular service, if while taking training for rehabilitation they are prevented from following any substantially gainful occupation. Anyone failing so to enlist for training forfeits his right to compensation until he does so.

A MEASURE DEVISED BY EXPERTS.

Congress has had able assistance in framing its war-insurance act. The plan is in a new and important sense an administration measure. The Secretary of the Treasury very properly considered it a financial measure of the greatest importance and has given it disinterested and able leadership. He called to his assistance not only experts in insurance and the representatives of all the leading insurance companies in this country, whose patriotic cooperation he has secured, but he has also had the active help and support of influential labor leaders, like Mr. Samuel Gompers and Mr. J. W. Sullivan; of socially minded economists, lawyers, and persons expert in dealing with the problems of dependency, like Judge Julian W. Mack, who has given his time freely as chairman of a committee that drafted the bill and worked out the details of the plan; of Dr. Leo S. Rowe, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; Capt. S. H. Wolfe, a well-known accountant and actuary; Miss Julia C. Lathrop, of the Children's Bureau; Mr. V. Everit Macy, president of the National Civic Federation; Profs. Henry R. Seager and Thomas I. Parkinson, of Columbia University; and the staff of the Legislative Drafting Research Fund of Columbia.

Our laws dealing with problems of dependency in soldiers' families in time of war lack many modern provisions and tendencies. It is time that they were modernized.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I never knew the first reading of a bill to inform anybody much about its contents. We generally find that there are about six men out of the membership of this body who are following the bill and the balance are not. I think, therefore, that it is incumbent upon me, despite the first reading, to make a brief analysis of the bill, so that Senators may understand its scope and meaning in a better way than they have been enabled to understand it, because, with the exception of members of the committee, they have been generally preoccupied with other things.

This bill amends the act of September 2, 1914, which organized in the Treasury Department a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance. It divides that bureau into two divisions, and at the head of each is a chief of division. The first division takes care of present war risks with regard to ships and all that. The second division will take charge of what is involved in the provisions of this bill.

Under the bill the director of the bureau receives a salary of $5,000 per annum. Each of the chiefs of division receives $4,000. Provision is made in this article for "deputies, assistants, actuaries, clerks, and other employees, such as may be from time to time provided by Congress." The bureau is required by the bill to make arrangements with the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to avail itself of the services of the surgeons in the Army and the Navy in executing the provisions of the bill. The Secretary of the Treasury is, furthermore, authorized to constitute an advisory board, consisting of three members, expert and skilled in the work and practice of insurance. These are to be paid for the actual work which they do at a rate not to exceed $20 per day for the time during which they are actually employed.

It is hoped that they will not be actually employed very long. They will be organizing this thing and getting it on a proper footing and drawing up the notices as to what sort of policies can be used after the war to convert this particular policy into an insurance bracket; and then they have to have a good deal of skill in addition, as experts in compensation work, such as men who are acquainted with the workmen's compensation laws have.

Power is given under the first article to issue subpœnas and compel witnesses, and also power is given to require information from other departments of the Government and from the State governments which may be useful to the board in carrying on its work.

The director is required to make annual estimates of the appropriations to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Then Article I goes further and gives a definition of the terms used in the bill, "wife," "child," "enlisted man," "commissioned officer," and so on, and outlines the method of payment to the beneficiary. Briefly, the War and Navy Departments collect the allotments from the soldiers and sailors and turn them over to the Treasury and the Treasury pays the money to the beneficiaries.

Article II deals with the subject of "allotments" and "allowances." It deals exclusively with that, and it applies only to the enlisted men and the noncommissioned officers. It does not apply to the commissioned officers.

There are two classes of allotments to be made by the soldier or sailor. Class A is compulsory. He must allot out of his pay at least $15 per month and may allot one-half of his pay. The members of class A, where the allotment is compulsory, are, briefly, wife and child or children.

Then there is another class—class B— which, briefly described, is constituted of parents, grandchildren, dependent brothers, or dependent sisters. The allotment in that case is not compulsory but is voluntary on the part of the soldier.

The Government makes an allowance to meet the compulsory allotment. The various allowances you will find in the bill. It also makes an allowance to meet the voluntary allotment in class B as long as the soldier's allotment continues. That allotment under class B may, of course, be stopped at any time by the soldier because it is voluntary, and the Government immediately stops the allowance whenever the allotment is stopped. But the allotment to the immediate family, the wife and children, is compulsory, and the allowance thereunder is continuous. The Government runs no risk about the allotment, because it takes it out of the soldier's pay.

Then there is a further provision for such soldiers and sailors as have no families at all under the compulsory allotment class and who do not make any allotment under voluntary allotment class B or who have nobody kin to them under class B to whom they can make an allotment. It is provided in their cases that the Government shall deduct from their pay $15 per month and shall put it to their credit in the Treasury of the United States to bear interest at 4 per cent, with semiannual rests. In other words, it is compounded at the end of each six months.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one moment. That is for the purpose of enabling this class of soldiers when they return from the service to have a "nest egg" with which to meet the responsibilities of life. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As the pay of the soldiers is already provided for there are no items of appropriation in the bill to cover the allotments.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. All these items of appropriation are for something else.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They are for something else.

Mr. President, the pay of the United States soldier in France is $33 per month. If $15 be deducted from that as an allotment, $18 are left, and when he has $18 to spend he has about three times as much as the private soldier in the French Army draws per month in toto.

There is an economical reason for this allotment scheme. It is to aid the soldier's family and to aid the soldier himself after the war. Then there is a disciplinary reason for it, which is that the soldiers ought not to have too much money to spend recklessly or freely, which would be demoralizing to the discipline in our own Army and would have a very demoralizing effect upon the soldiers of the French Army with whom they are serving. The whole allotment and allowance idea is with the view of guiding the way for the soldier to increase his own welfare and to increase his economic capacity as a citizen of the United States after the war is over.

The bill provides that the total allowances by the Government shall not exceed $50 per month, no matter how many dependents the soldier may have. It starts by allowing to the wife what the soldier allots. It must be at least $15. Then it increases the governmental allowance in proportion to the number of children.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to get it clearly. This allowance is in addition to the soldier's pay? It is in addition to what is allotted out of his pay?

Mr. WILLIAMS. You can call it that. It amounts to that in substance, but what it is intended to be is provision for the family of the soldier while he is in the service.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Of course those appropriations are necessary in the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; those appropriations are made; but the Senator asked me a moment ago about appropriations for allotments.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I wanted to get the distinction.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Allotments and allowances are two different things. One is the soldier's provision, and the other is the Government's provision for the family of the enlisted man.

Mr. KENYON. Before the Senator leaves that point, I should like to ask him in regard to this case to get a clear idea of subdivisions A and B. Suppose a private soldier has a wife and two children, and then suppose he has two dependent parents. What would the Government pay to the private soldier?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If he has a wife and two children, the Government pays $32.50. Then if there are two dependent parents, it pays $20. That would make $52.50, but the provision of the bill says that the entire sum total shall not exceed $50. If the soldier does not make this allotment, of course it all goes to class A; and if he makes it to both, the allotment, as between classes, must be apportioned by the bureau.

Mr. KENYON. Would there be any provision whereby any percentage of what he might have left would go under subdivision B for compensation to dependent parents?

Mr. WILLIAMS. He is compelled to allot $15 under class A. He may allot more.

Mr. KENYON. Then the Government is not limited to $50 a month?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is limited to $50, as far as the Government is concerned. The family may receive more, but it receives the allotment of the soldier in addition to the Government's allowance.

Mr. KENYON. The soldier can allot any amount?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; to either or both classes. If there be no wife but one child, the child gets from the Government $5, but it gets from the soldier $15, so that the child receives in toto $20. If there be no wife, but two children, the two children get from the Government $12.50, but they get from the soldier $15, which would make $27.50; and so on through the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Suppose a soldier enlisting in the present war sees active service and comes home without being wounded and later discovers that through his exposure and service his health has been seriously impaired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That does not come under this article at all. That comes under the compensation article, which I will reach in a moment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator thinks that kind of a case is covered by the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is absolutely covered by the bill in a way that I had better indicate now while we are on it. He can at any time in his life afterwards receive compensation for injuries or disease incurred in the line of service. He is examined when he leaves the Army and he must make a claim for the compensation within the time fixed in the bill. I think it is a year. But if he is given at the time of examination and discharge a certificate to the effect that he has received a wound or that he is suffering from some trouble which proximately was caused by the war, then the fact that he has received that certificate enables him at any time in the future to make a claim for compensation if in consequence of the wound or of the disease, whichever it was, he shall become later disabled.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Of course, the Senator knows that a man's health may be seriously impaired by Army service. I think the experience of the Senator from Mississippi and my own with innumerable cases indicates that fact. This impairment may not become known until after the war closes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it is due to anything that occurred in the war, if the man has wounds, for example, that will be known at the time of discharge and examination.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But if not wounded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, if it is due to anything that occurred during the war, from any cause, the certificate will show that he was then suffering from it, and that it might result in death or disability, and if that develops later into death or disability, then the claim may be made. But I have not yet reached the article which deals with compensation for injuries or death. I am still dealing with soldiers' allotments and governmental allowances.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will allow me, because I think this is quite important and might be so construed as to bar a deserving soldier from relief to which he was entitled——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think so.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Let me illustrate the case to my friend. I had a nephew who went into the Spanish-American War as a private soldier, a young man 21 years of age. He never got to Cuba; he got as far as Florida. There he became ill, and through exposure a serious cold attacked him, and that cold never became better. He was discharged from the service without wounds at the close of the war and in apparent health, but he lived for only three years after the war.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In that case, under the provisions of this bill the surgeon would have certified that at the time of his discharge he was suffering with a very severe cold. Then, if after that that cold had developed into tuberculosis or into pneumonia or into something else which killed or disabled him——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Which was the case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it had developed into tuberculosis, probably, then he could have proved that it was owing to the condition which the surgeon had mentioned in his certificate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the Senator state whether or not this bill has been so framed as to take care of the noncomplaining soldier, of the man who bears his own affliction without complaining?

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no compensation for any man who does not claim compensation. There is no compensation given to any man for any condition in which he may be which was not due "proximately" to a cause arising from his service, if that is what the Senator means. This compensation article in the bill is framed upon the usual workmen's compensation law principle. It is not a pension, the Senator understands.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does it take the place of a pension?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It takes the place of a pension unless Congress runs over it later on and gives a pension.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is it intended to supersede the pension law?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is in so far as taking care of the family in war by allotments and allowances are concerned, and in so far as taking care of the families in case of death or total disability, and in so far as taking care of the soldiers themselves in case of total disability, and in so far as taking care of the soldier himself in case of partial disability are concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He has got to speak up in time, and perhaps before he may know of his disability.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He would have to do that under any system. He has to do it under the pension law, unless it is a service pension.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. We have laws to care for that kind of a case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; you have not, though Congress, by private or special pensions, does. He is examined, and if the doctor discovers anything at time of discharge, he puts it in the certificate under this bill, whether the soldier claims the existence of the injury or not. This scheme of providing for the soldier's family by allotments and allowances is a new thing in legislation in this country. Nearly all the countries that are waging war now have similar laws, including even Canada and Australia, Great Britain and France and Germany; and although it is new with all of them and with us, it is a good precedent to set. Under our old system we allowed a soldier to serve during the war, and if during the war his family suffered because of his absence from his home, they were maintained by institutions or charities or by their relatives or in some other way, and then after the war was over—take the Mexican War, for example, long years after it was over—somebody got up a pension bill. During the very period when the soldier ought to have helped his family—when his family ought to have been helped, because he was out in the service—they were neglected; and during the period after he came home, they were finally taken care of; but in case he had no wounds nor hurts, he was taken care of because he had served 30 days in the war, though the very war discipline, if he had had any, perhaps made him a better man and better able to contend with fate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield in one moment. What I want to impress upon the attention of the Senate now is, first, this is not a pension, but is built up upon the principles of the workmen's compensation laws. The bureau is required in case of partial disability to ascertain the degree of impairment of the ability of the claimant "by the same rule which prevails with civilians" in cases of this description, and then it does not allow anything where the percentage of impairment is less than 10 per cent.

Next the Government will in no event pay more than $75 per month, no matter what the disability is nor what may be the character or number of the family of the soldier. There is one exception, where the soldier has lost both arms or both legs or both eyes or is hopelessly bedridden he may receive as much as $100. Now, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Before the Senator passes from the question of family allowances I should like to ask him whether the committee had any figures to show the proportion of the men who would require those family allowances?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That would be impossible.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I notice that the appropriation is only $141,000,000, whereas if it was applied to 2,000,000 soldiers it would require some $600,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not admit the Senator's figures, but the department made what is called "an estimate," but all of you can see at once that the so-called "estimate" must be a "guess." In the first place, we do not know as yet how many of the volunteer or drafted soldiers have wives and children. We do not know how many of them have no wife and no child and still have dependent parents. We do not know how many of them there are who, having neither, still have dependents upon them, and how many have none dependent upon them. The allowance will be determined by dependence. As the bill came from the House the immediate family in class A was not required to be dependent upon a soldier. Class B was quite outside of the immediate family; it comprised the parents, brothers, and sisters. In that case they were required by the House bill to be dependents. But the Finance Committee in considering the bill amended it and required that the beneficiaries in either class A or class B must be dependent upon the soldier in whole or in part. Of course, it is a mere guess to say how many men there are so situated of either class. It is further a guess to say whether our Army and Navy surgeons are going to manage affairs so well that we shall not have over the percentage of loss from disease that the Japanese had in the war with Russia, let us say, or are going to manage so badly that we may have the percentage of loss that the Russians had in the same war or the Civil War soldiers had, or somewhere between the two extremes. The War Department took the matter up and made an estimate, and they say they think that is all they will need. Of course, we did not exceed the estimate. We appropriate in this bill all they think and say they will need.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I should like to ask two questions about Article II. I mean beginning with section 200.

Mr. WILLIAMS. About allotments and allowances?

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask now simply about allotments out of pay. They are compulsory so far as the widow and child are concerned and are voluntary so far as other dependents are concerned. Why should they not be made compulsory so far as all the people who are given allowances under section 204 and the following sections are concerned?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will answer the Senator, that under almost every law in the world a man is compelled to support his wife and children, but there are no laws, or few, which compel a man to support a brother or a sister or a grandfather or a grandmother.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But the law of nature.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So we followed the usual legal analogy, and we thought that we would compel a man to do what the law requires him to do; that is, to make some allotment for his wife and children, and that we would not compel him, but leave it voluntary with him to do what no law of any State would require him to do, however much you and I think that by the "law of nature" he ought to do it.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Government gives to these people an allowance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does not give to those in the second class, class B, any allowance at all, except during the time that the soldier is paying the allotment.

Mr. CUMMINS. One further question: The allotment relates only to enlisted men?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Altogether.

Mr. CUMMINS. Why not to officers as well?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We did not feel that in the case of an officer, getting the salary that he does, the Government ought to make any allowance for his family. It was thought he ought to be able out of his salary to take care of his family.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am speaking now of the allotment, not of the allowance. Why should not the Government reserve from the pay of officers enough to do something for their families, if they fail to take care of them?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We thought that in cases where we made no allowance we ought not to compel an allotment.

Mr. CUMMINS. Suppose an enlisted man is promoted to a commission; he is then immediately removed from——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; not for anything that has happened prior to that time.

Mr. CUMMINS. But thereafter?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, prior to that he has enjoyed in the meanwhile, and his family have enjoyed, his allotment and allowance; they have already had it. Then if he is promoted, of course he goes into a different class, and his wife and children and dependents get the benefit of his increased salary, many times more advantageous than allotment even plus allowance.

Mr. CUMMINS. I call the attention of the Senator to the language beginning in line 12, on page 15. I think it is not quite as it was intended to be. I do not quite understand it, at any rate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It reads:

> The family allowance shall be paid from the time of enlistment to death in, or one month after discharge from, the service, but not for more than one month after the termination of the present war emergency.

Mr. CUMMINS. But what does "in" mean?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The clause means "death in the service" or "one month after discharge from the service." It says, "Death in, or one month after discharge from, the service."

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not catch the meaning.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope it is clear now.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, as I understand, in a case where an enlisted man has no dependents of any kind, the Government reserves a part of his pay, to be turned over to him at the end of his service?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. It gives him 4 per cent upon it, compounded semiannually meanwhile.

Mr. WEEKS. Does it do that in the case of a man who has no parents or brothers and sisters to whom he makes no allotment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; it does that in the case of any soldier who has made no allotment, because those who make no allotment are supposed to have no dependents. It makes that allotment compulsory so far as the wife and child or children are concerned, and voluntary so far as the other dependents are concerned. That soldier can allot under class B, if he have no class A, a part of his pay either to his parents or to his sisters or brothers, or he may let the $15 go to the Treasury, where it is substantially allotted to himself, with interest.

Mr. WEEKS. Then, every man will make an allotment of some kind either for himself or for some dependent?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but there is no "allowance" made by the Government to a man who has no dependents—who merely allots to himself. We did not think we ought to make an allowance to a fellow who merely allotted to himself.

By the way, Mr. President, in further reply to the question which was propounded by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], there is another consideration which suggests itself, and that is that the officers when they are retired get retirement pay, so that their families are taken care of in that way. Of course, the officers are taken care of under the compensation act just as are the privates.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, that would not apply to officers other than officers of the Regular Establishment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is true.

Mr. WEEKS. Others will not be retired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; they will not be retired unless there is another provision of the bill hereafter that may apply to them. I will come to that.

One more thing about the allowance. The War and Navy Departments pay over to the Treasury Department these allotments, and then the Treasury Department pays to the beneficiaries the allotment plus the allowance. If any question should arise where a man undertook to allot more than was coming to him, as in the case propounded by the junior Senator from Iowa, then the department by regulation will control the proportioning of that allotment to the beneficiaries.

Article III of the bill deals with the compensation for death or disability, and it applies to both private soldiers and sailors and to commissioned officers——

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, before the Senator from Mississippi leaves the question, I want to have that matter clearly in my mind. The allowance is not charged against anything that is due to the soldier or which he is entitled to receive?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no.

Mr. KNOX. But it is a compensation over and above his pay?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a family provision for his benefit during the war and for one month after, provided he makes an allotment and does his part.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the amount of it will depend upon the amount which he allots within certain limitations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, it will not, under class A; but it will under class B.

Mr. ROBINSON. Under no circumstances?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Government makes these fixed sums of allowance under class A, where at least a $15 allotment is compulsory, regardless of what the man allots; but he must allot $15. Then under class B allowances depend on allotments which are voluntary. One can imagine the case where a man will allot more than $15 and the Government will take care of the allotment for him, but he will get because of it no greater family allowance. Of course, his family will get more money because he himself out of his pay has allotted more.

That leaves the soldier now having allotted $15 per month taken out of his pay with $18 a month. I have heard it stated, and it has been reported, that some of our officers in France have complained that the manner in which our soldiers were throwing money around is very demoralizing, not only to our service, but to the French service; that it is setting an example which dissatisfies the private soldiers of our allies.

Now I come to Article III, which is compensation for death and disability and applies both to privates and commissioned officers.

As I said a moment ago, the principle underlying it is the same as that underlying the workmen's compensation and employers' liability laws. The maximum amount to which the Government is to be held under the compensation article is $75 per month; it can not go over that, except in the case, as I stated a moment ago, where the soldier has lost both eyes or both legs, and so forth.

A feature in the bill, which shows how far it is from a mere pension bill and how very analogous it is to the workmen's compensation law, is the provision for burial expenses and bringing the body home. It is provided that the United States shall pay for the soldier's burial expenses and for returning his body to his home, a sum, if necessary, not exceeding $100.

The bureau is left to adopt and to apply a schedule of reductions and to make ratings in the cases of partial disability, and they are required to do that as "nearly as may be upon the average impairment of earning capacity resulting from injuries in civil occupations." So that there again it follows the same analogy.

This bill then goes further than that, and provides for the Government giving the soldier reasonable medical, surgical, and hospital treatment, and for supplying him with artificial limbs, trusses, and appliances of that sort. It does not compensate somebody else for giving him the medical attention; the Government, through its Army and Navy Medical Corps, does it itself, adding service in the Government hospitals. The bill as it came from the House needed amendment to make that plain, and the Finance Committee amended it so as to make it plain.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In a moment. Then your committee has inserted provisions retaining military control over the injured soldier until he shall have been discharged from the military or naval service. It further provides for medical reexamination as often as needed, and when he is called upon to submit to reexamination, if he does not do it, his compensation, which is all paid upon the monthly installment plan, is suspended during the period for his refusal.

Now I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Mississippi why the committee reduced the compensation awarded under section 301? It appears that in almost every instance the allowances inserted by the House have been reduced, and I desire to know whether there is any reason for that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The committee thought that those amounts, in comparison with what had hitherto been granted under the pension system for wholly or partially disabled soldiers, were too large. Some of the members of the committee wanted to reduce them still more. Then, there was another theory entering into our minds; we thought if we made the amounts that high, in the next Congress some Member would perhaps introduce a pension bill to make the payments to all the others—widows, children, disabled soldiers of the Mexican, Spanish-American, and Civil Wars—up to this limit. We simply thought, in other words, that the House figures are too much. That is about the best answer that I can give.

Then, under Article III a commutation of the compensation payments is permitted, so that a man may receive a lump sum, instead of installments, where he makes application and makes the proper showing; yet we allow him to commute only 50 per cent of the compensation. The reason for that is this: Very frequently a soldier coming back partially disabled will say, perhaps, "I can keep a little store; I can buy a little farm and superintend it; I can go into something that will give me more money, and if I could commute this amount," say of $20 a month, "to a lump sum, I could go into some form of occupation, and I think take care of myself better than the Government can take care of me on the installment plan." Yet this provision has its danger, and the danger is that a man without foresight and without business capacity is perhaps the most apt of all to want to commute, and very frequently he will want to commute, and will then throw the money away. Then he is left dependent and will be coming for help or pension to Congress sometime, on some later day, saying, "No matter what my faults; no matter how foolish I have been as a business man, I and my family are suffering." So we thought they should not be allowed to commute over 50 per cent.

Mr. ROBINSON. The same thing might happen to him as a result of misfortune in the conduct of his business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; it might result to him from misfortune. A man for whom he stood surety might go wrong.

Now, I want to call the attention of the Senate to one feature of this bill which I think is very admirable.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, has the Senator finished with the compensation provision?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I have not finished with that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to ask whether these payments are cumulative; that is, whether a payment of $25 a month may be made to a widow and at the same time a payment of $20 a month to a widowed mother? The bill is not clear on that subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is, in case where death results from an injury?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are various cases supposed. If the man had "a widow alone," she gets this amount. If he has a widow and one child, they two get another amount; if he have a widow and two children, they three get another amount; if there be no widow at all, and if he has one child, the child gets so much. Each case stands upon its own footing. Then there is added to that for a widowed mother $20, but in no event can the compensation for all be over $75 a month.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, it may be distributed between the widow and the children and the widowed mother?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The department will make regulations as to how it shall be paid to the beneficiaries and in what proportions. You will notice that in each of these instances we suppose a case. We suppose a man has a family of a certain character and size, and then we pay them so much upon that supposition. If, for example, he leave "no widow but three children"—let us take that case—they would get $40. If he left four children, that additional child would get $5, making $45, and then his widowed mother would not get $20.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. She would have subtracted that much?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would be apportioned amongst them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is not stated exactly what would be done in that case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Bureau regulations must control much. Now, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a provision in this bill in this same article that is new, and is the highest compliment, I think, to the sound statesmanship and the humanitarianism of the American Congress. I refer to the provision in section 305 for "rehabilitation, reeducation, and vocational training," so that the crippled and maimed may be put into a condition where they may be useful to themselves and to society. In order to encourage the soldier to go through the process of reeducation and rehabilitation his compensation is not taken away from him when he has partially rehabilitated himself. Here might be a man with two hands gone, and we could teach him to use his feet; but if he thought, "I will lose my compensation, and I do not think that I can make as much money with my feet as the Government is paying me as compensation," he might make no effort to help himself. So we say, "That is perhaps very true, and we will not do that; but we will so provide that you will be getting your compensation, and in addition to that, you will be rendering some service to humanity first and yourself in profit and happiness second by the performance of some sort of work." It is wonderful how far they have carried this rehabilitation and reeducation business in Europe. They have taken men with both eyes gone; they have taken men with both legs gone and men with both arms gone, men in every sort of conceivable fix, and they have taught them to do something. What little they do is just that much added to the general accumulation of the world's welfare and to the amount of money that is doing some good in industry or in comfort or in the education of children or the maintenance of the cripple's self-respect, or in something else.

Section 313 of the bill, Article I—mark this, now, because something has been said about it—makes the compensation inapplicable to persons "in receipt of service or retirement pay," so that stops demagogic talk about that much of it. It also prevents those receiving compensation from receiving gratuities or pensions, so that if a man ever, in spite of the theory of this bill, comes to Congress and procures a pension from it, then he and his family lose his or their compensation allowances as fixed in this bill. That is about the only way that can be arranged. Of course we can not put a veto upon future Congresses; we could not say here that this should be substituted for the pension system, because Congress can go ahead and do what it pleases later; but we fix the soldier so that if he takes advantage of it his compensation under this bill ceases.

Women in the "Army Nurse Corps" and the "Navy Nurse Corps" are defined as enlisted men, so that all references to soldiers, whether in regard to allotments or allowances or compensation or insurance, apply to the women who are in the service.

Now, I come to the insurance feature; and that is the feature of the bill that is going to give you the most trouble. In drawing up this bill a great many experts representing various classes of people were invited to consider the provisions of the bill—the labor unions, the manufacturers and employers, the insurance men, and a great many people.

Article IV, which relates to insurance, applies to officers and men alike, and it provides that they can receive what is called a term policy from year to year, renewable at the end of each year. Upon that sort of policy the premium varies with the age of the insured. At 29 years of age, which is the average age of our boys under the draft to-day, or a little above it, the premium under this scheme would be $8 per thousand. Above that it would be somewhat more. Below that it would be somewhat less. In doing that we charge the "net premium," according to the American average experience of mortality, and 3½ per cent, which is computed as a part of that sort of policy, but we take from it the overhead charges, because under this bill the Government stands them. The ordinary insurance company would charge just what we are charging, but they would "load" the insurance, as they call it, with whatever their overhead expense was.

The consequence of that is this: The soldier has sent $15, which he has allotted. He has $18 left. Every enlisted man may, if he chooses, take out the maximum insurance allowed in this bill, which is $7,500. If he be 29 years of age, he would pay for it $60 a year, which is just $5 a month, and he would still have, after deducting $5 a month, $13 a month left for tobacco and the other things for which he wants to spend his money. He is clothed, quartered, fed, and armed by the Government.

At the end of the war he would have a policy of $7,500, which would be paid to his family if he should be killed or if he died or suffered total disability, reduced to its installment value.

The House put in the bill a provision that they should have a maximum insurance of $10,000. We amended it to $7,500, because if you pay the policy to the beneficiaries on the installment plan in 240 monthly payments, extending over 20 years, which is the plan of this bill, the family will have received, adding all the installments together in toto, $10,200 in money, so that he gets the amount of money expected by the House. Of course, if the family received it the day he died, they would get only $7,500, but that can not be the case under the bill.

The reason that guided us was this: The man is summoned to the colors by his country. The drafted man goes because he must go. The Government creates the war, not the soldier. The war hazard, therefore, is the creation of the Government. Of course, the volunteer ought not to be put upon any lower ground than the drafted man. Now, we thought the Government ought to bear that part of the insurance risk which the Government created, and we thought we ought to make the soldier bear that part which in ordinary peace times he would have had to bear if he had taken out insurance. We therefore charge him just that net premium, which is $8 in the case I have mentioned. Then the Government bears the war risk and it also bears the overhead charge. It is fair that the Government, having deprived a man of his insurability, should put him at least in statu quo ante bellum with regard to insurability, and that is what this bill does.

When all these people, summoned here to be consulted and to advise in the drafting of this bill, gathered around they expressed themselves as highly delighted with the bill, except that the insurance men kicked about the insurance part of it. They did not want the Government to "go into the insurance business," as they expressed it. But the Government is not going into the insurance business in that or any general sense. It is not going into the general insurance business at all. In the first place, it is confining its activities simply to the soldiers and the sailors in the service. In the second place, it confines the beneficiaries to the soldiers' and sailors' dependent families. It does not let a soldier go out and insure his life for the benefit of the Senator from Massachusetts, just because he is a friend or because the Senator has lent him money. It does not let me come in, if the Senator from Massachusetts were a soldier, and insure his life for my benefit. The Government confines itself simply to doing the Government's business of putting the man back in statu quo, as far as the Government has destroyed the statu quo of ante bellum insurability.

It was suggested that the Government should give to each soldier outright, one suggestion was, a paid-up policy of $2,000; another suggestion was a paid-up policy of $1,000. Your committee did not see, and the House did not see, why the soldier should be given an insurance gratuity. We did see why so much of the increased price of the premium of insurance as was necessitated by the act of the Government in declaring a state of war and was not caused by his act should be paid by the Government; but we did not think that exempted him from the duty of paying his part, just what he would have paid in peace times if he had chosen to take out insurance.

He must equally choose here; insurance under this bill is voluntary, not compulsory.

Now, let me go a step further and show you financially where we have now got our soldier. We have got him to where he has an insurance policy of $7,500, where by his own allotment and by the Government's allowance his family is being taken care of during the war and for a month afterwards, and where he still has $13 a month left to spend in any way that he chooses.

Another thing: Every enlisted man can take this maximum amount of $7,500 if he wishes, so this knocks in the head the argument that has been made that the insurance feature was "put in as an increase of officers' pay." It is not put in here as an increase of anybody's pay, but as an additional family provision; but if it be an increase of the officer's pay, then it is also an equal increase of the private's pay.

Under the compensation features of this bill we went pretty far in setting a new precedent. As the bill was originally drawn, the compensation was based upon a percentage of the salary or pay of the injured person, officer or private, thus making or retaining an old distinction. We have put the officers' wives and children and the privates' wives and children upon exactly the same footing as far as compensation is concerned—have made it a stated amount for both, not a percentage for each. It is true that an officer ought to be paid more than a private soldier, because he does a very much more responsible work, requiring very much greater ability, and rank is right in the Army and ought to be maintained; but if I be a colonel in the Army and leave a widow and you be a private in the Army and leave a widow, my wife is not a colonel and your wife is not a private. They are just simply our widows, and that is all. So we stood by that provision in the House bill.

Everything that has been urged against this bill in a demagogic way falls to the ground. There is no just criticism of it from that standpoint. We have done equal and exact justice as well as we know how. We have made these policies nonassignable with the purpose and with the undoubted result of preventing speculation on the part of people who might want to take out policies on lives of soldiers or sailors for speculative purposes. We have made them exempt from the claims of the creditors either of the insured or of the beneficiary, somewhat like a widow's and orphan's policy in the New York Life Insurance Co. under the laws of New York.

First, then, we have limited the beneficiaries; second, we have limited the amount; third, we have limited the insured to the service; fourth, we have made the policy nonassignable; and, fifth, we have exempted it from debts and execution. To these limited extents we have gone into the insurance business, but no further; and, as far as we have gone, we have simply done that which every government from the beginning of the earth ought to have been doing. The Government has a right to every dollar of mine, if it is necessary; it has a right to my body, if it is necessary; but it ought, as far as it can, as far as it is able, not to make a hazard which it has created too hard upon my wife and children.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to call the Senator's attention to section 404, on page 34, which provides for the close of the war. I understand that during the war each man or officer may take out one-year term insurance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. That is the only sort he can take.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; but if he takes any insurance, he must take term insurance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, at the close of the war, what happens?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will come to that in just a second, if the Senator will permit me. I will make a note of that. In the first place, though, I want to say why we insisted upon this particular form of insurance. It was because it was, during the war, the very best possible form for the soldier. This form of insurance, however, has in ordinary times its disadvantages. The premium increases with the age of the insured, so that when you reach the age, say, of 65 or 70 years, the premium becomes prohibitive. So that we had to provide, after the war—now I come to the Senator's question—for the convertibility of this form of policy to some other form; and we provided that the bureau may, in the contract of insurance, indicate the forms and all that. When peace comes and the war is over, this is not the best form of policy for the soldier, and it is not the best thing for the Government to continue it any longer than the Government is forced to continue it, and therefore it is well enough for both sides and best for the soldier that it should be turned into period insurance, if you may so call it—10 years, 15 years, 20 years—and also that paid-up policies may be given, and also that participating policies may be given. Now, that conversion must occur within five years after the war.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is, after the war closes the Government is going into all kinds of insurance with the men who have survived the war?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; the Government is not going into any new insurance nor with anybody except its employee soldiers and sailors nor with any beneficiaries save their dependent relatives or the immediate family. It is simply going to carry out the contracts which it has already made.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is going to drop the term insurance and go into investment insurance, so called, with the men who survive the war?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. Now, remember, that is a paying business.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suppose so. Now, I want to ask what happens between the close of the war and this five-year period?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The man is not obliged to wait until the end of the five years to convert. He must convert within five years. If he chooses not to convert until the last period of the five years, then, of course, his premium which he must pay monthly in advance on this sort of policy increases from year to year.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It does not state here, though, that he can continue his term insurance during that period.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does, by stating that within five years he must convert, and therefore during five years he may or may not convert.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It says here that during the period of the war the insurance shall be term insurance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But it does not provide what shall occur during this five-year period, when he has an option.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He is given an option. The very first day after he comes out of the war he may, if he choose, convert it, as soon as he can go through the proper forms; or he may wait until the period is about to come to an end, and then he may convert it; but during the time that he does not convert it, of course it continues just as it is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This is without any medical examination?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, because every man who goes into the Army is already examined.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just one second. One other thing: We also provide here that the insured must make this application for insurance within 120 days, and we provide that those who do not do it, who are already in the service, are supposed to carry $5,000; is not that the sum? I will ask the senior Senator from Utah if that is not true with regard to the man who has not made an application?

Mr. SMOOT. If he has not made an application he is granted monthly compensation of $25, which, figured into insurance, amounts to about $6,000 of money finally paid.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; well, a policy, then, of $5,000. Anyhow, that is to keep the men who are already in on a footing with the others. Now I yield to the junior Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. As I understand the plan which this bill has provided, it contemplates that the Government shall continue in the insurance business after the war with reference to soldiers and sailors who may be alive and who will continue the payment of their premiums.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With whom it has existing contracts of insurance; and it will also apply for future time to soldiers and officers of the standing Army and the Regular Navy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As long as the Government is in the business of term insurance the situation is very simple, but when it goes into endowment insurance and investment insurance, then it goes into the banking business and the investment business. What is the Government going to do with the money that it receives in that way?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Turn it over into the treasury of the War-Risk Bureau, and finally into the general fund of the Treasury.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But insurance companies that receive money in that way invest it, and it is from the investments that the insurers are paid.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, we can invest our money mighty easily by paying a part of these billions of 4 per cent bonds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is that the plan?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it was not put in the bill here because we thought that was looking too far ahead. Congress can take care of that by future legislation.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska is well taken in reference to section 404, and that is the time elapsing after the expiration of the war and during the five years in which the claimant is entitled to convert his insurance protection. I think we should add after "war," in line 18, the following:

And until converted within five years thereafter.

So it will read:

That during the period of war, and until converted within five years thereafter, the insurance shall be term insurance for successive terms of one year each.

Then the balance of the section provides that—

No later than five years after the war the term insurance shall be converted, without medical examination—

And so forth. I think that ought to be in there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There may be some ambiguity there that needs clearing up. If so, we will come to it later. There is one other thing now, and that is this. If the beneficiary does not survive the insured, in that event the person entitled under the laws of the State where the insured lives inherits his personal property in case he dies intestate gets the amount.

There is one other thing. The next section provides for settling disputes between the Government, which is the insurer, and the soldier who is the insured. I recommend Senators to read carefully sections 402 and 403 and 404 of Article IV, which will give them nearly all the information they may desire, especially about the convertibility business.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Has the committee any information which shows about how much it will cost the Government to carry the war risk upon the insured?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Nothing except estimates which, of course, are guesses upon the part of the department, and which fix the amounts of appropriations made in the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not mean the lump sum necessary to pay, but how much per thousand will the Government have to pay on this insurance?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That depends on what it costs to carry it on. In this connection I wish to say we will have this advantage of the insurance companies in administering this law. Of course, as a rule, private enterprise of any sort is administered more economically than Government undertakings of like character, but there are cases where the Government has such immense advantages that it can excel them in economy of administration. This is one of those cases. The Government will have no insurance agents traveling around over the country soliciting policies and receiving commissions, sometimes as high as 50 and 60 per cent for the first one, and then 5 per cent for the renewals. The Government will have no rent to pay. The Government will have no taxes to pay. The Government will be doing the business of about four of the largest insurance companies of the world, and will be doing it with a force not much over one-fourth the force which the four companies must maintain. The Government, moreover, will not be paying men $40,000 and $50,000 a year salaries, as the insurance companies are paying.

So in answer to the question of the Senator from Delaware my reply is that no one can make an exact estimate, but the overhead charges and cost of administration will be very much less than has been urged, and, in the second place, the Government will not pay as much out for mortality and total disabilities a people generally think. It is generally thought that this is the bloodiest war in its percentage of disabilities and deaths which the world has ever seen. That simply is not the fact. While the regiment in the trenches suffers more, there are held out three to four more regiments to relieve them at times, because you can not keep these men in the trenches too long with this nerve-wearing modern warfare, and those who are outside are suffering no mortalities at all at that particular time. There were many battles and campaigns during the Civil War, where take the time and the number of men engaged, the percentages of total forces probably were greater than during any equal time of fighting during this war.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait one minute. That meant taking the entire Army. For example, the battle of Chickamauga was fought when the entire armies on both sides were in the fight. This trench warfare going on is not the German Army that is making counter charges and the British Army that is standing counter charges. It is about one-fourth of each. Now I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I have seen the statement made, based on estimates that I presumed were as carefully made as could be, that there would be 75 men out of a thousand killed in one year.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Killed or permanently disabled.

Mr. WEEKS. Assuming that that is true, that would mean——

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is an estimate. That estimate was given in the hearings before the committee.

Mr. WEEKS. If that is true, in an army of a million men there would be a loss of 75,000 men, which based on this insurance would be $750,000,000, and the Government would receive $80,000,000 in premiums from the insured.

Mr. WILLIAMS. From those insured who suffered. The Senator says a million men. That million men would pay $80,000,000 in premiums.

Mr. WEEKS. Eighty million dollars premiums. So the Treasury would lose the difference between $750,000,000 and $80,000,000, or $670,000,000. Are there any other estimates what it will cost from year to year as the insurance goes on?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Senator, frankly, if any estimates were made I would not call them by that name. You will see yourself from the very nature of the case that it is impossible to make any reliable estimate. They have guessed at it. They have made what they call estimates, in consequence of which they have asked us to give an appropriation for the several sums that are appropriated here.

Mr. WEEKS. I wish to say to the Senator the reason why I asked that question is because, in the first place, I naturally feel like wanting to know what something is going to cost before undertaking it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So do I.

Mr. WEEKS. I approve of the parts of the bill which relate to allowances, and so forth, and I approve of the insurance up to the end of the war, but I am not in approval of continuing an insurance department. I do not believe it is necessary. This is all being done because it is incident to the war. As far as the insurance is concerned, everything that follows it is something that is entirely distinct from the war which we are fighting. For that reason I think we ought to have carefully revised figures, if it is possible to obtain them, about what the future burden is going to be.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator would ask me how many men were going to be killed, how many were going to die of disease, how many were going to be totally disabled, how many were going to be partially disabled of the American forces in France or elsewhere during this war, I would frankly confess that I could no more answer it than I could fly.

Yet to know those things would be absolutely necessary in order that I might make any reliable estimate of what it would cost. I can not tell, neither can the Senator. I do know this: That whatever it shall cost, I do not care whether it be millions, hundreds of millions, or billions of dollars, whatever this war, in its different phases on this and the other side of it shall cost, it is infinitely better to pay it if we can, or to go bankrupt if we can not, than it is to let Prussian autocracy dominate the earth. The sole thing I have considered about this bill was this: I have not even attempted to find out what it would cost, because I could not do it and I knew I could not. The department made an estimate and told us the amount of money they think they can get along with, and we have appropriated it. It may be that they have underestimated immensely. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] evidently thinks so by the manner in which he is scornfully smiling.

Mr. SMOOT. I know it; I do not think so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator always knows. I may think so, but whether they have or not underestimated, the sole thing I have considered is this: Is it right and just to the soldiers and the families of soldiers that we should pass this legislation? If it is, I want to pass it. If anybody can convince me in any respect that it is not right and just, that it is more generous than it should be, or that it is unnecessary, then I certainly would not want to pass it.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Mississippi indicate to the Senate his reasons for thinking that this insurance should be continued after the war.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can not see how a government that enters into a contract can discontinue its contract. Here is a man who has taken out a policy. The man is partially disabled; he comes back and his insurability has been totally lost because of the injury received in the war, and he can not get any insurance from private companies. The Government made a contract with him. The Government ought to carry that out. If he afterwards dies from his disability, then the Government ought to carry out the contract with his family.

So far as carrying it on for the Regular Army and Navy after the reduction of forces is concerned, that is a different proposition. I have my doubts very seriously about whether that ought to be done, but the reason for putting it in was this: Every soldier and every sailor, even in peace times, has an extra hazard, and that extra hazard is owing to the fact that he may at any moment be called into service and into dangerous service, too. I hope—I think I almost know—that after this war is over we are going to have a very small Army, and the balance of the world very much smaller armies than they have ever had, and we not a very much larger one that we have ever had.

The nations are going to have very much smaller armies because one of the things this war is going to do if we win it is to put an end to this everlasting standing up of an armed and panoplied population waiting for another army to attack it and watching its chance to attack. I can see very well why you should shut off the Government from taking on any more of these contracts after the war is over, even with the Regular Army and the Regular Navy, but I do not see for the life of me how the Government is going to get rid of contracts after it has made them unless the other party to the contract agrees to get rid of it. I do think in very many of these cases the other party to the contract will want to get rid of it, and I will tell you why. I think the different forms of policies which the Government takes up are so limited in character and beneficiaries that the man will find out in very many cases if he comes back physically unimpaired that he can get far better insurance or insurance that will suit his condition better from private companies.

I will tell you why for another reason. I think he will want insurance with different beneficiaries. If the man comes back from the war unimpaired he will want insurance probably to meet a debt payable to his administrator and not to his wife and children. He will want insurance to insure his obligations in his business. So he will want different beneficiaries there.

You must remember the very narrow character of these policies. I have no doubt that a great many of them will be given up voluntarily by the soldiers after they return for a great many very good reasons.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator from Mississippi in giving his reasons why this insurance should continue after the war suggests that a man might be injured so that he could not obtain insurance. Of course, we are providing compensation for that man in this bill. A policy can be written which will continue during the war and stop there. It is a very common form of insurance to insure for a year or for some definite risks or for some definite term of insurance. That is in many respects the cheapest insurance that can be issued. Why should not these policies be issued on that basis to continue during the war and then cease?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can not give any better reason than I have sought to give. The Government enters into a contract and it ought to carry it out.

Mr. WEEKS. But it enters into a contract for a definite period.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, but if you enter into a contract for a definite period, 1 year or 10 years, the premiums increase very much.

Mr. WEEKS. Not materially.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; very materially—about $157 on $6,000, against $48, if he take the form of a policy I have. We were seeking to get the lowest possible premium and we have got it. This is not worth a cent as an investment, but it is worth more than any other policy in the world as a hazard-meeting proposition.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator a question. If a soldier or sailor is carrying a policy of insurance when he enters the war, is he permitted to take out an additional one, so that he carries two policies?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. The Senator must remember that most of the policies have what are called war-risk clauses, and they are canceled when a man goes abroad into the Army or Navy. Some have not. Those that have not will have to meet their contracts; they will have to carry them out with the soldier, and the soldier is better fixed with that policy than he would be with the one we give him, because he has already partly paid it and it has partially matured, and he could carry it to complete maturity quicker. In cases like that the man generally would be able to provide for it.

There is another clause in here where he can provide for that in a way. If he wants to allot more than he is compelled to allot to his family, $15, he may allot it to the payment on a house and payment upon an insurance policy, and then he may be excused from the usual allotment by the regulation of the bureau if he can give good reason why it should be done. For example, suppose a man has a wife and children and they probably can get along very well, but he had bought a home on the installment plan, then he could, upon a written waiver from his wife, allot his allotment, or part of it, to the building and loan association and continue paying for the home.

Mr. KING. Will the soldier, after the war is over, have any greater benefits under this insurance policy than he would have if he had an insurance policy of a private corporation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think not. Perhaps the contrary. Probably if he had had an insurance policy with a private corporation it would have been an insurance policy maturing in a limited term and it would have already partially matured, and he would be drawing and crediting dividends. Of course, this form of policy in this bill never matures unless the man dies or is totally disabled.

Mr. KING. The Senator spoke some time ago about the terms of convertibility.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is left to the regulation of the bureau.

Mr. KING. Would he receive more in those terms of convertibility than he would from an insurance company——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no; I think not.

Mr. KING. For a like policy, with the same amount of premium?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the war lasts for four years he might receive more from this policy if he took it out now than he would have received from the same sort of policy if taken out four years later at the increase of premium, of course.

Mr. KING. That is obvious.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course.

Mr. BRADY. I should like to ask the Senator a question relative to section 404, on page 34. Assume that a soldier has taken out an insurance policy for $5,000 and has kept up the payment during the term of the war. Let us assume that the war lasted three years. After he is discharged, what becomes of that policy?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That goes on for five years, but not later than five years, when it must be converted into such form or forms of insurance as may be prescribed by the regulations.

Mr. BRADY. But the soldier would have to go on paying his premium according to the contract he had made with the Government?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. BRADY. Let us assume that he did not pay his premium; that he let the policy lapse.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then it would lapse like any other policy.

Mr. BRADY. Should there not be provision here that he could have paid-up insurance?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no paid-up insurance provided for.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it is term insurance. They can convert it into paid-up policies after conversion.

Mr. BRADY. Then, at the end of the war, if the premium is paid up, they can at such time take up a paid-up policy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Here is the clause, which I will read to the Senator:

> Regulations shall provide for the right to convert into ordinary life, 20-payment life, endowment maturing at age 62, and into other usual forms of insurance, and shall prescribe the time and method of payment of the premiums thereon.

Mr. BRADY. I read that very carefully, but it seems to me that it requires the insured to keep on paying the premium.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does.

Mr. BRADY. Under the ordinary life policy, if a man has paid for a certain number of years, he can at that time take out a paid-up policy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not under this form of policy. If he does later by conversion take one of those forms, then of course he does not continue to pay longer than that form requires. He surrenders this policy under the bill, and continues it—a 20-payment life, we will say. Then, of course, his payments stop at the end of 20 years.

Mr. BRADY. But does not the Senator feel that the soldier should have the privilege of taking a paid-up policy, the same as would be given under ordinary insurance?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No paid-up policy is possible; and if he has a policy renewable at the end of each year, there is no estimated paid-up value for that sort of insurance, because the premium continues to advance from year to year in that peculiar sort of policy.

Mr. SMOOT. I think I can express it to the Senator in this way so that he will understand it. Where a soldier takes a term policy he does it for one year. At the end of the year if he is not dead he loses the premium paid, just the same as he does in an ordinary term policy of any insurance company. If he pays it for two years, or any other length of time, and stops, he loses it. The bill provides that he can not carry term insurance longer than five years; that is, he can not take a term policy any longer than five years and must take one of the ordinary life insurance policies similar to those issued by the insurance companies of the United States if he continues his insurance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before I yield the floor I ask unanimous consent to put in the RECORD as a part of my explanation of the bill about two pages and a third drawn upon by Judge Mack, the main author of the House bill, explaining some of the features of the bill that I have not been able to go over. Judge Mack, selected to represent labor by Mr. Gompers, has in connection with this legislation shown a master hand.

The matter referred to is as follows:

"The men who have been drafted or have enlisted for military service can not in these war times obtain life insurance in many companies and in others only at a prohibitive rate. The Government should make good this loss of insurability to a reasonable amount. Whatever insurance it offers to the men should be offered them at such rate as the Government would charge in peace times. The expected excess mortality on account of which private companies now charge large additional premiums is a risk which the whole Nation and not the individual men in the service should bear.

"The Government, moreover, has only one of many items of expense that private companies have, viz, the administration. It has no agents' commissions, medical examination fees, advertising, investment costs, or taxation. As the contemplated insurance is confined strictly to the military and naval forces, the administrative expense should not be borne by these men who are risking their lives in defense of the whole country, but by the Nation at large. Therefore the rates fixed in section 403 are the net peace-time rates without loading. Calculations are based upon the 3½ per cent interest rate, and the American experience table of mortality. The actual mortality of the best American insurance companies is less than two-thirds of the mortality expected according to this table, and but for the war risk the rates based upon this table would yield a profit.

"The bill provides that during the war only term insurance, renewable yearly, shall be issued. Within five years after the war, however, this insurance must be converted into one of the more usual forms.

"Yearly renewable term insurance is extremely cheap for a young man, about $8 a year at age of 29, but as the premiums increase annually it becomes very high at the advanced ages. It is the most desirable kind of insurance during the temporary period of a great risk. It is not, however, desirable for the Government to encourage men to continue it after the great risk is over. It is better for the men to pay more in their youth and less or nothing at all in their old age than to pay the natural premium of each year's insurance.

"This committee has therefore retained the provision for term insurance during the war, but has amended the House bill so as to make it, not optionally but compulsorily, convertible within five years after the war into one of the usual forms of insurance.

"The House bill has been further amended by providing specifically, instead of leaving it to the regulations, that when a policy matures it shall be paid not merely in installments, but in 240 monthly installments, retaining the provision, however, under which continuous monthly installments may be provided for by regulation.

"Inasmuch as the Government bears the war risk under these policies, your committee believes that the class of beneficiaries should be restricted within narrow limits, and not be left to regulations. The class includes the spouse, children, grandchildren, and parents, but the House bill has been amended by limiting brothers and sisters as beneficiaries to those who are dependent and by eliminating the provision under which, by regulations, the bureau was empowered to extend the class of beneficiaries.

"Inasmuch as by these amendments it is now specifically provided that on the maturity of a policy, payments shall be stretched over a period of 20 years in monthly installments, it was deemed best by the committee to reduce the maximum amount that could be applied for from $10,000 to $7,500. Seven thousand five hundred dollars paid out in 240 monthly installments, on a 3½ per cent basis, will yield approximately $42 per month, or a total of approximately $10,200. The essential difference, therefore, in the maximum amount of insurance provided for in the House bill and that provided for by your committee's amendment is that the former provides for installments whose commuted value is $10,000, whereas the latter provides for a total of installments extended over 20 years aggregating slightly over $10,000.

"JULIAN N. MACK."

Mr. BRADY. Before the Senator from Mississippi takes his seat I should like to ask him another question about how the policies or the allowances are commuted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You mean compensation?

Mr. BRADY. No; where they have the money refunded to them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is nothing commuted here except under the head of compensation in Article III.

Mr. BRADY. Section 304 reads:

> That if the injured person be deemed competent and not likely to become a public charge, upon his application and evidence satisfactory to the director that it will be for his best interests and for the best interests of his dependents, if any, future compensation payments for disability may be commuted in whole or in part for a lump sum equal to the present value of such payments or the proportion thereof to be commuted, and such lump sum paid to the injured person in lieu of all further compensation or of the proportion so commuted of all future payments of compensation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is under the compensation article.

Mr. BRADY. Does not the Senator feel that that is a very dangerous clause to put in there?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That does not relate to insurance at all. It relates to compensation in case of disability.

Mr. BRADY. I hope the Senator will understand that I am very heartily in favor of the insurance along those lines as suggested in the bill, but I am afraid if we permit the insurance companies to commute——

Mr. WILLIAMS. This does not relate to the insured.

Mr. SMOOT. It relates to the compensation, and the Senator from Idaho is undertaking to state that it would be very unwise to even allow him to commute his compensation.

Mr. BRADY. He can commute his compensation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He can only commute one-half of it.

Mr. BRADY. He can commute one-half of it. Is it right for us to allow him to do that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it is very questionable myself, but I will tell the Senator the reasons given to the committee in behalf of the provision. Here is a man who is receiving, let us say, $50 a month. What the cash value of half of that as commuted would be I do not know, but whatever that sum would be, he says to himself, "I can take that lump sum and go down here and buy this little stock of merchandise, and although I have not any legs, or but one leg, or but one arm, or only one eye, or whatever it is, I can still attend to that." So he thinks it is better for him to do that. One of the dangers to which the Senator refers is the danger that he will throw it away and become a public charity upon the Pension Bureau or upon the State institutions. So we thought of compromising it on one half and denied him the right to commute the other half.

Mr. BRADY. I am very much afraid of that part of the section, for I feel quite sure that the soldier would not average up in business any better than the average man engaged in business, and that shows that about 95 per cent of us fail in business. If that be true—and I think the statistics will show that it is—we take a chance of 95 per cent that that man is either going to be in want or we must grant him and his family a pension later on. He might have a misfortune, and from no fault of his own lose the money. If he should come here under those conditions, although we had commuted his compensation, the generous Senator from Mississippi, like myself, would vote to help him and his family.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is very largely true; and the danger to which the Senator from Idaho calls our attention is an actual and a real one. That is the reason we did not allow the soldier to commute it all. In the case that I have instanced, where a man was getting $50 and has commuted $25, he still would have enough left to keep him from becoming a public charge.

Then the Senator from Idaho must also remember that this entire thing is to take place under regulations to be made by the board. They take charge, and they will not let a man with a very small monthly payment commute half of it, because the other half left would not keep him from starving and would make him a public charge.

Mr. BRADY. My only wish in the premises is to protect the soldier himself and his family.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that, and I repeat that the danger to which the Senator has called our attention is a very real one. That is the reason why I did not want the soldier to commute it all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the first committee amendment to the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before we pass to a consideration of the committee amendments, I desire to say that it has occurred to me that the question addressed to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] might be regarded by some as developing a fatal weakness, or, at least, a deplorable weakness in the bill. The Senator from Michigan instanced the case of a soldier who came home from the war with no apparent wounds, and who subsequently developed a disability, or died, and the disability ensuing or the death resulting was easily attributable to his service. I inquire of the Senator from Mississippi if the condition suggested by the Senator from Michigan is not taken care of by the provision of the bill found at the top of page 29, which reads——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I must beg pardon of the Senator from Montana. I was not listening to him, because I thought he was addressing his question to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who was standing. I had yielded the floor. Therefore the Senator will have to explain the matter to me again.

Mr. WALSH. I inquire of the Senator from Mississippi whether the condition referred to by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is not taken care of by the provision of the bill at the top of page 29 to the effect—

That where compensation is payable for death or disability occurring after discharge or resignation from the service, claim must be made within two years after such death or the beginning of such disability.

A soldier comes home from the war with no apparent wounds, lives for 10 years thereafter, and then dies. It is then established that his death resulted from the accidents of the service. Is it not provided by the bill that his dependents would have then two years more after his death in which to establish the relationship between his death and his service?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator will please read section 307, on page 27 of the bill, which is as follows:

SEC. 307. That no compensation shall be payable for death or disability which does not occur prior to or within one year after discharge or resignation from the service, except that where, after a medical examination made pursuant to regulations, at the time of discharge or resignation from the service, or within such reasonable time thereafter, not exceeding one year, as may be allowed by regulations, a certificate has been obtained from the director to the effect that the injured person at the time of his discharge or resignation was suffering from injury likely to result in death or disability, compensation shall be payable for death or disability, whenever occurring, proximately resulting from such injury.

As the Senator will see, that language limits what otherwise would be the meaning of what he has read.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I had intended at this time to submit some remarks to the Senate on the pending bill, but I have to attend a meeting of the conference committee on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, of which I am a member. It seems to me that it is of as much importance to agree upon that bill and have it acted on by the House and the Senate as it would be to take up the time of the Senate this afternoon in discussing the bill which is now before us. I understand, however, that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] desires to address the Senate upon the bill. He will be here in a few moments. Therefore, I suggest the absence of a quorum, in order that the Senator from North Dakota may have time to reach the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUSTING in the chair). The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

That in order to give to every commissioned officer and enlisted man and to every member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) when employed in active service under the War Department or Navy Department greater protection for themselves and their dependents than is provided in Article III, the United States, upon application to the bureau and without medical examination, shall grant insurance against the death or total permanent disability of any such person, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 15, after the word "than," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$7,500," so as to make the clause read:

Shall grant insurance against the death or total permanent disability of any such person in any multiple of $500, and not less than $1,000 or more than $7,500, upon the payment of the premiums as hereinafter provided.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he desires to insist upon this amendment? I want the Senate to have a vote upon the amendment, in line 15, reducing the total amount authorized from $10,000 to $7,500.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What page is that on?

Mr. SMOOT. Page 31.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have no right to waive insisting upon the amendment on behalf of the committee. The committee discussed it very thoroughly and adopted it; and, representing the committee, I must insist upon it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then I am going to ask that the amendment be passed over for the present; and if the bill is not disposed of to-day I shall ask that this amendment be passed over until to-morrow, in order that I may present the matter to the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that that request be complied with, and I also ask unanimous consent that we may later recur to the $5,000 on line 5, page 2, and the $4,000 on line 11, page 2, because the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has asked that they be passed over, so that he may later, perhaps, offer an amendment; and I neglected to call the attention of the Senate to it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that there is no necessity for that. The Senator from North Carolina can offer his amendment to those amounts at any time after the committee amendments are agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At all events, I make the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to pass over the amendment on page 31, line 15. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 4, before the word "disabled," to insert "and permanently"; in line 11, after the word "wife," to insert "from the time of his death and during her widowhood, or to his"; and in line 16, before the word "disability," to insert "and permanent," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 401. That such insurance must be applied for within 120 days after enlistment or after entrance into or employment in the active service and before discharge or resignation, except that those persons who are in the active war service at the time of the publication of the terms and conditions of such contract of insurance may apply at any time within 120 days thereafter and while in such service. Any person in the active service on or after the 6th day of April, 1917, who, while in such service and before the expiration of 120 days from and after such publication, becomes or has become totally and permanently disabled or dies, or has died, without having applied for insurance, shall be deemed to have applied for and to have been granted insurance, payable to such person during his life in monthly installments of $25 each. If he shall die either before he shall have received any of such monthly installments or before he shall have received 240 of such monthly installments, then $25 per month shall be paid to his wife from the time of his death and during her widowhood, or to his child or widowed mother if and while they survive him: Provided, however, That not more than 240 of such monthly installments, including those received by such person during his total and permanent disability, shall be so paid; and in that event the amount of the monthly installments shall be apportioned between them as may be provided by regulations.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 25, after the word "parent," to insert "dependent"; on page 33, line 1, before the word "sister," to insert "dependent"; in line 2, before the word "disability," to insert "and permanent"; in the same line, after the word "them," to strike out "and to such other persons as may be provided from time to time by regulation"; in line 4, after the word "payable," to strike out "only"; in line 5, before the word "installment," to insert "204 equal monthly"; in line 8, after the word "values," to insert "dividends from gain and savings"; in line 12, after the word "insurance," to insert "or from time to time by regulations. All calculations shall be based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality and interest at 3½ per cent per annum, except that no deduction shall be made for continuous installments during the life of the insured in case his total and permanent disability continues more than 240 months"; in line 23, before the word "provided," to strike out "or as in the regulations"; on page 34, line 7, after the word "value," to insert "if any"; and in line 10, after the words "under the," to strike out "policy" and insert "contract of insurance," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 402. That the director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall promptly determine upon and publish the full and exact terms and conditions of such contract of insurance. The insurance shall not be assignable, and shall not be subject to the claims of creditors of the insured or of the beneficiary. It shall be payable only to a spouse, child, grandchild, parent, dependent brother or dependent sister, and also during total and permanent disability to the injured person, or to any or all of them. The insurance shall be payable in 240 equal monthly installments. Provisions for maturity at certain ages, for continuous installments during the life of the insured or beneficiaries, or both, for cash, loan, paid-up and extended values, dividends from gains and savings, and such other provisions for the protection and advantage of and for alternative benefits to the insured and the beneficiaries as may be found to be reasonable and practicable, may be provided for in the contract of insurance, or from time to time by regulations. All calculations shall be based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality and interest at 3½ per cent per annum, except that no deduction shall be made for continuous installments during the life of the insured in case his total and permanent disability continues more than 240 months. Subject to regulations, the insured shall at all times have the right to change the beneficiary or beneficiaries of such insurance without the consent of such beneficiary or beneficiaries, but only within the classes herein provided. If no beneficiary within the permitted class be designated by the insured, either in his lifetime or by his last will and testament, or if the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, the insurance shall be payable to such person or persons, within the permitted class of beneficiaries as would under the laws of the State of the residence of the insured be entitled to his personal property in case of intestacy. If no such person survive the insured, then there shall be paid to the estate of the insured an amount equal to the reserve value, if any, of the insurance at the time of his death, calculated on the basis of the American Experience Table of Mortality and 3½ per cent interest in full of all obligations under the contract of insurance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 20, after the word "each," to strike out "convertible after war, without medical examination, into such form or forms of insurance, and with such provisions for premium payments as may be prescribed by regulations. Payments" and insert "No later than five years after the war the term insurance shall be converted, without medical examination, into such form or forms of insurance as may be prescribed by regulations and as the insured may request. Regulations shall provide for the right to convert into ordinary life, 20-payment life, endowment maturing at age 62, and into other usual forms of insurance and shall prescribe the time and method of payment of the premiums thereon, but payments," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 404. That during the period of war the insurance shall be term insurance for successive terms of one year each. No later than five years after the war the term insurance shall be converted, without medical examination, into such form or forms of insurance as may be prescribed by regulations and as the insured may request. Regulations shall provide for the right to convert into ordinary life, 20 payment life, endowment maturing at age 62, and into other usual forms of insurance and shall prescribe the time and method of payment of the premiums thereon, but payments of premiums in advance shall not be required for periods of more than one month each and may be deducted from the pay or deposit of the insured or be otherwise made at his election.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have no objection to this amendment to section 404 if the plan of insurance under Article V is agreed to; but I want to give notice that I have already submitted for printing, and it is lying upon the table, an amendment to this section, and I shall offer it as a substitute to-morrow.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator having the bill in charge that the word "no," on line 23, it seems to me, should be "not," so that it will read "not later than five years."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; that is evidently the better word.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that it be amended in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 34, line 23, it is proposed to strike out the word "no" and insert the word "not."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, inasmuch as this section leaves a hiatus between the period of the war and the period of five years, in which it is uncertain as to what the rights will be, I ask that there be inserted, after the word "war," on line 18, the words "and until converted within five years thereafter."

Mr. SMOOT. That amendment would compel everybody to wait until five years after the war before making the conversion.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no. The beginning of the section reads:

That during the period of war the insurance shall be term insurance for successive terms of one year each.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now we say "That during the period of war and until converted." It does not say "five years, and until converted within five years thereafter." That will then apply to the provision that—

Not later than five years after the war the term insurance shall be converted, without medical examination—

And so forth.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will say to the Senator that all that is necessary is to use the words "and until converted," so that it would read:

That during the period of war, and until converted, the insurance shall be term insurance for successive terms of one year each. Not later than five years—

And so forth. Then it becomes compulsory.

Mr. McCUMBER. That might do, but the language I suggested would make it more clear that it meant until converted within that period, because that is the period in which the conversion is allowed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but if you used the word "period" and kept the word "shall" in there, then you would force them to keep the term insurance during the five years. If you should just say, "That during the period of war and thereafter until converted," that would cover it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am willing to have that language inserted, although I think it would be more clear the other way.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move, then, that after the word "war" the words "and thereafter until converted" be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 34, line 18, after the words "period of war," it is proposed to insert "and thereafter until converted."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 22, after the word "action," to strike out "And provided further, That no" and insert a period and the word "No"; and on page 36, line 1, after the word "violating," to strike out "this act" and insert "the provisions of this section," so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 405. That in the event of disagreement as to a claim under the contract of insurance between the bureau and any beneficiary or beneficiaries thereunder, an action on the claim may be brought against the United States in the district court of the United States in and for the district in which such beneficiaries or any one of them resides. The court, as part of its judgment, shall determine and allow such reasonable attorney's fees, not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount recovered, to be paid by the claimant on behalf of whom such proceedings are instituted to his attorney; and it shall be unlawful for the attorney or for any other person acting as claim agent or otherwise to ask for, contract for, or receive any other compensation because of such action. No other compensation or fee shall be charged or received by any person except such as may be authorized by the commissioner in regulations to be promulgated by him. Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, shall for each and every such offense, be fined not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the reading of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that completes the committee amendments. Now, I ask the Senator from Mississippi, having the bill in charge, to lay the bill aside until to-morrow morning, unless there is some other Senator who desires to speak to-day.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not see why we should waste any time. We are all anxious to get away from here. We can go on this evening considering amendments, and we will take up the other amendment to-morrow if the Senator wants to.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what I am asking.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no use adjourning to-day, however.

Mr, SMOOT. As far as I am personally concerned, I must attend the conference, as I stated before to the Senate; and I want to submit what remarks I have upon the bill to-morrow morning.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But that does not prevent our going on and considering other amendments this evening.

Mr. SMOOT. No, if there are other amendments; but before I leave the Chamber I should like to have it understood that——

Mr. WILLIAMS. We will not take snap judgment upon the Senator, and we will take a recess this afternoon until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, and his amendment shall not be voted on until that time.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all I wish.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If we get through with everything else in connection with the bill, and if there are no other amendments except the Senator's, then, of course, I will ask to take up the bill again in the morning. There is no use in recessing the Senate even then, however.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any further committee amendments?

Mr. SMOOT. I want it understood that the bill will not go out of the Committee of the Whole to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator make a motion to that effect?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, no; just so that there is an understanding about it.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, if it is in order at this time, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is in order. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend Article II by adding, at the end of the article, on page 19, after line 24, the following:

SEC. 211. That in lieu of the family allowances otherwise granted in this article every commissioned officer of the military or naval forces of the United States while on active duty, with or without troops, who has a wife, child, or parent wholly dependent on him for support, shall be furnished at the place where he maintains such dependent the number of rooms now prescribed by the act of March 2, 1907 (34th Stats., p. 1168), as the allowance of quarters for his grade, or be paid commutation therefor at the rate now authorized by law."

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will ask the Senator from Indiana what is the object of this amendment?

Mr. NEW. The object of the amendment is to provide for the payment to officers now in the field abroad and who have left their families on this side the same commutation of quarters that they would receive if they were here at Army posts, that being now denied them under the operation of the pending bill and the present law. The pending bill would not affect the pending law so as to permit this without this amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is there in the present law that forbids their having these quarters? I do not know of anything.

Mr. NEW. It is not permissible under the present law. It would require this amendment. I am assured of that by the Judge Advocate General's Department.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It seems to me, Mr. President, that this is a provision that ought to go upon the military appropriation bill. This is a matter that is not germane or relevant to the bill that we are now considering. I do not know but that, if we are to have an allowance of quarters for officers according to their grade, it ought to be provided by an amendment to the present law upon that subject; but I do not like this bill to be mixed up with a matter that neither the committee nor any member of the committee has had time to look into, and concerning the nature of which we are in a good deal of ignorance.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I think this amendment, while not perhaps strictly germane, is not out of place here; and it is true that unless it is provided for in this bill it apparently can not be provided for at all. There are no other bills in which it can be inserted.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NEW. I do.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana if his amendment refers only to officers serving across the water?

Mr. NEW. Yes; as I understand it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. It does not have reference to officers that are serving with troops at the cantonments in the United States?

Mr. NEW. Yes; it does refer to officers serving with troops.

Mr. McCUMBER. It should.

Mr. NEW. And it should; yes. I have a copy of it here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the senior Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NEW. Just one moment in answer to the question of the junior Senator from Mississippi, if the senior Senator from Mississippi will kindly permit me to answer that. It includes "every commissioned officer of the military or naval forces of the United States while on active duty, with or without troops, who has a wife, child, or parent wholly dependent on him for support."

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the law with reference to where the officers are serving with troops in the United States?

Mr. NEW. If at a military post or here, they are provided either with houses or with a sum of money by way of commutation of quarters.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I understand that; but they are not given that when they are serving with troops in the field?

Mr. NEW. Oh, I think not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am not willing to see this amendment go on this bill. In the first place, it says:

That in lieu of the family allowances otherwise granted in this article every commissioned officer shall receive—

And so forth.

The commissioned officers do not receive any allowances under this bill. Therefore they are not entitled under this bill to receive anything in lieu of allowances. The allowances were purposely confined to the enlisted men, and the reason why they were confined to the enlisted men was because the officers' salaries were thought to be sufficient to enable their families to get along without any extra help from the Government. Therefore this amendment ought to be defeated.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, this amendment was originally prepared as an amendment to another bill, and the language to which the Senator from Mississippi has just referred really should be stricken out. I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to perfect my amendment by striking out the words "granted in this article" in line 2 of the amendment, and substituting for them the words "as provided by law."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The Senator from Indiana has the right to perfect the amendment as he desires.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that it would read how?

Mr. NEW (reading)—

That in lieu of the family allowances otherwise provided by law every commissioned officer—

And so forth.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is, then, in addition to the quarters allowances which officers are now receiving?

Mr. NEW. No.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. NEW. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. It is not in addition, as I understand it. It is simply giving those officers who have heretofore had quarters at the forts who have been ordered to the front, and whose families have been ordered out of those quarters and are now living in towns and paying rent, an allowance in lieu of quarters.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, we are to give the advantages of free quarters, which soldiers at the posts have, to soldiers who are not at the posts.

Mr. NEW. That is it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the soldiers in the United States who do not go to France will also get the benefit of free quarters as if they were at posts.

Mr. CURTIS. The soldiers stationed in Washington now are allowed a certain amount each month for quarters, while families of officers now serving in France who were occupying quarters at certain posts have been compelled to give up their quarters and remove all their effects, and are now paying rent in Washington and other cities, and their husbands are receiving no allowance whatever for quarters. This amendment, as I understand it—I have not read it; I have only heard it read—gives those officers what they were receiving before they left the post for service in France.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It not only gives it to those that have gone to France, but it gives it to officers in the United States who are not at posts. It changes the entire allowance feature of the military law; and instead of merely allowing free quarters to those who are at posts because the quarters belong to the United States Government, it goes out and rents quarters for them if they are elsewhere and away from the post.

If it were confined simply to those who were in action in France, it might be less objectionable, although I think it would be objectionable even then; but this, as it is worded here, would apply to any officer who is in any city or anywhere else not at a post. He has not hitherto had this allowance for quarters, and there is no reason why he should have it now.

Mr. NEW. He has had it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He has had it when he was at a post, not when he was serving anywhere else in the United States not at a post; and you are going to give it to him serving anywhere else in the United States not at a post.

Mr. CURTIS. All the officers now serving in Washington in the departments are allowed quarters, or allowed commutation in lieu of quarters.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. As soon as the war began, as far as we are concerned, and we were compelled to call in the officers all over the country it became immediately apparent that there was not, of course, enough room at the several posts for the families of the officers who were called here. It was intended that all officers, whether at distant posts or other places, should either have quarters or have allowance for quarters.

Now, there are no quarters to be obtained at the posts. You are allowing, however, under the present rules those who are performing service down here in the departments an allowance. They may be taken out of the post quarters and given work in the departments at Washington, and as they have not post quarters any longer they are given an allowance. But as they are being sent out all over the country from here and elsewhere to France, especially in this country, to give instruction and to drill men, no allowances whatever are allowed for their quarters. So not only must the officer pay board away from home and obtain rooms, if he is not out in a tent, but he must also hire another home for his family at either the one place or the other.

This is simply to equalize the provision so that all officers who are scattered over the country and are performing their duty where they can not obtain through the Government a place for their families shall have an allowance for hiring places elsewhere the same as those who are here in the departments. Why should it not be granted?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know why it should not have been granted originally. If that is the law now, it seems to me it is very absurd. But I do not want this bill to be used as a vehicle to change the military law of the country. It ought to go to the Committee on Military Affairs and be considered there and bring in a separate bill here, and it should be dealt with in a wise way. The Committee on Finance knows nothing in the world about the question of military allotments and allowances; it has not studied the question; and I do not feel that this ought to be pushed upon the pending bill at this time.

If it be true that no officer is allowed commutation for quarters in the United States away from his post, except those sitting around desks here in Washington, that is a very absurd law. How long it has been on the statute books I do not know, but it is new to me; it is a law that ought to be amended by the proper committee and in the proper way. I will ask the Senator if the Military Affairs Committee have considered this matter?

Mr. NEW. It has never been considered by the Military Affairs Committee, but the system of allowances for quarters, or commutation of quarters, is a matter of regulation and not of law, as I understand it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It says here "allowance of quarters for his grade or be paid commutation therefor at the rate now authorized by law." So it can not be a matter of regulation, or else the amendment is wrong.

Mr. NEW. Yes; I suppose it is provided by law, but the conditions have entirely changed. The Senator from Mississippi objects to the consideration of this proposition in connection with the pending bill, and offers as an objection to it that it is a matter which should be considered by some other committee and brought up as a separate bill. The fact is that there is no time for that at this session of Congress, as every Senator here very well knows. If it is not considered here an actual hardship is going to be imposed upon the families of a great many officers who are now at the front, because the Government has sent them there and whose families are—I would not hold them up as objects of charity or anything of that kind, but whose families are very poorly provided for here now. I know of more than one instance here in Washington right now where the wives of Army officers who are serving at the front are seeking employment for themselves in the departments or wherever they can legitimately get it because the pay of their husbands at their present rank does not suitably provide—and by suitably I mean adequately—I mean decently provide for the living of those families here in Washington and in other places in the United States where they may be while their husbands are at the front. It is to meet conditions of that kind that this amendment is proposed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask the Senator before he takes his seat whether legislation like this was enacted during the Spanish-American War, or the Mexican War, or at any other time, for trained officers who made a profession of arms and had to go abroad. Was any legislation of this sort enacted to give them an extra allowance for quarters?

Mr. NEW. I have no information whatever on that point. I could not say that either it was or was not done.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to be as nice about this matter as I can.

Mr. NEW. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will not make any objection to its being adopted with the distinct understanding that after it goes to conference I reserve the right, after looking into it further, if I find that we ought not to stand by it, not to stand by it.

Mr. NEW. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

MAHONING RIVER BRIDGE, OHIO.

Mr. HARDING. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to have the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] submit a report from the Committee on Commerce on a bridge bill, and I shall ask for its consideration. It relates to the construction of a steel plant that is very necessary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection, unless it takes up too much time. I will yield with the understanding that it shall not take over 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Texas may submit a report from the Committee on Commerce. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 6310) granting the consent of Congress to the Trumbull Steel Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River in the State of Ohio.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill, but I do think the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] ought to be acted upon first. If it is understood that that has been agreed to, I have no objection to the unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Indiana to present his amendment when this matter is disposed of.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The amendment of the Senator from Indiana is pending and is next in order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. All right.

Mr. FLETCHER. Before that is disposed of, I am inclined to think it is a very risky amendment to adopt at this time. I think it is a subject that ought to be considered very carefully.

Mr. HARDING. I ask the Senator to wait until the bridge bill is through.

Mr. FLETCHER. I thought the amendment of the Senator from Indiana was to be disposed of first.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has stated that he will recognize the Senator from Indiana to present his amendment upon the conclusion of this bill. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Mississippi, I ask that the question on the adoption of my amendment may be put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The SECRETARY. On page 19, after section 210, insert:

SEC. 211. That in lieu of the family allowances otherwise provided by law every commissioned officer of the military or naval forces of the United States while on active duty, with or without troops, who has a wife, child, or parent wholly dependent upon him for support, shall be furnished at the place where he maintains such dependent the number of rooms now prescribed by the act of March 2, 1907 (34 Stats., p. 1168), as the allowance of quarters for his grade, or be paid commutation therefor at the rate now authorized by law.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, it is difficult to figure just where that is going to lead and to what extent it is going. It applies not only to the Regular Army, but to all new officers. It is general, and it seems to me we ought to have some expression of the department upon it. The only way we can get that would be, of course, to have the Military Affairs Committee consider it. It is a very far-reaching proposition. It seems to be offered to a bill that it does not really relate to. We are dealing here with the question of insurance, with provision for the families of dependent soldiers, and now to raise this question about rooms for families of officers, no matter where they may be stationed, no matter what it costs, it seems to me is going a good ways and we are leaping in the dark. I have not information enough myself on the subject to vote upon it intelligently. It is a matter that ought to have been laid before the department and we should have had a report upon it, and it should have been considered by a committee.

I think myself in some cases it seems entirely fair and proper; I agree to some extent with what the Senator from Indiana has said in discussing it; but I am impressed that it is too far-reaching, and, as I said, leading in a direction which we have not considered at all and have no information upon. We can not see what is going to be the effect on the regular laws with reference to the Military Establishment. I think it is a mistake to offer it to this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FLETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. McCUMBER. If either under the present regulations or under the law—and I do not pretend to know what either of them may be—an officer is allowed for the necessary four rooms, or whatever the allowance may be when working here in the departments and his family resides here, and then he is sent out to take charge of a cantonment or to give instructions in Texas or elsewhere, immediately his right to have the allowance is taken away from him, does the Senator think that that is just and wise?

Mr. FLETCHER. I can see where there are arguments in favor of some change of that system, but as I said we ought to have full information on the subject, and we have not got that information. How far is it going to extend? I do not know that it would be the proper thing in every instance to provide rules for the families of officers wherever they may be sent.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly the Senator must agree that if an officer is sent away from the place of his residence to perform services, his expenses are naturally increased that much, and the Government ought not to deprive him of an allowance that has come to him heretofore for quarters. Yet that is what is being done to-day, as I am informed.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator from North Dakota if it has not been the law for many years that when an officer was ordered from Washington to go to the West, for instance, he is not provided any commutation of quarters?

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not know whether it has been the law or not. I simply know that it should not be the law.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is now proposed to change the law of the country, and we are doing it under conditions and circumstances the result of which we can not foretell. It has been the law in the past.

Mr. VARDAMAN. In the Spanish-American War when an officer was serving in the field, he had no commutation of quarters. When he was detailed for service in the city, he was given so many rooms or commutation of quarters. If the Senator from Indiana would amend his amendment so as to give this special pay to the men who are serving at the front, I would be very glad to support it.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think myself that it might perhaps go that far. Even that is an unjustifiable thing in the military law of the country to be placed in this bill, with which it has not anything to do. I think it is foreign to the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to say to the Senator from Mississippi that a soldier is in the service of the Government when he is at a cantonment training other men as much as though he were in the field in France. To say that an officer at a cantonment or elsewhere by order of his Government is not entitled to be housed by the Government respectably upon that reservation or otherwise is to me a very great hardship and unwise economy.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator will permit me, that has not been the law for the last 40 years.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, yes; I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. VARDAMAN. When the officer is with his command in the field he lives in a tent, and there is not any commutation of quarters.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; Mr. President, I think the Senator is in error.

Under the old regulations an officer in the Army was entitled to quarters, heat, light, and so forth.

Mr. VARDAMAN. That is true, when at the Army post.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, under the old regulations an officer of the Army was entitled to quarters, heat, light, and so forth. In lieu of quarters, he received compensation therefor as follows: Second lieutenant, two rooms, at $12 per room per month; first lieutenant, three rooms; captain, four rooms; major, five rooms; lieutenant colonel, six rooms; and colonel, seven rooms. When an officer was ordered to the field his family were permitted to retain quarters in his permanent post.

To-day, however, when an officer is ordered to, say, Camp Custer, he is considered on permanent duty. No quarters are provided for his family and he is not even allowed to store his furniture on the Government reservation. As you can see, this works a double hardship. He is compelled to store his furniture or to lease quarters at a very decided expense near the cantonment to which he is assigned. The rentals near these cantonments immediately become exorbitant. This was equally true on the Mexican border and will continue to be the case until the Government takes steps to provide housing facilities wherever large bodies of troops are concentrated.

The unfairness of this situation bears with peculiar weight upon the Regular Army officer, as he very seldom has a permanent home to which he can send his family. To a greater or less degree, it bears on the new officer coming from civil life into the National Army, although he more frequently has still in existence his old home provisions.

Eliminating all question of personal justice and looking on the matter purely from the viewpoint of efficiency, it seems to me a mistake for the Government to pursue this course. Inevitably the strain of debt and financial worry, which I feel certain will result, will distract the officer from his real work. You know how heavy and how immediate that real work is to-day.

He has no home, he is in the Regular Army, and for the Government of the United States to divorce from his family every man who enters the Regular Army and becomes an officer is perfectly absurd. We have not reached that pass yet.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator seems to think the scope of this amendment is confined to officers of the Regular Army. It is not.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I understand that. I was replying to the suggestion made by the junior Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the Senator from Michigan will permit me, I know that during the Spanish-American War as long as I was with my command there were no quarters provided. The last 30 days I was in the Spanish-American War I was detailed as chairman of the Army court of claims in the city of Santiago, and there I received commutation of quarters as a major.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But the Senator was a volunteer officer, was he not?

Mr. VARDAMAN. Certainly, I was; and under the law the volunteer officers had the same pay that the Regular Army officers had, less that which is added on account of length of service. There was no commutation of quarters to a man who was serving with his command in the field.

Mr. NEW and Mr. BRADY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Has the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] yielded the floor?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have not yielded the floor, and I propose to emphasize this inequality. It is perfectly absurd to say that an officer of the Army on duty shall go to a given place and act either as a commander of men in the field against our enemy or in the field training men, or in the executive Army management, which is an equally responsible function, shall not be provided with the ordinary accompaniments of orderly living. The old regulations take cognizance of this necessity, and for one I desire to protest against any impairment of the custom and urge its reasonable expansion. The hazards of a soldier's life are many at best, and under the most favorable conditions they should always be housed and clothed and fed as befits their occupation. Whenever possible, they should be protected from unnecessary hardship, standing, as they do, between the country and danger. I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will be adopted.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, with respect to what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] says about a modification of this amendment, so as to make it apply only to officers at the front, I should like to add to the point made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] by asking just what constitutes service at the front. An Army officer is at the front when he is following orders in some respects, and so far as it applies to the matter touched upon by this amendment it would affect the families of the officers stationed here in Washington in exactly the same degree and in exactly the same way that it would affect the officers who are stationed in France.

Also I agree with the Senator from Florida in what he says about this being a far-reaching proposition. It is a far-reaching proposition and it is a far-reaching war. We are called on here to make provision on all sorts of subjects, that were unheard of before and that seem staggering in their size. That is true. We have enacted into law a great many things here which call for the appropriation of a great deal of money.

Since this amendment was offered and since I have been on my feet I understand that the War Department, when asked for some sort of a calculation as to the amount of money that this would cost, replied with an estimate to the effect that it would run up somewhere in the neighborhood of $20,000,000. That seems like a great deal of money, to be sure, but I do not care if it does cost $20,000,000; I think if we are going to send men into the Army the way we are doing—with which I most cordially agree—Congress ought to make suitable provision for the keeping of their families in an ordinary degree of comfort, anyhow, even if it does cost a large sum of money. We must not stop short at least of making suitable provision for the care, and comfortable care, of the families of these men. I think it would be found to be true, probably, that it will cost somewhere in the neighborhood of $20,000,000, and I base that upon what has been said to me since I have been here on the floor. As the Senator from North Dakota remarked to me aside, above all it should not be granted to one half of them and be denied to the other half.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NEW. I yield.

Mr. CALDER. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana if the reserve officers in the different branches of the War Department and if the reserve officers at the arsenals and munition factories throughout the country are not receiving commutation of quarters if they have no quarters.

Mr. NEW. Yes; I think they are.

Mr. CALDER. I think they are, too. The Senator's amendment would provide commutation of quarters for families of officers going abroad. They would be in exactly the same position as officers who are stationed at home.

Mr. NEW. Exactly.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not rise to oppose the consideration of this measure, but I think there should be a better understanding of it. There is nothing in existing law which requires any provision to be made for any Army officer's family, but there are certain allowances made to officers in the nature of commutation of quarters, light, heat, and so forth, which I think the Senator from Michigan has read, as to the number of rooms, calculating $10 a month for each room, and so forth. You go into a post where there are several married men and several bachelors, and the senior ranking officer may be a bachelor. He takes the choice of quarters and outranks anyone who is junior to him; it may be an officer with wife and seven or eight children. He says, "I want these quarters; move." And they have to move.

This commutation for quarters is paid when the officer is ordered on some detached service or city service like here in Washington, but when they are at the front with the Army or at Regular Army posts they take such quarters, either on the front or otherwise, as the United States provides for them. The duty of the United States under the law is to provide quarters for its officers and enlisted men only.

The commutation of quarters to enlisted men and to officers is always calculated without the officer's family. In fact, all the legislation respecting the Army has been made along the line that they officially had no family, and if they did that they should share the commutation, and so forth, that officers alone get, regardless of whether married or not.

So whatever we do in this matter of legislation about families is absolutely new. There is nothing of record, so far as I know, that alludes to the plan at all except to make the allowances I have mentioned; for instance, in the transportation of household goods an officer who is a bachelor can take just as many pounds of such baggage as a man who has a family. So the whole subject is new as far as providing for families is concerned.

On the other hand, I should say, though, that it has been a matter not of legislation, but a matter of general orders or knowledge that at Regular Army posts while officers are at the front these quarters can be occupied by the families of officers. There are certain allowances of fuel and certain allowances of light. There is no difference between volunteer officers and Regular Army officers. They all get the same pay and the same allowances. If there are quarters provided at some post for a volunteer officer, he can undoubtedly, upon application, have his family remain there while he is at the front.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, there is no disagreement whatever between the Senator from Wyoming and myself regarding the regulations which have hitherto been effective; but I rose more particularly to protest against any neglect to appropriately house these officers at the various cantonments. The same rule ought to apply in Washington. I want these officers to be provided for at the encampments. For instance, take the situation at Camp Custer, and what is true of that camp I suppose is true of other camps throughout the country. It is almost impossible to get a house in the vicinity of Camp Custer, and if one is obtained it is obtained at an exorbitant price. You should not take away these allowances.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the whole Army plan is for men at war or men in training not to be attached or to have their families in close proximity unless it may be an occasion-happen so. I do not know of instances anywhere where we have provided such quarters in temporary cantonments, or where the families of officers have followed the Army and been allowed quarters. I think we would have to provide for them at some other place.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. On the theory of the Senator from Wyoming, the war ought to be fought by bachelors entirely or by keeping married men away from their families even during camp work.

Mr. WARREN. I am not stating a theory; I am stating what the law is.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I hope there will be reasonable liberality, both under the law and under the regulations, to care for the families of soldiers, officers and men, at their place of service if that is practicable and feasible, as it is in many cases; and I should like very much to see the old rule of making allowances applied to the present situation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am in the same boat, I think, with most of the Senators, so far as an accurate realization of exactly what would be accomplished by this amendment in addition to what can be accomplished under existing law is concerned; but inasmuch as the scope of this amendment is limited to officers who have either a parent or a child or a wife wholly dependent upon them for support, and a great many of our officers are abroad, where the means of communication with those persons who are wholly dependent upon them is very much interrupted, I should like to adhere, and I hope that the Senate will rather adhere, to practically what it had decided upon before the Senator from Florida commenced to doubt the wisdom of adopting this amendment; that is, under the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi, in order to give the department a chance to express its views as to the wisdom of some legislation along this line, either this or some amended project, let it go to the committee of conference with the understanding that, if the conferees on further investigation think it unwise, they shall not be compelled to stand for it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In other words, that the Senate conferees shall not be held by the action of the Senate on this subject?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That this action shall not be considered as the final judgment of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I will suggest to the Senator that conferees never are held; they always disregard the Senate's injunction.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I would not vote for it myself, I will say to the Senator from Michigan, with the idea of directing the conferees to stand for something as to the finality about which I have such an indifferent judgment as I have at present; but I do think that there is some merit in the proposition. It appeals to me to the extent, at least, of having the matter investigated and getting the opinion of the department on the matter. I think if the War Department should advocate this, or some substitute for it, the conference committee would be in a sufficiently judicial frame of mind to accept it.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will excuse me, this amendment has gone to the War Department, as all such propositions do, though I am inclined to think that we have had no official report on it yet. I agree with the Senator from Connecticut that if this subject is to go to conference—and I am not objecting to it—we must, of course, expect to refer the whole matter to the War Department and to hear from it because, if favorably considered, it might want to be enlarged, reduced, or changed in some manner; and I think the department ought to be consulted regarding it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Moreover, the conferees would want to know how much it is going to cost and how far it would operate.

Mr. PHELAN. The Senator from Indiana said that the cost would be about $20,000,000; but I do not know whether the department has made such an estimate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They have made an estimate; but I do not know whether or not they have given any opinion as to the wisdom of the proposition. They have, however, made an estimate as to the probable cost.

Mr. PHELAN. May I ask the Senator from Indiana whether the War Department has submitted any data on the subject?

Mr. NEW. I have never had a communication from the War Department on the subject.

Mr. PHELAN. To whom has the information been given by the War Department as to the estimated cost?

Mr. NEW. I stated a while ago, I will say in reply to the Senator from California, that I understood, since I have introduced this amendment this afternoon, that the matter had been submitted to the War Department or that there had been some consultation with the War Department about it; but I have never had the reply of the War Department, if one was formally made. However, it was my understanding that they had made and submitted an estimate of the probable cost of this proposition, and that it would be somewhere in the neighborhood of $20,000,000. Whether that information is absolutely accurate I can not say; but it is so far as I know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will suggest to the Senator from Indiana that if he is going to try to get this provision upon this bill it ought to carry its own appropriation, because if we spend $20,000,000 for this purpose we have got to take that $20,000,000 out of the amount which is appropriated for the execution of the provisions of the bill. So the Senator had better add to his amendment the words "and $20,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, are hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section." I can tell the Senator now that we have not made the appropriations in this bill too large for what there is before us in this measure, and the amendment would have a better chance in conference if it carried its own appropriation.

Mr. NEW. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi, and ask the Secretary to insert at the end of the amendment the words:

For carrying out the provisions of this section the sum of $25,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I should dislike to think that the hasty estimate of the sum appropriated should be so large as to influence unfavorably the action of the conferees on this bill. It seems to me that the sum proposed is very largely in excess of the amount of money that will be required.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The conferees can cut it down.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, whatever sum is necessary to do the work, it ought in candor to be stated in connection with the provision.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Very well.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And if the largeness of the sum would influence the conferees unfavorably, it is still due to them that that fact should come to them as a part of the proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes; but if the cost should not approximate the amount given in the amendment, we ought to know that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We can learn from the War Department about that while the matter is in conference.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is the Secretary ready to state the suggestion the Senator from Indiana accepted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment as now modified by the Senator from Indiana.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment offered by Mr. NEW it is proposed to add the following:

For carrying out the provisions of this section the sum of $25,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. KING. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW]. Mr. President, it seems to me the position of the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is the correct one. I regard this method of legislation as unwise and dangerous. The Military Affairs Committee have had under consideration during this special session and during the preceding session of Congress important matters relating to the organization of the Army and connected with the war upon which we have entered, and no one who was familiar with the legislation emanating from that committee can deny that the utmost liberality has characterized the conduct of the committee and the action of the Congress. Whatever has been deemed necessary for the welfare of the Army and regarded as essential to the defense of our country has been done by this Congress. Now we are concluding the work of this session and considering an insurance and compensation bill which further cares for our military and naval forces. An amendment is offered by the Senator from Indiana which is not germane to the bill under consideration and pertaining to a matter which, confessedly, no Senator is entirely familiar with. To adopt this amendment under such circumstances would be, in my opinion, the height of unwisdom, and I was about to say the height of folly. It certainly is imprudent and improvident to attempt legislation of the character suggested by the distinguished Senator from Indiana when we possess so little information bearing upon the subject. Moreover, no committee has suggested legislation covering the subject referred to in the proposed amendment and no representative of the War Department has recommended its enactment.

If this legislation is necessary and important the subject should be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. That committee is in almost daily session and will promptly consider it. If the measure is meritorious and can not be passed before we adjourn, it will be remembered that we will be back again in December. There will be ample opportunity then to address ourselves to this important question, if it is an important one, and there is no doubt but what between now and then many important questions will arise requiring additional legislation relating to military and naval affairs and the questions growing out of the war. To make an appropriation now of $25,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, without an estimate, without the slightest comprehension of what it means, without any recommendation from the department as to the necessity for it, without dealing in a broad and general way with the subject is, in my opinion, the height of unwisdom. Such a course of procedure, dealing with little or big matters, would not commend itself to a State legislature, to say nothing of a great body such as this. I feel that it would be a mistake to ingraft this provision upon the pending bill, and therefore hope the amendment will not prevail.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana as modified.

R. 5723, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes, through the regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, I move to strike out section 304 of the bill, commencing on line 24, page 25, and ending on line 15, page 26.

I am very heartily in favor of the passage of this bill, but I believe that this section will be very injurious to the men and their dependents that we are trying to assist. I can not understand how anyone could listen to the splendid presentation and analysis of the bill this morning by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] without realizing that it is one of the very best measures of this character that we have considered during the session and is for the benefit of the citizens of this country. We have provided for the soldier's family while he is at the battle front; we have provided for the disabled soldier, and we have made this provision in a businesslike way; but at the same time, after making this provision, we leave a loophole that will cause the loss to many families of the amounts that we are endeavoring to give them.

I read the section:

SEC. 304. That if the injured person be deemed competent and not likely to become a public charge, upon his application and evidence satisfactory to the director that it will be for his best interests and for the best interests of his dependents, if any, future compensation payments for disability may be commuted in whole or in part for a lump sum equal to the present value of such payments or the proportion thereof to be commuted, and such lump sum paid to the injured person in lieu of all further compensation or of the proportion so commuted of all future payments of compensation.

That has been modified by the following proviso:

Provided, however, That in case of partial disability rated at 30 per cent or more of total disability, or in case of total disability, not more than 50 per cent of the compensation payments as for a man without a wife or child shall be so commutable. The basis for determining present values of future payments of compensation shall be prescribed from time to time by regulation.

If this section is not eliminated, these men, after they have returned from the war and have a reasonable amount coming to them, may find an opportunity for investment that they think will be advantageous to them, and they will ask for their commutation, secure the money, and make the investment. That is their best judgment; it affects them individually; but in addition to that it affects their dependents. If they receive the money and lose it and then pass away, their families will be in want; and every Senator on this floor knows that in a case of that character, when they would come here and ask for a pension, this body would grant it. We would not permit the wives and sons and daughters of our soldiers to be in want.

We never have done it in years gone by, and we would not do it now. By protecting them in this way we not only do justice to the Government but we do justice to the man himself and his dependents.

I am perfectly willing and exceedingly anxious that these men, who have been in the war and have been maimed or disabled or crippled for life, shall be taken care of in a proper way just as long as they live. I do not want even the most remote opportunity for them to be placed in a position where this insurance is going to be taken away from them. Every business man in this country knows that from 90 to 95 per cent of normal business men fail. Then how can we expect the average citizen, who has not had a large business experience, to care for his estate in a manner that will absolutely insure his protection through life? More than that, after he is gone, how many women are capable of administering his little estate?

I want to protect our boys who fight for their country. They have fought for their country and their country's cause, and it is our duty to place safeguards around them to-day that will make it impossible for them to lose the money that we have provided for them.

I have before me here a letter written by one of the best and most expert life-insurance men in this country. The letter is not addressed to me, and I have not had an opportunity to secure from the gentleman to whom it was addressed permission to use his name. For that reason I shall simply ask the Secretary to read the body of the letter, which explains this situation much better than I can explain it, and after it has been read I am willing to leave to the judgment of the Senate the question whether this section should be left in or stricken out.

I ask that the Secretary read the letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Your letter of the 14th of this month reached me at Colville, and while it is rather difficult to cover the question of annuity, or lump-sum settlement in regard to insurance in a letter, I will endeavor to make myself as plain and brief as possible.

I believe that there is absolutely no question as to the difference regarding the two settlements. As I understand the matter, the purpose of the bill is to replace with modern insurance methods the rather clumsy pension bill that has been in use for a number of years. In other words, I suppose the object is to get away from the old style of pension, and, of course, if this is the case, it is very important that a beneficiary be protected by the Government for a number of years; and judging from the experience tables that all insurance men have at their command, it would seem that the most awkward thing, perhaps, that the Government could do would be to allow a lump-sum settlement to the beneficiary, inasmuch as statistics show that 92 out of every 100 women that are left large estates lose everything or nearly so within a period of seven years.

There are also many other striking examples of the loss of fortunes by even our most careful and shrewdest business men, and consequently we can hardly expect inexperienced women or children, as the case may be, to be able to invest any material amount of money without taking extremely long chances of losing the entire amount within a short period of years at least.

The statistics that have been compiled by insurance companies over a long period of years, and also the facts that have been obtained by the American Banking Association regarding the remarkable loss of capital through the regular channels of what we term "legitimate business," are hardly believable. For instance, in the surrogate court of New York the records show that out of 27,000 men whose business careers have come under the observation of this court that there are only 1.3 per cent that left an estate of over $25,000, and 3.5 per cent left an estate between $10,000 and $25,000, and also 3.5 per cent left an estate of between $1,000 and $10,000, which leaves an average of approximately 92 per cent that died without sufficient funds to take care of their last expenses.

From the records of the American Banking Association we find that out of 100 young men starting at the age of 25 with nothing except their earning power and good health, that at the age of 65 1 will be rich, 4 will have incomes, 5 will still have a little earning power but not enough to support them, however; 54 will be entirely dependent and 36 dead, leaving only 5 out of the 100 that are self-supporting at the age of 65, and 85 chances out of the 100 that 4 out of these 5 will be dependent before death. With all of these facts as a guide it hardly seems possible that any sane man could recommend the settlement of a soldier's insurance which is intended as a pension to be settled in one lump sum.

We all know that in case a soldier is killed, leaving a dependent wife and children, and his insurance is paid in a lump sum, that these dependents, who are probably not experienced in business, it would be safe to estimate that 95 per cent of those in this condition would lose all within a very short time; and also that we as patriotic citizens would not permit them to suffer thereafter, therefore it would be necessary for the Government to make provision for them, and the insurance which was intended for their protection would probably go to the benefit of some unscrupulous grafter. It seems to me that one if not the most important part of the bill is the safeguarding of this fund so that it will accrue to their benefit over a long period of years.

I heartily join with you in your contention that the lump-sum settlement is a dangerous one to have embodied in the bill, and I trust that you will be able to bring such pressure to bear that this feature can be stricken out and thereby give to the American soldiers and dependents protection which it would be hard for them to secure in any other way, and at the same time deal a deadly blow to the common grafter, who is always watching for an opportunity to prey upon the innocent.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, with these facts before us it seems to me that it is our duty to protect the soldiers that we are sending to the front to fight for our country and our country's flag. I have not time to analyze the real condition that would exist if this section is permitted to remain in the bill; but if past experience demonstrates that 90 per cent of the average citizens or their dependents come to want, how can we expect more from our soldier boys, who come from the best families of this land, whose years have not permitted them to have a large business experience?

I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he can not conscientiously support this amendment and at least permit this matter to be more fully discussed in conference? This bill will be far-reaching in its effect, and it is essential that every safeguard be thrown around its beneficiaries. I do not want it understood from my asking for the adoption of this amendment that I am in any way opposing the bill. I believe, as I said before, that it is one of the best measures we shall have enacted into law at this session. It is my wish that it be enacted into law at the earliest possible date; and that it shall throw every safeguard around those who make such great sacrifices in defending our country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the argument made by the Senator from Idaho is well worthy of all consideration. The argument made in the letter which has just been read is almost invincible.

Section 304 gave to me and to other members of the subcommittee and of the committee a good deal of trouble. I have come to the conclusion that even if it were to stay in the bill it ought to be modified somewhat, so that those receiving small commutations should be prohibited, at any rate, from commuting even half, because the other half would be too little to keep them from being a burden upon the public. Therefore, I shall not oppose the motion of the Senator from Idaho, so that the entire matter can be gotten into conference, and, if possible, reconstructed somewhat.

Mr. BRADY. I will add that if it is found impossible to protect all of them, it is well, as the Senator from Mississippi wisely says, that we should protect those that we can. They are sacrificing their lives for us. Let us do all we can for them and their dependents. I sincerely hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STERLING in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Idaho proposes to strike out all of section 304, beginning at line 24 on page 25.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, unless some Senator is ready with an amendment, or some Senator wants to be heard, I shall lay aside this bill for the balance of to-day, and call it up again to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock, when the Senate meets.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator means that he asks unanimous consent that it be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I make that request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily laid aside, to be called up to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2434) authorizing the counties of Cass and Itasca, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River between said counties, which was, on page 1, line 5, to strike out the word "highway."

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

FOREIGN SERVICE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2623) defining the status of citizens of the United States who have entered the military or naval services of certain countries during the existing war in Europe, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That any person formerly an American citizen who may be deemed to have expatriated himself under the provisions of the first paragraph of section 2 of the act approved March 2, 1907, entitled "An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad," by taking, since August 1, 1914, an oath of allegiance to any foreign State engaged in war with a country with which the United States is at war, and who took such oath in order to be enabled to enlist in the armed forces of such foreign State, and who actually enlisted in such armed forces, and who has been or may be duly and honorably discharged from such armed forces, may, upon complying with the provisions of this act, reassume and acquire the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States: Provided, however, That no obligation in the way of pensions or other grants because of service in the army or navy of any other country, or disabilities incident thereto, shall accrue to the United States.

Any such person who desires so to reacquire and reassume the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States shall, if abroad, present himself before a consular officer of the United States, or, if in the United States, before any court authorized by law to confer American citizenship upon aliens, shall offer satisfactory evidence that he comes within the terms of this act, and shall take an oath declaring his allegiance to the United States and agreeing to support the Constitution thereof and abjuring and disclaiming allegiance to such foreign State and to every foreign prince, potentate, State, or sovereignty. Thereafter such person shall in all respects be deemed to have acquired the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States. The Secretary of State and the Secretary of Labor shall jointly issue regulations for the proper administration of this act.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I do not understand that it is necessary to disagree to the amendment of the House. I think we should concur in the amendment to the bill as it passed the House, and therefore there will be no necessity for a conference. I move to concur in the House amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stats., p. 874), authorizing the purchase of a site and the construction of a building thereon for the use and accommodation of the United States post office, in the city of Moultrie, State of Georgia, at a limit of cost of $65,000, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into a contract for the construction of a building for the use and accommodation of the United States post office and other Government offices at Moultrie, Ga., within the limit of cost of $70,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the Secretary did not read the amount.

Mr. HARDWICK. Because that was not amended. The amount is $70,000.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask that the amount be stated.

The SECRETARY. The cost complete is not to exceed $70,000, in the House bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, what bill is this?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will state to the Senator from Iowa that it is a bill to increase by $5,000 the limit of cost of a public building at Moultrie, Ga., because of additional space that is required for Government offices down there.

Mr. KENYON. Only $5,000?

Mr. HARDWICK. Only $5,000. The Senator certainly will not object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DEMOCRACY V. AUTOCRACY.

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to have printed in the RECORD a copy of a resolution adopted at the twenty-fifth annual conference of the Commissioners on Uniform State Laws at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., August 31, 1917.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection. If there be no objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution is as follows:

RESOLUTION.

Since the birth of human law, and from the very earliest of the groupings of peoples under governmental control, the principles of democracy have been contending against the principles of autocracy. In the main the conflict has been limited to a warfare of ideas and theories, but now, in an unprecedented world struggle, the two forms of government are engaged in mortal strife. No longer is the combat carried on by reason, argument, and the comparison of results, it is now physical force grappling with brute power, and the stake is the survival of the fittest.

It is the parting of the international ways. Every nation and every individual of every nation must take his stand on the one side or the other.

There can be no compromise. There can never be any compromise between right and wrong.

We, here in national conference assembled, the representatives of the sovereign States, constituting the greatest Republic on earth, do not hesitate in taking our stand.

We do here and now highly resolve that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth, and thereto we pledge our and each of our powers, abilities, efforts, and our lives, our property, and our sacred honor; and to the President, the Congress, and the people of the United States our firm and unswerving support to the end that permanent peace may be established throughout the world.

RECLAMATION CAMPS.

Mr. POMERENE. On August 10 I introduced a bill, S. 2773, having for its purpose the organization and maintenance of reclamation camps for the treatment of those drafted men who were rejected because of slight physical disease or slight physical defects. The bill is now pending before the Committee on Military Affairs. I have received to-day a telegram sent by the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce indorsing the bill. I ask that it be incorporated in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CLEVELAND, OHIO, October 2, 1917.

Hon. ATLEE POMERENE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C:

The Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, by formal action of its board of directors, has given its earnest indorsement to your bill making provision to reclaim the physically unfit for the Army, not only in its military but also in its civil significence; we regard this bill as a constructive measure of the highest importance. If we can be of service with reference to this measure it will give us the greatest pleasure to render such service.

CHARLES A. OTIS, President.
MUNSON HAVENS, Secretary.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4897) to amend section 10 of the national-defense act, approved June 3, 1916, and for other purposes.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that is a matter to which there will be an important amendment. I do not have the papers here with me, as I did not expect the bill to be called up to-day. I ask that it may go over. I shall not object to its being taken up at some other opportune time.

Mr. FLETCHER. Under those circumstances I will not press the motion.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator desires to call it up to-morrow or some other time I shall be very glad to have him do so.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, with a view of returning to legislative business as soon as the short executive session is over.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 53 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

JOSEPH S. M'COY.

Mr. SMOOT. Out of order, I introduce a joint resolution and ask its reference to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 103) to pay Joseph S. McCoy for extra services rendered the Senate Committee on Finance was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the conference report what disposition was made of the amendment providing an appropriation of $500,000 for the Employment Bureau in the Department of Labor?

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, the conference committee found it necessary to reduce that appropriation to $250,000. It was a very unsatisfactory solution of the matter, but it was inevitable under the conditions that confronted us. That is the conclusion we reached.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent to have the provision as agreed upon inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 88, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"DISTIBUTION OF LABOR.

"To enable the Secretary of Labor, during the present emergency, in addition to existing facilities, to furnish such information and to render such assistance in the employment of wage earners throughout the United States as may be deemed necessary in the prosecution of the war, including personal services, in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, and rental of quarters outside of the District of Columbia, $250,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to take just a moment to say that I regret that the conferees were compelled to yield this point and to accept the sum of $250,000 in lieu of $500,000 as voted by the Senate after full discussion. The importance of this bill and of its speedy passage will prevent me from undertaking to delay the further consideration of the conference report. It may wisely be feared whether the amount as agreed upon in conference will not prove wholly inadequate, but Congress can hereafter remedy that by making further appropriations. The language of the amendment has been modified so as to broaden the discretion of the Secretary of Labor in applying the fund in some particulars, and his authority is narrowed in others. However, I shall content myself for the present with this brief statement and accept the assurance of the chairman that the language as finally agreed upon represents the best that could be done under the circumstances.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

JOSEPH S. M'COY.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably Senate joint resolution 103, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 103) was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Joseph S. McCoy for extra services as expert actuary and statistician rendered to the Senate Committee on Finance during the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, $1,600.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETITIONS.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the California Fruit Exchange, of Sacramento, Cal., urging the recognition of the farmers' indispensability, and the consequent advisability of exemption from military service as a class; also expressing the loyalty of the farmers as citizens, and urging agricultural co-operation, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Court of Knaresborough, Ancient Order of Foresters, of Oakland, Cal., urging an investigation of the East St. Louis riots, which was ordered to lie on the table.

PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2918) providing that the forfeiture provisions of the land laws shall not apply in case of persons in the military or naval service during the present war, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 142) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 2948) granting an increase of pension to Wesley Dye (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 2949) granting an increase of pension to William H. Woodward; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 2950) amending the act to increase the limit of the cost of certain public buildings, etc.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. PHELAN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill. It is another form of a bill on the same subject which I introduced August 15. I introduce it in this form for the convenience of the committee, and ask that it be referred to the Committee in Immigration.

The bill (S. 2951) for the relief of Clara Elizabeth Huntington Hatzfeldt was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

AMENDMENTS TO WAR-RISK INSURANCE BILL.

Mr. SMOOT submitted four amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," and for other purposes, approved September 2, 1914, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

RECESS.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning. There is a demand for some morning business. The committee in charge of the insurance bill were anxious for a recess, and yet I have been surrounded by Senators who wanted some morning business transacted.

Mr. SHAFROTH. There are some bills that it is very important to pass that will take no time.

Mr. SMOOT. We have a unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon the bill before 5 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Consequently, it makes no difference whether we adjourn or take a recess.

Mr. SMOOT. It may make quite a difference in acting upon amendments and speaking upon the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I suggest this as a way out of the difficulty: Let us have an understanding that we will take a recess to-day, and that to-morrow, when the session terminates, it shall be by an adjournment instead of a recess.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But if the Congress adjourns by Saturday night, there will not be time enough to get these bills through. They are important bills, and are really war bills.

Mr. MARTIN. We can not pass any important bills now.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I have one that it is imperative to pass.

Mr. MARTIN. The Senate, of course, will do what it pleases. It is not a matter in which I feel any interest except for the dispatch of business. To facilitate final adjournment, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m., Wednesday, October 3, 1917) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, October 4, 1917, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, October 3, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, imbue us, we beseech Thee, with the spirit of reasonableness, justice, mercy, and truth, that in all the transactions of this day we may satisfy the demands of our conscience, and thus fulfill the law and the prophets. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MASON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MASON. I rise to address the House upon a question of the highest personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. MASON. A Member of this House, during my absence, charged me with being guilty of treason. He stated that I was absent, and he said, "Let them come and defend themselves," referring to my colleague, Mr. BRITTEN, and myself. Having named us, he said, "I think they are out stirring up opposition to the war, to the selective draft, and to getting Germans to hold meetings, and asking that they be exempt from service."

He charges in the statement published in the RECORD substantially the same thing. It is a charge against my personal loyalty to my Government.

The SPEAKER. Before the gentleman begins——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this does not present a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a statement. Gentlemen rising to a question of privilege—and the Chair has always been very liberal about it, but in the condition of affairs here, a man has got to have a good question of privilege to begin with, or the Chair will not recognize him. In the second place, if he starts, he has got to stick to the text and must not wander into the bypaths or the highways of history, either recent or ancient. [Laughter.] It is the business of the Speaker to maintain as much order as he can, and he is going to do it without any regard whatever to persons. Does the gentleman from Tennessee wish to argue his point of order?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The language that the gentleman from Illinois complains of was stricken from the RECORD by a vote of the House.

Mr. MASON. A part of it was.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And the part that remains in the RECORD of which the gentleman complains does not in any sense raise a question of personal privilege under the rulings that have been heretofore made.

Mr. MASON. The statement was made by a Member of the House and was printed in all the newspapers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will read the part that was left in the RECORD of which he complains.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. For the purpose of making an inquiry touching the nature of the statement made upon the floor—not the statement that remains in the RECORD——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to find out the two things or two sections that the gentleman complains of.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not understand the Chair to hold——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not held anything.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas (continuing). That the statement made on the floor but not contained in the RECORD would not constitute a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair asked the gentleman to read the part in the RECORD of which he complains first.

Mr. MASON. I complain first that the Member from Alabama stated on Friday, August 3, 1917, as follows:

> And in this House a Member from Illinois [Mr. MASON] introduced a bill, which is now pending, asking that the selective-draft law be repealed, and the German spy system is urging that petitions be sent to Members to vote to repeal the law—the law under which we are forming an Army to save the life of this Nation from the dangers which threaten it.

I complain of this statement:

> Shades of Abraham Lincoln, the martyred President, whose memory we all love and honor, I call upon the State of Illinois to repudiate this action of the gentleman from Illinois. The remains of Lincoln sleep in the soil of that State. My God, how restless he must be in his grave when a man from Illinois introduces a bill that would prevent the raising of an Army to defend the Nation in this time of war.

I charge that in that language he charges me with aiding the German Army in time of war, which is treason.

I will not read what he said about my colleague, but he goes on:

> Why, the Kaiser would say to Germany, "The people of the United States are not with the President."

Then he mentions the other gentleman from Illinois, Mr. BRITTEN, and says:

> The other Member from Illinois, Mr. MASON, desires to undo the selective draft and leave us without an army.

It is not only false, but he charges me constructively with treason.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from Illinois introduce a bill to repeal the draft law?

Mr. MASON. I did not.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman from Illinois states that he did not introduce a bill to repeal the draft law. He did introduce a bill——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama can not interrupt the gentleman addressing the House on a question of privilege.

Mr. HEFLIN. The House ought to have the facts.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois—is the gentleman from Illinois through with his statement?

Mr. MASON. I am through with only that part as far as I was interrogated by the Speaker. There is a further statement.

The SPEAKER. Out of the RECORD?

Mr. MASON. No, sir; what I have read is in the RECORD, and what I will read is in the RECORD.

> It is true that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] in his position here does not speak the views of the people of that State, and it is true that the gentleman from Illinois—

Mentioning another man—> does not speak the views. * * * His bill is a reflection upon all of them. There are a few anarchists and a few traitors.

That sentence followed the use of my name. Then the following:

> Emma Goldman has been arrested and Berkman has been arrested. If I was President, I would point out some others who belong in the class with them.

I charge that there again in the printed record he charges me and classes me with Emma Goldman and people who are anarchists.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] rises to a question of personal privilege and submits as a basis of that question of personal privilege remarks made by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] criticizing his course as a legislator in a way, but the language which the gentleman has read, and which he has made the basis of his question, does not by fair construction criticize the motives of the gentleman from Illinois. I do not know what was in the mind of the gentleman from Alabama, and the House must consider the language as it is before it, and the Speaker must construe the language in its fair interpretation. Let me give the Speaker an illustration.

I remember some years ago there was intense criticism of a gentleman from Ohio because of the introduction by him of a certain resolution with reference to the presentation by the State of Mississippi to the battleship named in its honor of a service that had upon it a picture of Jefferson Davis. The gentleman from Ohio introduced a resolution concerning that, and it brought down upon him a storm of criticism, so he stated on the floor, from newspapers all over the country. He rose here and for half an hour read the criticisms that were made of him, and not one of them questioned his motives in terms or in language. The Speaker very rightfully held it was not privileged. In order that a question of personal privilege may be presented, I respectfully submit that the language must in its term carry criticism of the motives of the person who is charged.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The question of personal privilege ought to be liberally construed, but it ought not to be abused. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TOWNER. Would the proposition stated by the gentleman have any application in a case in which an allegation was made on the floor of the House charging a Member with introducing a resolution or a bill which he did not introduce?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It would not.

Mr. TOWNER. And that, I understand, is the case as presented by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman just wants to say that he did not introduce any such bill, of course that would be in order. The RECORD, of course, tells what was done.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course it would be for the Speaker to determine the nature and character of the explanation that he may be allowed to make.

The SPEAKER. One question has been raised inferentially by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and the reason the Chair asked the gentleman from Illinois to state first what was in the RECORD is because of decisions in similar cases. If it had not been for the decision which the Chair will cite, the Chair would have permitted the gentleman from Illinois to have stated not only what was in the RECORD but what was struck out. The Chair quotes from Hinds' Precedents, section 7023, Volume V:

> Offensive words having already been stricken from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, a question of privilege may not arise therefrom.—On July 28, 1892, Mr. Joseph Wheeler, of Alabama, submitted as a question of privilege that on yesterday Mr. Thomas E. Watson, of Georgia, in the course of his remarks, had used this language:
> "On page 7367 the gentleman from Alabama (meaning Mr. Wheeler) says this:
> "'On passage of the bill (the reapportionment bill favorable to the Republicans) 113 Democrats voted against, and 114 rascally Republicans voted for, and 13 leprous Greenbackers voted with the Republicans.'"
> He denied that he had used the language, "rascally Republicans" and "leprous Greenbackers," and claimed the right to the floor to refute said charge.
> Mr. Nelson Dingley, of Maine, made the point of order that no question of privilege was presented by Mr. Wheeler.
> The Speaker, sustaining the point of order, held that the matter presented did not present a question of privilege under the rule.
> It appears from the record of debate that Mr. Watson had already corrected his remarks, saying that he had no intention of attributing the portions complained of to Mr. Wheeler and did not, in fact, do so, although the RECORD made it appear that he did. This fact was stated by the Speaker in his ruling.

It seems to the Chair from that that if the words are struck out by action of the House, they can not be complained of. On a question of privilege the Chair thinks that the gentleman from Illinois has a fair question of privilege on the part that was printed in the RECORD, because by fair inference from those remarks the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has yoked up the gentleman with Emma Goldman, Berkman, and other anarchists, and by inference charges the gentleman with treason.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to prefer a request at this time?

The SPEAKER. That would depend upon what the request is.

Mr. HEFLIN. I think the gentleman from Illinois ought to be heard. He is one of the men that I have in mind, and I would like him to be heard, and also that I may have a chance to be heard to show wherein I question his motives.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have to get at that by unanimous consent, after the gentleman from Illinois is through. The Chair will entertain the request of the gentleman from Alabama after the gentleman from Illinois has concluded, and, of course, Members may do as they please with respect to that request. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I understand the Chair's ruling and I shall endeavor to the best of my ability to confine my remarks to the rules and limitations which the Chair has suggested, and I shall expect the Chair to correct me if I trespass.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed. The Speaker will undoubtedly do that.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I have risen to a question of personal privilege and I have delayed it for a long time hoping that the author of this slanderous and uncalled for statement would have the chivalry and the kindness to correct his statement. We are in great trouble and the people are not interested in our personal differences. Neither Mr. HEFLIN nor Mr. MASON are in the minds of the people of this country. We are at war, and, therefore, I feel like apologizing to the House for taking the time in reply to the statement of treason that he has made against me, and I say to you frankly that if the man who made it was as well known in my State as he is in Congress I should not waste any time in answering it. [Applause.] He has assailed me, he has attempted to tell the people of my State what to do with me in the next political campaign, and in order to avoid personalities I asked him through personal and mutual friends and by a letter simply to correct his statement in accordance with the facts. The record is shown here. The letter which I wrote him was courteous. I told him that the bills which I introduced and which I sent to him did not repeal the conscription act. The first amendment does provide, in accordance with the wishes of the people I represent, that conscripted men be not compelled to serve in foreign service unless they volunteer to do it. It does not repeal any item in the military law, but in my opinion strengthens it. The other amendment provides by adding simply two words. Gentlemen will remember that the President was "authorized" to take drafted men. He was "authorized" to take vounteers, and my other amendment simply inserts the words "and directed" after the word "authorized," so that it would read that the President was hereby "authorized and directed" to take these 100,000 men who stood ready to go as volunteers and fight our battles in the Old World. This House voted for that law giving the President the same power to take these volunteers and used the same diplomatic and legislative language that it always used—he is "hereby authorized" to take drafted men; he is "hereby authorized" to take volunteers. This House first turned it down. While it was pending in the Senate the people had a chance and this House concurred in the Senate amendment which authorized the President to take 100,000 volunteers by the vote of this House and the Senate and by the signature of the President of the United States, and in as respectful language as a legislator could use, I simply proposed an amendment that he be "directed" to take them. The people thought he would take them; the people demanded that he give them a chance to go, and Congress in obedience to that acted. When he says that I am trying to keep or prevent raising an army in defense of this country he states what he knows is not true. [Mr. MASON here made a remark which he subsequently withdrew.] This is the letter which I sent as a peace offering——

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the letter which the gentleman proposes to read, which he wrote to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], is not pertinent, within the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not tell whether it is pertinent or not.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that any correspondence between Mr. HEFLIN and the gentleman from Illinois upon that subject does not come within the rule. He has been permitted to deny the charges made against him by Mr. HEFLIN in the RECORD, and any subsequent correspondence between the gentleman and Mr. HEFLIN, I make the point of order, does not come within the rule.

The SPEAKER. Does not come within what rule?

Mr. ALMON. As a limitation upon what he is permitted to say upon the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see it makes a bit of difference whether it is a letter or any other communication.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make the point of order that the gentleman himself has just now made a statement that would call for a personal privilege on the other side.

The SPEAKER. Now, the remedy of the gentleman from Texas is to have the words taken down.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the words taken down.

The SPEAKER. The words will be taken down and submitted to the Chair.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say that I make this point in the interest of order, that a Member may not transgress the rules?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the words that were taken down.

The Clerk read the words.

The SPEAKER. What action does the House wish to take about these words, if any?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that those words be stricken from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the words be stricken from the RECORD.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Speaker, I call for a division.

The House divided, and there were—yeas 71, noes 81.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I desire again in the interest of peace and in the interest of transaction of business to withdraw my last statement. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the last part of that statement.

Mr. HARDY. Then I withdraw my request to have that taken down, if that is the proper thing to do.

The SPEAKER. The last part of the statement will be stricken from the RECORD. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON] withdraw his request for the yeas and nays?

Mr. ALMON. I do.

The SPEAKER. The House has voted not to strike the other part from the RECORD. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] himself settles the last part. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, simply as an explanation of why I am taking the floor, I intend to put in the RECORD, and, if necessary, will read the request which I made, which was as follows:

SEPTEMBER 29, 1917.

Hon. J. T. HEFLIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In these distressing times the people are not interested in personal differences and as I wish to avoid further personal disputes on the floor of the House I suggest, in the interest of everyone, that you do yourself and me the justice of correcting your statement in regard to my proposed amendments to the conscript law. When I read your statement I felt sure that you had not read the proposed amendments and that you had been misled by some newspaper report. You said in your statement that I had "introduced a bill which is now pending, asking that the selective-draft law be repealed."

This is not true, and I feel sure that you will be willing to read the bill and correct your statement. I have offered two amendments. One of them provides that the conscripts be exempted from foreign service unless they volunteer. It does not, therefore, repeal any part of the present law as there is nothing in the law upon that subject. The other amendment instead of repealing that law "directs" the President to take the 100,000 volunteers, known as the Roosevelt division. You will see that the law itself authorizes him to take the volunteers and my bill simply directs him to take the volunteers which he is already authorized to do; so that I am not trying to repeal the law but to enforce it.

A simple statement by you on Monday morning as to the mistake which you honestly made as to those amendments will prevent further personal discussions, which I believe will be in the interest of our country.

We have much to do besides quarreling with each other. My son, the only one left in the family circle, enlisted when the war was declared, with my consent—and we have much to do to see that he and his fellow soldiers at Camp Logan and other cantonments are provided with food, shelter, ammunition, and training. We have much to do to see that the money we appropriated goes to the benefit of these boys is not subject to graft between the Treasury Department and the camp. We have much to do to help sell our bonds and maintain the credit of the country in supporting our extravagant appropriations, to conserve our food products for our own people, to build up the Red Cross, to prosecute those conspirators who are the real traitors, planning to destroy our factories and farms. All these things we can do better if we can be patient and truthful with each other; and if you will do justice to your own sense of chivalry and fair play on next Monday morning correct statements in accordance with the facts, you will be rendering a service to the country, to both of us, and as far as I am concerned, the incident will be closed.

Since dictating the above my attention has been called to a press statement that you made before the committee "that you wish to ask MASON where he got the money." I can not believe that you made this statement, and I ask you in the same spirit of justice and fair play to disavow this statement.

Yours, truly,

WM. E. MASON.

[Applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, seeking the advice of mutual friends, I have tried to avoid this matter, because at the close of a session, when we have all got to go home and go to work in the most trying time of our country, I did not want to delay any of the public business. And I was informed on yesterday by our mutual friend that he would not answer my letter and would not correct the statement in regard to the real facts as to the legislation which I had introduced.

Now, let us just briefly see what the facts are in my defense against this charge. It is true I voted against the declaration of war. It is true that I voted against conscription; and I have no apologies to make here or elsewhere for those votes. When I voted against war I said in this forum that if a majority of the people of this country, represented here, declared war that I would, under God, give every power I had to maintain the Army and the Navy and the integrity of my country. And I have kept my word. [Applause.] And any man or newspaper or any individual who says that I have ever advised, directly or indirectly, remotely or contingently, anyone to disobey the conscription law states a malicious falsehood and the truth is not in him.

I spoke at one meeting before this statement was made by the Member from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], where there were 5,000 unhappy people, and I told them that they must be, as we were, a law-abiding people. If gentlemen wish it, they can find my speech in the Department of Justice, that kindly sent a reporter to know and hear just what I said. And instead of complaint from that department I have had, unofficially, compliments upon the fact that I stood before a dissatisfied and unhappy people and told them whether we like the draft law or not it was the law of our country and we must obey the law, and that any man who advised them to disobey the law was a traitor to his country. [Applause.] That is the advice I gave them there.

And yet, following that very meeting, I am charged with going out and getting Germans to hold meetings when we are at war with Germany. That is the only meeting that I had attended up to that time. And at no time or place, in private conversation or public discussion, have I raised the question of the righteousness of this war. I said, when I spoke against the declaration of war, that if my country demanded war it was my war. And I think, colleagues, we make a mistake in talking about the righteousness of the war. We are in the war and the time has come to apply the doctrine of, in time of war, "My country, right or wrong." We must maintain ourselves in a great conflict [applause] which may absolutely involve the life of our Nation. But simply because the cheap politicians, who want to play politics and have the help of that army——

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is not confining himself to the issue according to the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The point is well taken. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] will please confine himself to the question of privilege.

Mr. MASON. I am charged, Mr. Speaker, with holding German meetings. I can only answer it by saying that it is not true. That is all there is to it. I have spoken at the meeting which he has mentioned in one part of his speech and made the speech which I practically made in Congress, that whenever we oppose conscription, whether we did or not, the law was passed. But while I told the people that we must obey the law, I also told them that they had a right to meet and petition Congress to amend or repeal or change any law, and that is a constitutional right. And if to tell the people of the rights granted them by the Constitution is treason, you will have to make the most of it, so far as I am concerned.

They have that right. They have a right to petition Congress, and instead of the people of my State being against the amendments which I offered, I have received, in answer to 5,000 letters, over 3,000—they are subject to the committees, or subject to the House—and every one of over 3,000 letters except four answered in opposition to conscription for foreign service. That in answer to his proposition that I am not representing my people here.

Every gentleman hates to speak of himself. I think as we get older we learn how uninteresting our personal reminiscences are to those about us, and when you learn that you are uninteresting you are liable to stop; and certainly no gentleman likes to speak of his ancestors or his conduct, and I would not do it now except that I am driven to it by this personal assault upon the integrity of myself and my family.

Mr. ALMON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. ALMON. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ALMON. I remember, when my colleague [Mr. HEFLIN] was addressing the House a few days ago on a question of personal privilege, that at some points the objection was made that his remarks were not pertinent, and the Chair ruled that he would use his best efforts to confine him to pertinent remarks, and frequently interrupted him. And I wish to know whether it is expected that Members of the House shall make the point now when the gentleman transgresses or goes out of the issue, or whether we can depend upon the Speaker to confine him to the legitimate issue? I make the point, Mr. Speaker, that any question of the gentleman's ancestry is not pertinent to the issue before the House.

The SPEAKER. That part of the point of order is sustained. Of course it is exceedingly difficult for the Chair or anybody else——

Mr. MASON. I think if the Speaker would hear it he would say it is not out of order. I am charged with holding German meetings in German wards.

The SPEAKER. I know. So far as that is concerned, the Chair will allow the gentleman to contradict it in any way he chooses so long as he confines himself, as he will do, to parliamentary language. But the extraneous matters of ancestry or anything of that sort have nothing to do with this question of personal privilege. It is extremely difficult for the Chair to hold any man rising to a question of personal privilege entirely to the track that he ought to travel. The Chair will do the best he can, and treat them all precisely alike. [Applause.] And if a point of order is raised the Chair will pass upon it as fairly as he can, and if anyone rising to a question of personal privilege makes a gross departure from it, he will hold him to it so far as he can. I stated in the beginning that I did not want any gentleman rising to a question of personal privilege now to get out into the highways and byways of personal history. We might be here until Christmas in that case.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GORDON. Is it not a fact that on this question of personal privilege any testimony of the person accused that would tend to establish the falsity of the charge is admissible and proper?

The SPEAKER. It is if it is pertinent. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed in order.

Mr. MASON. I want to say to the Speaker that if I did not think it was pertinent to the charge against me I would not make it.

The SPEAKER. I know; but the trouble is——

Mr. MASON. I was about to state, if the Speaker pleases, when charged with holding meetings for Germans I was about to state that fact——

The SPEAKER. What fact?

Mr. MASON. That I am of English blood, and that that statement could not be true, when charged with being German and pro-German; and I think I have a right to state what my past has been and what my antecedents are.

The SPEAKER. The trouble about that statement is that the gentleman may think it is pertinent, and the Chair in the discretion he has may not think it is pertinent, and the opinion of the Chair in the matter overrules the opinion of the gentleman.

Mr. MASON. Yes.

The SPEAKER. I might think your ancestry has nothing to do with it. I might stand up here for an hour and tell about mine and it would not throw light upon anything. The gentleman will proceed in order. The gentleman has already stated it.

Mr. MASON. I had not at the time I was interrupted. I am charged with the most serious thing that can be charged against an American citizen. Treason is punishable with death, and the man who is guilty of it ought to be subject to that penalty. And I stand here charged with being pro-German, and say that my ancestors have fought in every war, from the Revolution down to the Civil War, in defense of the integrity of the United States. [Applause.]

That is a pertinent fact, and tends to disprove all of these lying and insinuating statements that I am pro-German and against my own country in time of war with Germany. I hate German autocracy or any other sort of autocracy as much as any man on the floor of this House, but I propose in this war to exercise, and to defend the plain people of my State when they exercise, constitutional rights and ask the poor privilege of petitioning the Congress or petitioning the President to help them in their condition. Of course, if it is treason to ask our allies to do as much fighting as our boys do, to share their fate, and to call attention to the statements of these men like Pinchot, who shows what the war lords are doing to the Treasury Department of your Government and mine—if that is treason I shall undoubtedly be guilty of it again and again. But I will have this country know that we have some traitors at home that are not in Congress, and when I purpose to call attention to that fact it is not treason to ask that the money which comes out of the people to pay the burden of this war shall go for the aid and comfort of our boys who are carrying the flag of our country. [Applause.] Treason! From the time I was 11 years old until I was 15 I stood guard nights along the river, when I was too young to be enlisted. Ragged, I suffered as your boys did in the South; patched trousers, shirts made of flour sacks. I nursed the sick and stood guard at night with old men and boys in the home guard. Tears were shed when my oldest brother gave his life at Gettysburg for the flag, but there was a feeling of sorrowful pride on the making of so great a sacrifice. And when you declared war here and I was defeated in my vote I was disappointed, but within 24 hours the only son I have at home wired me asking me as to his duty. If I had been pro-German, if I had been guilty of treason, if I had not been willing to surrender my individual opinion to the majority, the result would have been different, and before the sun set on the day war was declared my son had the permission and the consent and the blessing of his mother and his father. [Applause.] And when you talk about sacrifice—that boy was the only one left at home—it took more sacrifice and more patriotism to say "Go" than the man ever had or ever will have who raises the question as to my loyalty and my love of my country. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The House will be in order.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, I have much more that I intended to say; but without making any personal assault upon anyone, having withdrawn the sentence that was objected to, I can only say that I can leave this question with the people with whom I have associated here and with the people who sent me as their Congressman from the State of Illinois.

If money was used in the circulation of my speeches, it was well spent. If anyone opposed to my Government circulated those speeches, on the honor of a gentleman I did not know it. Money has never been attractive to me. Sometimes when I see things that I want and things I would like to do, I wish for it; but when they talk about money in connection with this legislation, it is cruel, it is wicked, it is not kind, it lacks the stamp of a Christian community. There is not a man in this House who would be influenced in a matter of that kind—not a man—to desert the honor of his flag for a money consideration—not one. [Applause.] Not one of you gentlemen could come here from your districts if your neighbors did not know that you were good Americans—I do not care whether you disagree with me or not—and this wild talk about money is cruel and unjust. It is unfair. I never had it. I am like the distinguished leader on the Democratic side. With nine children, how could you expect to have any money.

I have risen simply to correct this statement. I am going to leave out many unkind things that I had in my heart to say, because I believe as a parliamentarian the Speaker would wisely rule them out; but I beg you gentlemen on both sides let us not accuse one another of being interested, except that interest which is to do our duty to our country. [Applause.] I intend to do it. I do not intend to be afraid either of the slanders of newspapers or the gossip of idle men. Money, Brother WILLIAMS, in a case of this kind! When our boys are preparing to go "over the top"! Gentlemen, in 40 years—I call upon my colleagues upon this side of the Chamber as well as upon that side to say that most of that time I have been in public life—no gentleman has ever yet raised the question of my personal integrity in the discharge of a public duty. I have nothing to leave to my children except a good name, and I intend to leave that good name, and I shall assail as a poltroon and a coward any man who tries to deprive my children of that inheritance. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN and Mr. POU rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Alabama rise?

Mr. HEFLIN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEFLIN. In order that Members may have an opportunity to go on record as to whether or not they want this matter discussed before the Congress and the country, would it be in order for me to make a motion that I may be heard, and to name the men I have in mind, and to give my reasons, reading letters, some from their own districts, documents, and newspaper articles touching the things that they have done and said, bills introduced, and so forth? Would it be in order to make a motion of that kind?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. HEFLIN. It would not be in order?

The SPEAKER. It is in order for the gentleman, if he wants to make any remarks, to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then, if I should do that, Mr. Speaker, any one Member could prevent me from saying what I want to say. I realize that.

The SPEAKER. That is the rule of the House.

Mr. HEFLIN. I realize that this is a serious charge, but I have stated that the conduct of certain gentlemen was questionable, and I am ready to name them, and to give my reasons for my opinion of their conduct.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is out of order.

The SPEAKER. Of course, he is.

Mr. HEFLIN. I was satisfied that some gentleman over there would raise that point.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Alabama——

Mr. HEFLIN. I will make the request.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Alabama has any request to make, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. HEFLIN. I make the request, then, Mr. Speaker, and I trust that no Member over here will object.

The SPEAKER. What is the request?

Mr. HEFLIN. The request is that on to-morrow, immediately after the House meets and the Journal is approved, I may have an hour and a half in which to name these gentlemen and to give my reasons for saying that their conduct has been suspicious and causing me to question their loyalty.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman to make his request for unanimous consent.

The gentleman from Alabama, as far as the Chair can ascertain, asks that to-morrow, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, he shall have an hour and a half in which to name the men that he has talked about, first and last, and others, maybe, and give his reasons for naming them. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to say that neither the gentleman from Alabama nor any other gentleman in the House, so long as I remain here on the floor of the House, can have unanimous consent for the purpose of discussing this particular question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas object?

Mr. GARNER. I do object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 40 minutes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the merchant marine and our shipbuilding policy?

Mr. POU. I will.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the merchant marine. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE ALIEN-DRAFT BILL.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes, explaining the alien-draft bill, at the close of the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. QUIN. There is an important bill which has passed the Senate called the alien-draft bill, which has come over to the committee of which I am a member, and the Secretary of State has submitted certain evidence to the committee, but we can not report the bill, and I desire to discuss it, because it was misrepresented on the floor of the House yesterday.

The SPEAKER. When does the gentleman wish to discuss it?

Mr. QUIN. As soon as the gentleman from North Carolina has finished.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from North Carolina gets through the gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT] has 15 minutes, and the gentleman from Mississippi will have to follow him.

Mr. QUIN. I ask unanimous consent to follow the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I understood from the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi at the close of yesterday's proceedings that he wanted to reply to certain remarks made on the floor of the House by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN]. I do not think we ought in any way to accentuate these personal controversies, and, if that is the purpose of the gentleman from Mississippi, I object.

Mr. QUIN. That is not my purpose. I want simply to explain the bill. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] had a false impression about it.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman does not intend to occasion any personal controversy, as was indicated yesterday, I shall not object.

Mr. QUIN. No; I do not.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] will proceed.

OUR WAR WITH GERMANY.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the special session of Congress, assembled under the call of the President on the 2d day of April, now about to end its labors, is, and probably always will be, regarded as the most memorable in the history of the Nation. Since we met in response to the call of the President by our legislative act this country has become involved in the greatest of all wars in the history of the world. We have made 10,000,000 of America's young men liable to military duty. We have provided for the immediate raising and training of an army of more than 2,000,000, and if a greater army is needed we have passed a bill by which the Government may call to the colors every man between 21 and 31 years of age. We have provided for the building of a greater Navy than anyone would have dreamed could ever be necessary four years ago. By bills carrying more than $700,000,000 we have provided for building ships to control the air. We have provided for military, naval, and aerial establishments so great as to stagger the imagination.

We have levied taxes greater than any ever levied by any former Congress, and we have already made the bonded debt of the Nation ten times greater than it was when we organized for business.

Mr. Speaker, I have tried in a few sentences to sum up most of what we have done. I hope I have done so with blunt accuracy, for it is no time to use mincing or apologetic words. It is no time for evasion. We have done these things, and the responsibility is upon us as well as upon the President, who asked for the legislation we have sent to him for his signature. Before I attempt a brief discussion of two or three questions I have in mind I shall ask one question which embraces all, Why have we done this? In my own mind springs instantly the answer: Because it was necessary to do these things to save free America from certain attack and possible destruction.

For my part I would not shift from my own shoulders the responsibility which is mine if I had the power to do so. As long as I live I shall feel a pride in the small part I have taken in the things which have been done. And, Mr. Speaker, I would not want to represent a constituency which would not support me in the votes I have cast since we assembled in extra session, for these votes have not been partisan votes. It was not my party which was demanding my support. For the time being party lines have disappeared. The hour came when men on this floor must vote for America or against America. The hour came when men must stand for America or with America's enemies. The hour came when there could be no middle course. Men who are not for America are against her. This is no play on words; it is God's everlasting truth. I am proud to say I have the support of the people I represent, regardless of party, in the votes I have mentioned.

WHY WE ARE AT WAR WITH GERMANY.

The people of America had no more desire to go to war with Germany than they had to go to war with France. They wished to remain at peace with all the world—peace was both pleasant and profitable. Our people had no lust for war, but almost a passion for peace. To maintain peace with us Germany had only to conform to the elementary principles of international law. She had the right under the laws of nations to stop and search our vessels on the high seas, to ascertain if they were carrying contraband of war to her enemies. She had the right—if she could make it effective—to blockade all the ports of her enemies. These were her rights under the laws of nations. Had she exercised these rights we would have submitted, as we did when England and France exercised them, for they would have been strictly in accord with international law and usage. But Germany did not choose, or perhaps I had best say, did not have the power to exercise these lawful privileges of war. She soon lost control of the seas. She had no armed ships which could be used to search neutral ships on the high seas. She could not establish a blockade of either English or French coasts. She could not keep her own coasts clear. Before January 1, 1915, she had lost all control of the seas—did not even have a scout ship or cruiser on any of the seven oceans, and her own ports were sealed tight by the Anglo-French blockade. Germany had tried for the mastery of the sea; but her wanton attack on Belgium brought both the English and the Japanese Navies into action against her, and instead of driving her enemies, France and Russia, from the seas, and blockading their every port, she was excluded from the seas by the fair fortunes of war, and every one of her ports was closed by an effective and lawful blockade. She was cut off from all her colonies, and she could communicate with the world only through neutrals. This condition was at variance with all Teutonic plans and arrangements. If it continued, Germany could not possibly win the war. If she lost the war, a revolution at home would cost the Teutonic rulers, Hohenzollern, Hapsburg, Wittelsbach, and so forth, their crowns and thrones. In the last hundred years kings who force war must win or their own people dethrone them. The intoxication of victory alone causes people to submit to autocratic power. A defeated autocrat almost immediately becomes a dethroned autocrat. The Hohenzollerns and the Hapsburgs saw this situation at the beginning of 1915.

And they coolly decided to violate all international law and reestablish piracy on the high seas. They notified the world that they would, after a day named, sink without search, notice, or opportunity to save life all ships going to enemy countries. They admitted the unlawfulness of their cause, and in extenuation pleaded their necessity, which was of their own creation. As a further defense they admitted the effectiveness of the Anglo-French blockade, and thereby proved its legality.

The world could not believe that the Teutonic threat would be put into effect. We had not then learned that the Teuton war lord never jests or bluffs. No matter how savage and unbelievable his threats may be, his performances have surpassed them all. Soon the German submarines began to sink unarmed ships without giving passengers or crew an opportunity for life. We hoped against hope that no American ship would be thus sunk, and that no American traveling on a neutral or on an unarmed passenger boat would be drowned. On May 1, 1915, the German Government had its ambassador, Count Bernstorff, publish officially in American newspapers a direct warning to American citizens not to take passage on English or French passenger boats regularly engaged in commerce between ports of the United States and English and French ports, none of which did Germany even claim were blockaded. On May 7, 1915, a German submarine sank the Lusitania and drowned more than a hundred American citizens. No warning was given so that lifeboats might be launched, and at least the women and children saved, and no effort was made to save a single person struggling in the water. No regrets were expressed: no disavowal of the act was made. On the contrary, the outrage was celebrated over Germany, and the captain of the submarine was decorated for his valiant and heroic act.

We still hoped against hope that war could be avoided, for we did not desire to become involved. For a while it seemed that Germany would not repeat the Lusitania outrage. Her activities assumed a different form. She arranged on our own shores a despicable war upon us and our industries. Professing the warmest friendship, she organized in our Capital, and in every great city, in every port, and in every manufacturing center arson syndicates, whose duty it was to burn and destroy ships, bridges, terminals, munition plants. Bombs were placed in cargoes of ships and in boilers of manufacturing plants. Bridges were destroyed and the lives of innocent working people sacrificed. This savage warfare was traced home to the German and Austrian Governments. Von Papen, Boy-Ed, and Dumba were sent home; they were proven guilty of the vilest crimes, but being the accredited diplomatic representatives of foreign Governments, they could not under our treaties with those countries be tried in this country for their crimes; they were ordered by our indignant President to leave our shores. This secret ghastly warfare lasted until early this year, when Germany discarded all disguise. She curtly ordered us to stay off the high seas, and notified us that if we failed to obey her commands she would sink our ships without notice or warning, and that no effort would be made to save life. Before sending this note she invited Mexico to join in war upon us, offering her territorial rewards. And she asked Mexico to arrange with Japan to join in the attack upon America. Soon she put into effect the threat contained in her notification and began to sink American ships, though wholly unarmed and capable of making no resistance. She allowed the crews to drown. Germany did not make an open declaration of war, because she had been secretly making war upon us for two years.

We recognized that fact, and at last reluctantly declared that a state of war existed between the German Empire and peace-loving America.

This is our fourth foreign war. The causes of our going to war in 1812 with England, with Mexico in 1846, and with Spain in 1898 all combined would constitute but a trifle compared with the monstrous wrongs, insults, indignities, and threats of Germany. We did not recognize the actual existence of war as long as it was possible to overlook, extenuate, or excuse the situation. We then realized the fact that Germany was making war upon us, and that if we did not accept that fact and join the entente, we would probably have to fight Germany alone. Justice, self-respect, and consideration of self-defense all demanded that we join the forces of righteousness, civilization, and humanity. We are in the war because the war came to us. We did our best to remain outside, but Germany compelled us to either fight or to abase ourselves in the dust. Having entered the contest, we will not withdraw until Germany be decisively beaten. We will accept no compromise peace. This war must never be repeated. It will have to be fought again if we do not completely win this time. We will fight to a decisive issue, to the end that there shall never be another war. Such a result will be worth fighting for. If the peace be a compromise peace, all the blood spilt and treasure spent will have been wasted, and we will have to prepare for a renewal of the war as soon as Germany can prepare.

TWO WAYS TO FIGHT THIS WAR.

We can economize in money and be lavish of life or we can be lavish of money and economize in men; which shall it be? If we be penurious with money our war machine will not be efficient, and we must supplement its weakness with dense masses of soldiers thrown at the German lines in the hope that sheer weight of numbers will prevail. This method the Russians tried the first year of the war with appalling losses. If we adopt this plan we will knowingly send thousands of the flower of our land to certain butchery. The American Government will never commit so colossal a crime.

We have adopted the reverse of this method. We are using money as money was never used by any other country in either peace or war. We are constructing the greatest military and naval forces ever conceived by the mind of man. Next spring our preparation will disclose a power never before seen on this planet. We will have the finest equipped army that ever went on a field of battle; and as brave an army as ever marched. We will have guns to outrange the enemy, and in number and munitions far beyond what the enemy can have. We will have aeroplanes, tanks, torpedo boats, ships of all kinds; and we will have the accursed gas invention of the enemy in greater quantity and of more deadly quality. In brief, we will fight Germany with machinery; and we will not send out soldiers when or where machines can do the work. Our equipment will enable us to destroy the enemy while our soldiers remain miles in the rear, but it has and is taking both time and money to build this machine. It will be ready and in action next spring. The American people will then see that the delay this year was both wise and necessary; and they will see that the huge sums of money called for by our Government have been wisely expended. We are, as far as possible, arranging to make the machine do the work, instead of having the soldier do it. We are spending money like water, but we are saving the lives of American soldiers. Our people will remember that high taxes means small casualty list. Low taxes will mean—if we were unwise enough to adopt that system—heavy losses of American lives on the battle lines next year.

MONEY ADVANCED TO OUR ALLIES.

Our allies were face to face with the enemy; and we could not send enough soldiers to render them any material assistance for a year; but we could give them the greatest and most effective assistance by lending them money. We could help them to be strong and aggressive, while we were building our war machine and creating our armies. Help in money, given to our allies, was instantly translated into power on the field of battle. What our allies could accomplish was just so much of our work done. The loans we are making to our allies are to be used in the great cause of humanity; and they are not lost even if they should never be repaid. But they will all be repaid both in money and gratitude. We have already helped our allies wisely, and we will help again and again.

Up to this time we have agreed to advance to our allies $7,000,000,000. Our Government did this voluntarily. It was considered the quickest and most effective way to help. This money, as I have said, will be returned with interest, also with the gratitude and good will of every nation we have helped.

TAXES—HOW THE MONEY IS RAISED.

War is costly and this is the most costly of all wars. But in raising the huge sums which must be spent, we have tried to tax only those best able to pay. The laborer, the mechanic, the man who works for a daily wage, and the farmer bear very little of the burden. The money will be raised almost entirely by taxes from large incomes, liquor, and excess profits—particularly from profits made possible by this war itself.

The new revenue bill will raise about $2,750,000,000—probably a few million over that amount—but more than two-thirds of this two and three-quarter billions will come from incomes and excess profits—mostly war profits.

From incomes we will derive eight hundred and forty millions. The married man will be allowed an exemption of $2,000 and the single man $1,000 before either pays any tax at all. The rate begins at 1 per cent on small incomes and increases until it takes nearly half of the incomes of the very rich. The man with an income of one million will pay annually a tax of $408,630 on his income alone. The man with an income of ten million will pay a tax of $4,893,630—very nearly half.

From war profits we derive	$1,060,000,000
From liquors, wines, beer, and soft drinks	218,000,000
From automobiles taxed according to price paid	40,000,000
From playing cards	32,000,000
From perfumes and cosmetics	1,900,000
From cigars, cigarettes, and tobaccoes	56,600,000
From incomes (mentioned above)	840,000,000
Total from above sources	2,248,500,000

Of course there are other sources of taxation, such as transportation, tea, coffee, mail matter, and so forth. The levying of taxes is never a pleasant task, but I have tried to show that the burden of taxes in the bill which has been passed will be borne by those best able to pay. So anyone can see what nonsense it is to talk about this being a bondholder's war or a rich man's war. If there ever was a people's war, it is the one in which we are now engaged. [Applause.]

Of course everybody in one way or another will pay something. No frank or candid man would attempt to deny that. But, on the other hand, there are compensations. Farm products are abnormally high, and probably will remain high for some time after the war ends. The cost of living is also high, but the margin of profit is largely in favor of the farmer. Wages also have greatly increased. Men who receive big prices for what they raise and men who are receiving increased wages must expect to pay correspondingly high prices for the necessaries of everyday living. Of course the farmer, of all men, has the long end of the rope, so to speak, if he will as nearly as possible raise all the food products he uses.

OUR SOLDIERS.

Mr. Speaker, it is only possible to mention the basic features of the great bill for the protection of our soldiers and sailors and their families which will soon become a law. It is the most progressive and liberal measure ever passed by any Congress to show the gratitude of a Republic to the men who risk their lives for the Republic. I say the bill is liberal, but I mean only by way of comparison. It is just, but it does not do too much. Let no man make that criticism. It is hard to do too much for the young men who are risking their lives for America. First of all, it must be remembered that the American soldier is the highest paid soldier in the world. I think I am not mistaken.

The insurance bill automatically insures the life of every man in the service, whether he makes application or not for insurance, for 120 days in the sum of $5,000, payable in installments; that is to say, any person in the active service on or after April 6, 1917, who is totally disabled or dies before the expiration of 120 days is deemed insured in the sum of $25 per month for life, and if he dies before receiving 240 such payments balance is payable monthly to widow, child, or widowed mother, if they or any one of them survive him.

During the 120 days mentioned the soldier or sailor must decide whether he wishes insurance in the sum of $1,000 up to $10,000, at the rate of $7.50 to $8 per thousand per year, according to age. His insurance expires at the end of 120 days unless he takes action.

There is no medical examination, of course. That took place when he entered the service.

Every man who fights for his country in this war need have no anxiety for the future. If he be killed and leave dependents, the Government looks after them. If he comes home wounded so badly that he can not support himself or his family, if he has a family, the Government undertakes the burden. During the war he must allot as much as $15 per month for the support of those dependent on him. He must do this in any event, but if that is not sufficient to maintain them, the Government steps in and adds to this $15 per month sums, increasing the amount up to $50 per month. Under the terms of the bill it is impossible that the wife or children of the soldier can suffer for want of the necessaries of life.

This splendid measure combines all necessary features of insurance.

1. It insures life.
2. It insures against injury.
3. It provides for dependents during war.

Verily our soldiers and sailors offer their all. The Government says to these men, "I will take your place in caring for your loved ones if you lose your lives or are disabled." More than this, the enlisted man, the private soldier, is given opportunity for education and is encouraged in the Navy and Army to equip himself to become an officer.

IF WE HAD KEPT OUT.

Yes; suppose we had obeyed Germany's command to keep off the seas, what would be our situation to-day?

First of all, we would have lost our own self-respect. Can you imagine any human being who would be proud of America if we had said to Germany, "Yes; we will obey; we will keep off the seas." Any nation whose people are without national pride does not deserve to survive.

In the second place, we would not have had a friend among all the nations of the earth; we would now have the contempt of all, and the nation which would have had the greatest contempt for us is Germany.

You have seen these missions come and go—the English, French, Russian, Italian, Japanese, the Belgian, and others. We know now how they feel, how they must feel toward great, powerful, generous, noble America. Oh, what a splendid thing it is for a nation to do an unselfish act!

But what would have happened to our shipping interests? They would be to-day absolutely dead. Only fools would have taken the risk after their own Government had warned them to stay at home, with no insurance protection as now provided.

And if all our ships had been kept at home, what would have happened to the cotton crop of the South and the wheat crop of the West? The cotton crop would be in warehouses—much of it, anyway—with nobody to even make a bid for it. And wheat might have brought a dollar per bushel, but certainly not $2.20. The reason products of the farm are high is because America stood up for her rights.

You, who do me the honor to read this speech, stop one minute and picture this situation in your own mind and then say whether from a purely material or money standpoint America could have afforded to stay out.

And what else would we have seen if Germany had won? We would see her, dripping in blood, with an eye on America, saying, "You next. This war must be paid for." We not only would be without a friend among the nations of the earth, we would now have their positive ill will, for they know it was our duty to enter the war. Is there living to-day any American who really would wish to see his country in this situation? And suppose Germany had attacked us and had won a naval victory, which would have exposed New York or Boston to possible destruction, how small an indemnity do you suppose Germany would have been willing to accept? It is said this Nation is worth $250,000,000,000. Do you suppose Germany would agree to quit in those circumstances with any sum short of the cost of the war to her? Probably not. It is said by those who ought to know that the war has already increased the debt of the German Empire to approximately $25,000,000,000, equal to about one-third or more of Germany's entire wealth.

This is not idle speculation. It is exactly what Germany will attempt if she is not defeated. The question was whether we should fight with our allies or fight alone. Let no man delude himself with the belief that the German rulers would have any scruples at all about attacking us no matter how humble our conduct, if they thought they stood a chance to wring from us a big indemnity. And if we had permitted Germany to continue her outrages without fighting the Nation would probably have been willing to buy immunity from attack. For a nation so mean that it will not fight when its sovereignty is attacked is just the nation to pay indemnity in almost any sum to keep from fighting. It is too sickening to contemplate.

What a glorious reflection! We are doing our duty, not selfishly, either! We have won the friendship of five great nations and several smaller ones in doing our duty. We have made war with our allies forever impossible, for our treaties with them have now been sealed with the blood of all spilt in the cause of righteousness!

The burden of debt we have assumed is small, indeed, when compared with that of every European nation. It must not be forgotten that posterity will pay the major part of the debt, anyway. For every dollar we pay posterity will pay two dollars, and 50 years hence the bonded debt we are making will probably appear more insignificant than the bonded debt of $3,000,000,000 rendered necessary by the Civil War appears now, for, as Secretary McAdoo has pointed out, at the outbreak of the war the combined resources of our banks were a billion and a half, yet a bonded debt of $3,000,000,000 was floated. Our combined banking resources are now thirty-seven billions, and by the same process of reasoning we should be able to float seventy-four billions of bonds, if necessary. Of course, no one at this time believes that even half of that vast amount will be necessary.

AID AND COMFORT TO THE ENEMY.

Mr. Speaker, men can give aid and comfort to the enemy by what they say as well as what they do. It is a lamentable fact that at this time some of America's most effective enemies are men who call themselves Americans. I impugn the motives of no man, but I say this: The man who now attacks the constitutionality of the selective draft and, above all, the man who slanders the President and Congress by declaring now that we went to war without cause or grievance against Germany, whether he intends to do so or not, that man is serving the cause of the Kaiser and stabbing his country in the back. [Applause.] The man who says we went to war without sufficient grievance against Germany in effect charges his own Government with the crime of murder. Men who bring that charge now not only serve the cause of the Kaiser, but they slander every man in uniform who willingly risks his life for this Republic. [Applause.] Men who feel that we have no grievance against Germany, after all the crimes she has committed against us, might at least keep silent. Their talk does harm only, even if they are sincere. Freedom of speech does not carry with it the right to slander or to commit the crime of libel. Men who bring such a charge now, and print it, I respectfully submit are guilty of both crimes. They can not hide their disloyalty to America by claiming unlawful suppression of free speech. No line in the Constitution, no line in any law, gives to any man the right to commit libel or to utter slander. If one were in Germany listening to a speech of Dr. Michaelis, the German chancellor, he might expect to hear the charge that America had entered the war without sufficient grievance against Germany. He might expect to hear the charge that we are fighting for a technical violation of international law. Such speeches now should be expected from Germans only, but the charge is so unfounded, so amazingly preposterous, that Germans do not advance it themselves. They boldly, almost proudly, confess their crimes, but say they were necessary for military and strategic reasons. They admit they violated the accepted law of nations in attacking Belgium, but they say the crime was necessary—regretting they had to commit it—necessary for military and strategic reasons.

And the same is true with respect to their submarine attacks. They do not deny the age-old law of warning before attack, of opportunity of escape for passengers and crew, but they say in the very nature of things they can not longer observe the requirements of international law. They confess their guilt with respect to these crimes, but advance the plea of military necessity by way of avoidance.

Of their crimes in America—blowing up factories, bridges, and so forth, now proven beyond all doubt—they simply enter a lying denial. Of their attempt to embroil this country in a war with Mexico and Japan they do not pretend even to deny.

It should be with the blush of shame that we are forced to admit that nowhere on earth is the charge advanced seriously that America went to war without cause or grievance against Germany except in America itself. The charge is not brought by Germans even in Germany.

WILL THE GERMAN PEOPLE SPEAK?

However great may be our indignation and resentment because of the outrages against us, however hot our blood because of the murder of noncombatants, women, children, and wounded soldiers in hospitals, I do not even now believe such things would have occurred if the German people could have been heard. I do not believe the German peasant or farmer, the average workingman, the business man—I do not believe these people at heart are murderers, and the day will come in the Providence of God when the great mass of the German people will realize that a military autocracy will lead any people to their ruin. Germany can not conquer the world. Germany can not survive with four-fifths of the world against her. Her enemies increase in numbers as the perfidy, treachery, and lying duplicity of Germany's rulers is uncovered. As the days go by the nations which are still neutral are learning how they have been humbugged, deceived, and their friendly neutrality abused by German spies and, one by one, they are and will continue abandoning neutrality to take their place with the nations waging war for righteousness and human liberty. Unless the German people speak, the Western Hemisphere will be practically solid in war against them before the end of one year from this day. [Applause.]

"Sink every Argentine ship without leaving a trace" cabled the Argentine ambassador from Germany, and forthwith upon the publication of the message the people of that great South American Republic rose up and threw off neutrality. So it will be with other nations when they, too, as they surely must, come to realize that liberty is safe nowhere on earth so long as Germany under her present rulers is undefeated. Before the end of a year nine-tenths of all civilized peoples will have resolved to fight Germany forever unless the German people speak. [Applause.]

When will the war end? The German people alone can end the war, and they will have to speak, if they do not wish the remainder of the world to wage war against them until they are crushed. What is it we ask of them? Indemnity? No. Dismemberment of their empire? No. Abdication of their Emperor? No. We ask that they do unto the small unoffending nations they have crushed as they would have such nations do unto them, and that they give us their pledge as a people, not the word of their present Kaiser, that henceforth they will keep the peace and obey the laws which civilized men of all nations, their own included, have agreed for more than 300 years ought to be obeyed. No intelligent German should wonder that this Nation refuses to accept the word of an Emperor and his ministers who planned the attack on Belgium, who treat a solemn treaty covenant as a mere scrap of paper, who promised America not to repeat the Lusitania horror, purely to gain time to prepare for more and more horrors of the same kind, and who tried to form an alliance of nations to wage war against America while we were still hoping and striving to remain neutral. The German people by reasonable, sensible, righteous action can stop actual hostilities before Christmas. How can good men remain passive or silent in Germany even when they read this declaration:

The purposes of the United States in this war are known to the whole world. We seek no material advantage of any kind. We believe the intolerable wrongs done in this war by the furious and brutal power of the Imperial German Government ought to be repaired, but not at the expense of the sovereignty of any people. * * * Punitive damages, the dismemberment of empires, the establishment of selfish and exclusive economic leagues, we deem inexpedient and in the end worse than futile, no proper basis for peace of any kind, least of all for an enduring peace. That must be based upon justice and fairness and the common rights of mankind.

It is given to few men to speak words so great in themselves as to silence all praise, all encomium, lest an attempt to praise might obscure the grandeur of the words spoken. This is true of the words just quoted from President Wilson's reply to Pope Benedict. [Applause.]

A NEW PARTY?

Recently, Mr. Speaker, we have heard from certain sources threats to form a new party. Every great Republican leader and every great Democratic leader and almost every leader of any other existing political party is loyally supporting the Government in prosecuting this war until complete victory is won. There is no place in the Republican or Democratic Party for the peace-at-any-price voter. Where will he go? The answer is the threat to form their peace-at-any-price party, and I will tell you what will happen.

Loyal Americans will forget they are Democrats or Republicans. They will raise the American flag and adopt as their platform "no peace at any price" until Germany is defeated or until she makes full amends for the intolerable wrongs and crimes of which she is guilty. [Applause.] Let German sympathizers form their new party and loyal Americans will unite in solid phalanx against them. Can any man doubt the result of a contest between two such parties?

Here and now I predict there will not be elected to the Sixty-sixth Congress in the campaign next year a single Senator or Representative about whose devotion to America there is any doubt at all.

NONPARTISAN LEGISLATION.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a splendid thing to see the almost unanimous support all these measures have received. There are times in which parties play no part. This is not a Democratic war or a Republican war. There were just 56 votes against the declaration of war out of 531 votes in the House and Senate. The responsibility is now accepted by both political parties. Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Taft stand squarely with the President, and right now Mr. Bryan, in urging a vigorous prosecution of the war, is standing squarely with President Wilson, Col. Roosevelt, Mr. Taft, and Mr. Hughes. And I pause right here to say that in my own State two among the most prominent men supporting the President are Judge J. C. Pritchard, former Republican United States Senator, and Hon. E. C. Duncan, former Republican national committeeman. Judge Pritchard's speeches will not be soon forgotten. They are an inspiration to every American.

Standing with these men of national repute are the leaders of organized labor. The splendid work of Samuel Gompers will endear that noble old veteran in labor's cause to patriotic Americans everywhere.

I have mentioned these names, Mr. Speaker, for just this purpose—to prove a united America. A united America means an unconquerable America. [Applause.]

And now, Mr. Speaker, if there be in our hearts malice or hate for any people, let us pray God to help us cast it out. Let us all pray that the German people will speak before the whole earth is enveloped in the flames of war, and let us all every hour—yes, every minute—unworthy though some of us are, pray our Heavely Father to watch over, guide, and save the boys who make up the armies of America. For, O God of our fathers, they go forth to fight Thy battles, that Thy kingdom may come to Thy children on earth. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia). The gentleman from New York [Mr. HULBERT], under the previous order of the House, is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, a week or more ago it might have been considered a gross impropriety to occupy the time of this House to discuss the subject to which I shall confine my remarks, but the events which have transpired in the meantime make it imperative for me to do so now.

Last Wednesday primaries were held in New York City for the purpose of nominating candidates for city and county officers, to be voted for on the 6th of next November. The present mayor sought a renomination as a candidate of the Republican Party upon the platform that he had given the city the best administration it had ever had in its history. The people demonstrated that this slogan was an intellectual opiate, intended to lull them to sleep until the present administration had fastened its talons upon New York City for another four years. About 75,000 enrolled Republicans participated in this primary, and while they constituted a minority of the total enrolled party voters, the votes exceeded that cast (in New York City) in the contest a year ago between former Secretary of State Robert Bacon and the junior Senator from New York, Mr. CALDER, for the office to which the latter was elected last fall. Upon the face of the returns the mayor was renominated, but the discovery of "errors" reduced his apparent majority to such a narrow and uncomfortable margin that upon a recount it was promptly established that he had been "counted in," and a court order has been entered substituting the name of ex-Senator William M. Bennett on the ballot as the regular Republican nominee. The unsuccessful and none the less audacious attempt upon the part of Mayor Mitchel's secret sponsors to steal the New York Republican nomination for him not only developed——

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is it the gentleman's idea, or is it an established fact, that the discrepancy there found, with respect to those votes, was the result of fraud, in an effort to stuff the ballot box, or the result of errors?

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind—and I yield to the gentleman for the purpose of answering his question—that they present unmistakable evidence of fraud, because under the system in our State it is necessary to put an × in front of the name of each candidate for whom the voter desires to vote; and there was evidence in case after case indicating a systematic policy throughout the city of erasing the × before the name of Mr. Bennett and marking in an × in front of the name of the mayor.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HULBERT. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. Is it true or not that you have voting machines in New York City?

Mr. HULBERT. Not at the primary. To continue: The election not only developed the most outrageous primary frauds that have disgraced an American community but it exposed the desperate plight of the clique who have fattened upon the people of New York for the last four years.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULBERT. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I am interested in the politics of the village of New York. Is Mayor Mitchel a Republican?

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, I shall give the gentleman the estimate of the New York World, an anti-Tammany newspaper which supported the candidacy of Woodrow Wilson in 1916, and which in an editorial printed in yesterday's edition said:

REWARDING THE MAYOR.

Mayor Mitchel refused to participate in the national campaign last year, although it was the most important presidential contest since 1860. Mr. Mitchel is a Democrat, but he took the ground that as he had been elected as a fusionist, it was his duty to hold aloof from partisan politics.

No such considerations affected his administration as a whole, and a large part of it was actively engaged in the Hughes campaign. As a reward for the mayor's delicacy of sentiment the Republican organization stabbed him in the back at the primaries, but Comptroller Prendergast, who was an active worker for Mr. Hughes, had no trouble in obtaining a renomination.

We do not pretend to draw a moral from this little anecdote, but anybody who wishes to draw a moral has our privilege to compare the Mitchel vote with the Prendergast vote in the Republican primary.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. HULBERT. I can not yield to more than one gentleman at a time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a suggestion?

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman for a brief suggestion.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And I ask that it be not taken out of the gentleman's time if he does not agree with what I am about to suggest. It seems to me that the gentleman perhaps is making a mistake in making this address on the floor of the House.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me to proceed, I think the gentleman will realize his mistake. While I have sat in only three sessions of the House of Representatives, they have been the three most important sessions since the Civil War, and I point with pride to the fact that there has not been a single measure introduced in this House upon which I have not given whole-hearted and loyal support to the President of the United States, and yet the charge has been made by the present mayor of New York City, it has been made by the man whom every loyal Democrat supported in 1904 for the greatest office in this country, it is being urged by every backer of Mayor Mitchel in this campaign, that any man who votes against Mr. Mitchel in this election is a traitor to his country, and that if the city of New York shall repudiate Mayor Mitchel upon the 6th of November, as the members of the party to whom he appealed for a renomination repudiated him upon primary day, that New York will go down in history as a traitor city. And in view of my activities as a Member of this House, in view of my adherence to the administration of Woodrow Wilson, which I have supported from first to last, I do not propose to permit a statement of that character to go unchallenged. I do not propose to permit those who are associated with Mr. Mitchel, including those who tried to steal the primary, having failed in that endeavor, to wrap him in the protecting folds of the American flag and parade him as the greatest American in New York City and to charge those with being disloyal who undertake to exercise their right of franchise and cast their vote for the man whom I believe is the best candidate for mayor, and who is not Mr. John Purroy Mitchel.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman will permit——

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, I decline to yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee (continuing). In view of the suggestion made to the gentleman a moment ago, of course I do not wish to do the gentleman from New York any injustice. I know nothing about the issues involved in this mayoralty campaign——

Mr. HULBERT. That is just exactly it. People who do not live in New York are trying to tell those of us who do how to run our affairs——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee (continuing). And what was in my mind was this, that this is bringing a local issue into a discussion upon the floor of the House of Representatives of the United States. There may be those who want to answer that, and if we take up the time of the House in discussing local contests for mayor, even though it be in the great city of New York, the gentleman can see what time it would involve. That is my suggestion.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, I introduced my remarks with the statement, which perhaps the gentleman from Tennessee did not hear, that a week or more ago it might have been considered a gross impropriety to occupy the time of the House to discuss this subject, but in view of the fact that an attempt is now being made to nominate Mr. Mitchel as an independent candidate for mayor and an appeal is to be made to the voters of the city of New York that the election or defeat of Mitchel involves a ratification or repudiation of the administration of Wilson, I feel called upon as a Member of this House, representing a district in the city of New York, to declare here and now that any such issue is an imposture and that no man can be permitted to claim a monopoly of patriotism and loyalty to American institutions.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULBERT. I can not yield just now.

Exclusive of those who have been humbugged, Mayor Mitchel's partisans of to-day may be put in two classes: Those who are making money out of his personal and official friendship and those who hate to admit that they have been trumpeters for the cleverest hypocrite of modern times. With that cleverness which has characterized the ingenuity of the mayor's personal friends throughout his administration, a meeting was arranged for and advertised to be held in the City Hall Plaza at noon on Monday, where any street fakir could attract a crowd of substantial numbers at the lunch hour.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Yesterday the gentleman from New York asked permission for unanimous consent for not more than 15 minutes, to follow the gentleman from North Carolina to-morrow, and upon being asked by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] upon what subject he desired to address the House, he stated:

I want to speak on the subject of American patriotic loyalty, not, however, connected with any controversy that has heretofore arisen in this House.

My point of order is that the gentleman is discussing a local municipal campaign and attacking candidates in that campaign and issues that have been raised in that municipal contest. He is not confining his remarks to the subject upon which he asked consent to address the House, namely, American patriotic loyalty. [Applause.]

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, the issue in the New York City campaign is now being made by Mr. Mitchel and those associated with him upon the subject of American patriotic loyalty, and it is charged by the mayor and those advocating his cause that any person who votes against Mayor Mitchel's reelection is disloyal, that he is a Hun or associated with Kaiserism, and if New York City does repudiate Mitchel in the election it becomes a traitorous city. Now, I think I have the right to show that this attempt on the part of the mayor and his friends to raise this issue is prompted by the fact that when he attempted to go into the primary of the gentleman's party to secure renomination upon the facts I am herein referring to he was repudiated and the only issue upon which he could have gone before the people was taken from him, and that it is necessary for him to conjure up an issue and that he has chosen to make that issue American patriotic loyalty; and I propose, representing loyal Democratic voters in my district who, I feel sure, will not vote for Mitchel, to resent it——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the gentleman is not discussing——

Mr. HULBERT (continuing). And say that no challenge can be made of American patriotic loyalty because——

Mr. WALSH (continuing). But the gentleman is discussing the issues of a local municipal campaign for mayor——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Just a moment. The Chair, referring to the point stated by the gentleman from Massachusetts that the gentleman from New York is not to discuss any question connected with any controversy that has heretofore arisen in this House, does not understand from what the gentleman has said that this is any controversy that has heretofore arisen in this House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, my point was this, that the gentleman is not discussing nor is he speaking to the question for which permission was granted yesterday, but is proceeding to discuss issues, questions, and candidates in a local municipal campaign, and is giving no enlightenment upon the question of American patriotic loyalty. He is attempting to give some enlightenment upon a municipal campaign and upon Democratic or other loyalty, the loyalty of certain candidates and issues there, and the inference is, of course, plain that this address is not for the purpose of enlightening the House, but possibly to be used for enlightening the people in connection with that campaign, and this I submit does not come within the terms of the permission granted, and I therefore make the point of order that the topic to which the gentleman is now addressing himself is not American patriotic loyalty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was proceeding to say that the gentleman by the order of yesterday was not to discuss anything that related to controversies that have heretofore arisen in the House, and the Chair stated he did not understand that what the gentleman had stated was in connection with any controversy that has heretofore arisen in the House.

He was allowed to speak upon the general subject, as stated at the time, of American patriotic loyalty. That is a pretty broad subject, and a hundred men might treat it in a hundred different ways, with a thousand different illustrations. The Chair does not think that, fairly speaking, the gentleman is outside of the broad limits that were given to him by the unanimous consent of yesterday.

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, with Col. Roosevelt and former Justice Hughes, a blare of brass and beating of drums as an added attraction, 10,000 people, we are informed in press reports, many of whom, probably like the mayor's committee, without a vote in New York, tendered him the popular nomination upon a platform dedicated to "a strong and active standing with America and against Germany."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HULBERT. Do I understand the time taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] in asserting his point of order was taken out of my time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No; the Chair did not take that out. The gentleman is entitled, as the Chair understands the order, to 15 minutes. He has been speaking about 20 minutes.

Mr. HULBERT. Was the time occupied by the gentleman from Tennessee taken out of my time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It was not intended to be taken out. If there is any question about that, the Chair will allow the gentleman to proceed for two minutes, and he is recognized for that length of time.

Mr. HULBERT. Thank you.

While the mayor charged that stupidity, neglect, treachery, or perhaps all three, contributed to the failure to bring out a substantial Republican vote on primary day, he refers disdainfully to the infinitesimal influence of 75,000 enrolled Republican voters, but accepts the "nomination" by acclamation of a miscellaneous audience of 10,000 people as an expression of the will of the 6,000,000 residents of the city of New York. Realizing that his repudiation at the primaries would be ratified at the general election upon the issues arising out of his administration of the office to which he seeks reelection, he has wrapped about him the protecting folds of the American flag, and seeks to force the administration into what he hopes will prove to be an uncompromising position that it must accept and indorse his candidacy or stand repudiated in the event of his defeat. He apparently believes that he can establish an exclusive patent as a patriot and a martyr to duty, and consign everyone in disagreement with him into the mire of disloyalty.

Mr. Speaker, the fact that I want to emphasize is this: If petitions are filed placing John Purroy Mitchel in the field as an independent candidate after his repudiation in the primary, there will be four major candidates in the field, the fourth one being Morris Hilquit, the Socialist candidate. If Mr. Hilquit should poll 30 per cent of the total vote cast, he may be elected. The persistent determination of Mr. Mitchel to become a candidate will divide all of the ballots that will be cast against Hilquit into three parts, and it seems to me as if it is selfishness rather than patriotism which the mayor typifies under the circumstances, and as a candidate would be beneficiary of a stolen primary election, posing as a patriotic martyr in a last desperate attempt to make political capital for himself, is a spectacle that affronts the intelligence and insults the ideals of every high-thinking American citizen.

Mr. ROWE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask that I may have five minutes of the time of the House in which to speak.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. About this?

Mr. ROWE. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I shall have to object to that at this time. If I had known that the gentleman from New York was going to make that speech I would have objected yesterday. I have some business here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

"GARABED" INVENTION.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I present a report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. ALEXANDER]. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 161 (H. Rept. 184).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration under the general rules of the House, of H. J. Res. 116 (House Calendar No. 23), entitled "Joint resolution for the purpose of promoting efficiency, for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States for lessening the expenses of the war, and restoring the loss caused by the war by providing for the employment of a discovery or invention called the 'Garabed,' claiming to make possible the utilization of free energy."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not see the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] present.

Mr. STAFFORD. How much time is the gentleman willing to have allowed for the discussion of the rule?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to get along with as little discussion as possible. How much would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, he recognizes that this resolution will likely be severely contested, because there are a number of us who do not believe in the idea at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman be satisfied with the usual time?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think there would be demand, maybe, for half an hour. I have had no idea as to time, because I am leaving that entirely to the gentleman from Kansas, who is outside of the Chamber, but I suppose he will return presently.

Mr. Speaker, in order to have a larger attendance for the consideration of this rule, I make the point there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman makes the point of no quorum.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me move the previous question and let the vote come on it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will agree to anything you suggest, almost, in order to prevent the roll call.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let us have the membership here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (after counting). Sixty-two Members are present, not a quorum.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

"GARABED" INVENTION.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Can the gentleman from Kansas and myself agree upon a time for the discussion of the rule?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that we might get on with one hour of debate on the rule, 30 minutes to be controlled by him and 30 minutes by myself; and if that is done, I shall yield half of the time to those who may oppose the rule on this side.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the debate on the rule may be limited to one hour, 30 minutes to be controlled by myself and 30 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and that at the end of that time the previous question may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the debate on this rule be limited to one hour, one-half of the time to be controlled by himself and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], and that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution from the Committee on Rules to make in order for immediate consideration House joint resolution No. 116, a resolution unanimously reported from the Committee on Patents, touching an invention by Mr. Garabed T. K. Giragossian.

The matter was presented to the Committee on Rules by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], and others, and the committee was impressed with the fact that it was of sufficient importance to justify the taking of the short time that will be required for the consideration of the resolution.

I yield now five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the resolution which is to be considered under the terms of this rule relates to a discovery claimed to have been made by a gentleman named Giragossian, of the city of Boston, a citizen of Massachusetts. He has resided there for some 25 or 30 years.

Mr. Giragossian claims to have discovered a new source of energy. He says very emphatically that it is no perpetual-motion scheme or anything of that kind, but a simple proposition which can be demonstrated to a man of average intelligence in a very short time. He says it is really a discovery of a new source of energy, just as I presume the discovery of electricity was regarded as the discovery of a new source of energy. He told the committee that he had studied the question for about 20 years, and had worked on it to perfect his control of it for 17 years constantly, and that about 5 years ago he had demonstrated to his entire satisfaction the soundness of his proposition, and thereafter continued for two or three years longer in merely perfecting his work.

Now he says that he can demonstrate beyond any cavil, beyond any doubt whatever, the soundness of the claim he makes. He says he has at his quarters in Boston an apparatus that he has operated and that can be put in operation and be run indefinitely for any length of time without the use of any kind of fuel whatever.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Has he submitted his plan to create this wonderful machine to any department of the Government?

Mr. CROSSER. I do not think so; no.

Mr. MADDEN. Would it not be wise——

Mr. CROSSER. If the gentleman will just permit me, I am coming to that, because he has some very definite notions on that subject. Mr. Giragossian, in answer to my suggestion that he might go before the Patent Office or before some department of the Government and show this, said, "No; I have become too well acquainted with the experience of other inventors; I know the hard trials and tribulations through which other men with things of much less consequence have had to go; I know that too well to pursue that method; and rather than do that, in view of the fact that I am willing to be so fair with the Government, I would prefer to die with my secret. I do not want to have any question raised as to my title as discoverer."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think that the Bureau of Standards, for instance, would take any rights of this man away if he submitted the utility of it to its inspection and investigation? And would it not be wiser for us, before we start to legislate on an unknown thing, to have somebody whose scientific knowledge is recognized the world over, connected with the Government, to approve of the plan suggested?

Mr. CROSSER. It is not for me to pass judgment on any public official one way or another. I was just about to discuss that feature of the matter. But, gentlemen, what this man proposes seems to me eminently fair, eminently reasonable, namely, to agree with the Secretary of the Interior upon five eminent scientists, before whom he will demonstrate his proposition. If those men shall find that he has what he claims he has, then he shall be guaranteed protection for his invention or discovery and will give to the Government absolutely free the use of it for its ships, buildings, aeroplanes, and other instrumentalities requiring power without any cost to the Government.

Any man who stops to think about it and realizes to what enormous expense the Government and every individual is now subjected in the purchase of fuel and the generation of power knows that if this man by any chance has what he claims to have it will save the Government not only billions of dollars but will make it absolutely certain that this Government can terminate the war with little effort and in a very short time. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER.]

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman who has just had the floor give me his attention?

Mr. CROSSER. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. I have two minutes in which to ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman think, from his investigation, and do the committee think, that the discovery of a new form of energy would be patentable at all?

Mr. CROSSER. I am inclined to think that under our patent laws he would have very serious difficulty in getting the protection of a patent. A man could not patent electricity, for instance.

Mr. TOWNER. Or radio energy, or anything of that kind.

Mr. CROSSER. No.

Mr. TOWNER. There can be no patent on the discovery of a new form of energy.

Mr. CROSSER. No.

Mr. TOWNER. Therefore the only patent that the gentleman could ask for, or the only exclusive right he would have, would be to some application of this new form of energy, which I understand from the gentleman's statement has been made. Is not that a fact?

Mr. CROSSER. Of course——

Mr. DENISON. This is an instrument which is a generator of this form of energy.

Mr. TOWNER. That does not make any difference. If it is merely a means for the utilization of energy, whether it is an old form of energy or a new form of energy, it is within the patent laws, and certainly would be subject to every protection that the Patent Office could give him. So what benefit would there be in the Government giving him this?

Mr. CROSSER. If the gentleman will bear with me for a moment——

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly.

Mr. CROSSER. Without going into the question as to whether or not this is simply a means of harnessing energy, or some other form of energy, does not the gentleman think that if this man has devised a means whereby he can produce energy in unlimited quantities, even if this man were peculiar in his notions as to the form of protection he wanted, in view of the great gift he is willing to give to the Government, we should not haggle around here on a little technicality like that, especially in view of the fact that in the early history of this country it was a common thing for the Congress of the United States to grant special patents to individuals, rather than under the general law.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman think special patents ought to be granted now?

Mr. CROSSER. I would be willing to grant it on a thing of this kind; yes. [Applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Members of this body will not prejudge this proposition. We are not now to determine whether or not this should be enacted into law. We are to determine whether or not a chance shall be had for this measure to be presented. If this rule is defeated, the measure can not be presented. If the rule is adopted, this measure may be presented upon its merits or demerits.

I will admit that when I first had this called to my attention I was a doubter, as many here are doubters and will be perhaps to the end. I had the good fortune—I consider it the good fortune—to talk with this inventor. I believe that any man talking with him for 15 minutes will come to the conclusion that the man is a scientific gentleman who has something of real worth to the country. Any gentleman talking with him will be impressed with his patriotic purpose and with the fact that if he has what he thinks he has, he is the greatest benefactor that the world has ever produced up to this time.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman says he has studied this question and has been convinced. Will he try to tell the House what scientific information he has upon this subject that will convince the House? We would like to have an explanation of it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The gentleman from Illinois is misapprehending what I said. I said that in talking with the gentleman I was convinced of his honesty of purpose and his intelligent ideas, and that I believe he has something of merit, and that it is worth while. Now, in answer to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER], with reference to whether he might not be protected, and receive all the protection he is entitled to under the patent laws, I will say that it is a matter generally known that the great inventors of this country, almost without a single exception, have been deprived of their ideas. Mr. Edison has repeatedly said that he would be a loser to-day if he had had to depend upon the revenues he derived from his patents; that he has expended in litigation more money than he has ever received in trying to protect them. And it is notorious throughout this country that the man who invented the telephone was deprived of the honor and benefit of his discovery. A blacksmith over in the State of Pennsylvania had a talking machine 25 years before Alexander Bell was ever heard of, and in the litigation over the question of who was the real inventor and the prime originator of the idea of telephoning, it was shown that it was not Alexander Bell, even though he did get the court's decision by a mere majority.

As I say, we should not prejudice this thing. Because of prejudgment the Morse telegraph was denied to the people of this country for more than 20 years. Gov. Wallace, of the State of Indiana, was a Member of this House, and was instrumental in bringing about the passage of a bill that authorized the expenditure of money for the first trial of the Morse telegraph between this city and the city of Baltimore.

When the news came back to the State of Indiana—it took a long while for it to travel in those days—public indignation meetings were held throughout the State of Indiana, and if there had been a law of recall at that time, Gov. Wallace would have been recalled. He was defeated at the next election upon that proposition and that alone, that any man who had no more sense than to vote public money out of the Treasury of the United States to pay to a crank of that character was not a fit subject for the Congress of the United States, but rather was a fit subject for the lunatic asylum.

In this age of marvelous science and development the doubter had better reserve his doubts until he gives his reason a chance to be convinced. So I think the Congress of the United States will be lax in its duty if this rule is not adopted, and if this law is not enacted, for the reason that the Government of the United States is taking no chance.

It is to be the entire gainer, and can lose nothing. If, as is suggested, this man has what he thinks he has, the world ought to have the benefit of it, and we should not be a stumbling block in the way of a great invention. I do not know what it is, but if I was to make a guess I would guess that he has taken a step further than any other scientist, and has extracted from the air nitrogen in the form that will propel a machine. That is along lines investigated by scientists for years. Ten or fifteen years ago one great scientist said that before another quarter of a century had passed we would be propelling great engines in this country, not by electricity, not by steam, but by energy gathered from the air. Now it may be that he has found how it can be done and has the machinery. He is not, as has been said here, a man professing that he has discovered perpetual motion. He has a machine that will do this work subject to all the uses of machinery, subject to all the wear and tear and decay of machinery, and which will have to be replaced. So I say that we should give the man an opportunity. An opportunity for what? Not to reach his hand in the Treasury of the United States and take out money, but for the purpose of giving to the United States and to the world an invention, the value of which can not be counted in dollars and cents. It costs the United States nothing. It is the mere right to try, the mere right to have appointed from the scientific gentlemen of this country five men, approved if you please, by the Secretary of the Interior, and if by their pronouncement this thing is a success, then the United States will have reason to rejoice because of this instrumentality which is given to the world. We have been slow in times past. Had there not been doubters of the submarine, that invention would have been ours and we would not have the submarine war that we have to-day. Had we not been doubters the Knight machine would have been ours, and many other useful instrumentalities that were ridiculed when first proposed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TAGUE].

Mr. TAGUE. Mr. Speaker, I believe I was the first one to bring this matter before the House of Representatives. When I first became a Member of this body three years ago this gentleman, coming from my city, came to me in relation to this invention. Like all Members and men who had met him, I doubted that he had what he professed to have. At the close of the last session, after a hearing before the Committee on Military Affairs on this subject, which reported adversely, I tried to put an amendment on the appropriation bill, as some of you will remember, while the bill was under discussion in the House. It was defeated, and Members ridiculed the thought that this man had invented this great process of generating energy.

What does he claim? First of all, he claims that by his appliance he can save the Government the $20,000,000 which we have already appropriated for the establishment of a nitrogen plant. If he can do that alone, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is well worth the consideration of this House. But he claims more than that. He claims that he can save the country millions of money if given a chance. Members have asked why he has not put the matter in the hands of leading scientists. Mr. Speaker, this man is an inventor, and he claims that he has something greater than anything else that has been produced in the last few years. He, like other inventors, is doubtful of the result in going to the Patent Office, and feels his only protection is in presenting his case before this Congress. We know already that there are many who would question his right to such a patent, and if one was granted would attempt to take it from him. He has invented other things in the past and has lost them because he is without means to protect himself or his invention.

He comes to this House and to this Congress as a poor man, without a dollar in the world. Friends in Boston, men with limited means, are paying his way here that he may have his case put before the Congress of the United States. He comes here ready to give the Government all that he has, and all he asks in return is protection after he has proven his case. I do not know anything fairer than that. I do not believe there is anything that has come before this session of Congress that means more in the prosecution of this war or that can help the country in its present situation as this man can meet it at the present time if we grant him an opportunity.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGUE. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says he asks nothing but protection. In section 4 it says that the Government shall not issue to anyone else any patent for any kind of free energy generator, regardless of its form or shape or device, and he asks for several other things, including the prevention of construction, importation, and so forth.

Mr. TAGUE. That is what I say; all he is asking for is protection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am certainly surprised that the Committee on Rules brings in a unanimous report to consider the most fantastic bill ever presented for the consideration of the House during my 14 years of service, especially now in the closing days of Congress and when there is waiting for consideration a far more important bill for the welfare of all the enlisted men who are going to do service to the country, namely, the civil-rights bill.

I do not recall, in the latter years, of Congress ever having granted by act, as this bill purposes to do, a special patent. It purposes to do more, it first provides that this presumed inventor of something shall appoint his own committee to pass upon its practicability. This is not the first time my attention has been called to a man who has claimed that he has invented perpetual motion, and I take it from the hearings given before the Committee on Patents that he has the same idea, for he says, on page 4 of the hearings:

I never took seriously the expression that energy could not be produced without any expense.

He declines to submit this apparatus that he claims to have perfected to any committee of Congress to even see it operate. Three citizens of Boston have written letters of testimony to the committee as stated in the report. One of them is the director of music of the Boston public schools. The other, Mr. Kenny, is president of the board of trustees of the public library, and the third is Mr. J. Robert Hennessy. It is not stated in the report what his profession is, but in the hearings it is disclosed that he is an artist by profession who has been furnishing money to this inventor to try to devise something to produce perpetual motion or to create energy without energy. What does the bill provide? It provides that he, not the Government or any representative of the Government, but he shall appoint a committee of five eminent scientists who are to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior. He may appoint any scientists, and if they are scientists I suppose the Secretary of the Interior will have to visé their appointment.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not now. I desire to make my argument without being distracted at this time. These five eminent scientists of his selection are to pass upon the practicability, not the originality, of the patent—not whether he is the original inventor, but merely upon the practicability of the invention. There may have been hundreds of others who may have invented some scheme of extracting nitrogen from the air. They may have had their patents issued in the Patent Office; but if these eminent scientists, selected by this man, shall determine the practicability of the invention, not the originality, then a certificate under section 3 of the bill must be awarded to him as the inventor, and the Government of the United States must thereupon protect him under the terms of the bill in that invention. Further, if there are any improvements upon this device, he will not have to suffer the same course that other inventors do when improvements are made upon their patented devices—oh, no! The Government of the United States is compulsorily obliged to compensate the inventor of the improvement and purchase that improvement for its and his use. Furthermore, under this bill no other person who may have been granted a patent heretofore will be privileged to use his patent of any kindred character whatsoever, for under section 4 of the bill we find the following provision:

That the United States Government shall not issue to anyone else any patent for any kind of free-energy generator, regardless of its form or shape, or for any device, improvement, process, equipment, or apparatus based upon the system or correlative principle of the said discovery.

If an improvement has been made, he gets the benefit of it, if he thinks that it is worth while.

Mr. Speaker, this is an unheard-of proceeding, which plays entirely on the side of this man, who claims to have been working on this invention for 20 years and who completed it in the spring of 1915. I can not see any reason why he should be granted any preferential rights. I can see many reasons why we should not pass this resolution that will give him a preferred right. If the House to-day should pass this resolution, even without any consideration being given by the Senate, he would be able, as other inventors have been able in times past, without ever having obtained letters patent, to promote a corporation involving millions of dollars and pass off his green-goods invention, if it is such—and I claim to have the right to call it a green-goods invention when he absolutely declines to let any representative of the Government see the operation of his apparatus—he could promote a corporation of millions of dollars and sell the stock to the gullible public—as gullible, perhaps, as the Committee on Rules—and make a tremendous amount of money by saying that the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States had passed a resolution granting him a patent, and that it will only be a matter of a short time until the Senate passes it. He could foist on the gullible public who buys the stock that they will be the recipients under the terms of the bill of the rights to a patent for a rare device that will generate perpetual motion; that will provide energy without the consumption of energy whatever—except gas. [Laughter.]

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman, as I believe he is one of the subjects who reported favorably this bill from the Committee on Patents.

Mr. DENISON. Yes; I am one of those. I was going to ask the gentleman from Milwaukee—from Wisconsin——

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman need not withdraw the designation. I consider it a high honor to represent Milwaukee.

Mr. DENISON. If he had noticed the clause in the resolution which gives the Government the right to take over absolutely all this man's rights?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; but the Government may not have anything to take over. Some prior inventor may have invented his very devices, and yet we are foreclosing all of the rights of these prior inventors in giving this man an absolute patent upon the finding of his own committee merely as to its practicability. I assume the gentleman is acquainted with the patent laws of the country.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. In just a moment. The only argument that has been made here in favor of this resolution, particularly by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], is the weakness of our patent laws. It is true that our patent laws do not give any protection, to speak of, to the inventor. Unlike the patent laws of some foreign countries, when a patent is granted the Government does not throw its protecting arm around the inventor in securing him the rights to his invention. If our patent laws are weak—and everyone who knows anything about them know they are—then the remedy should be not to bring in a special bill giving a preferred position on a pedestal of distinction to some man who has been working with the aid of an artist for these 20 years, for a device to control the always charming and elusive invention of perpetual motion, but to reform the patent laws of the country——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will ask the gentleman to yield me two minutes more.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin two minutes more.

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). To revise the patent laws so as to give adequate protection to every inventor—and there are many deserving inventors in this country, poor and of the middle class, who deserve protection. The supporters of this bill should not use the weakness of the patent laws as a justification of this ridiculous and fantastic proposal.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield first to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. I simply want to call attention to the fact that if the Government takes this over the bill provides, in line 14, page 4, that this man shall be remunerated to the extent commensurate with the value of his discovery or invention.

Mr. STAFFORD. In fairness to the bill, let me say here that that relates only to the Government taking over the invention for the use of the entire public. I studied the bill quite carefully before it was presented, and that only provides that if the Government believes that this invention should be taken over for the free use of the public, then the Government should pay for it as determined upon by a committee of three to be appointed by him and three to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GORDON. If this man has an invention for the free and unlimited coinage of energy, does not the gentleman believe we would be justified in passing this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; I think the gentleman should be given a certificate to come into this Chamber. [Laughter.] I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SMALL].

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, this discovery was first called to my attention by Mr. Ferguson, president of the Newport News Shipbuilding Co., a gentleman who is a graduate of the Naval Academy and recognized as one of the distinguished naval and ship constructors of the country. He evidently had been sufficiently impressed to believe that it was the duty of Congress to pass this resolution and thereby give an opportunity for the use of this discovery to the Government of the United States and to the people of the country. The object of this resolution which this rule makes in order is not to enable Members of this House to pass upon the merits of this discovery, because, as I understand, the discovery up to this time rests in the breast of this gentleman who claims to be the discoverer. Now, the only ground upon which we can determine the merits of this resolution rests upon another rather than our knowledge of the details of the discovery, and that is the reputation and character of the man who comes before us and states that he has made this wonderful discovery. Confidence is the very basis of life; it is the basis of financial credit; it is the basis of dealings between man and man, and it is the motive which induces us to act day after day upon trivial as well as upon important matters. This gentleman came to us with commendations of his character, of his capacity as a student, of his prolonged study of this subject, of confidence in his truthfulness, and they say that the statements have impressed them as worthy of serious consideration, and therefore it is a fair conclusion to state that they are worthy of the consideration of the House. Gentlemen have said, Why not refer this to the Patent Office? Even the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] admits that our patent laws are defective and do not protect the inventor. And in the report which accompanies this bill is quoted the language of Mr. Thomas A. Edison, as follows:

> Unhappily, there is absolute certainty that under our present patent laws the poor devil of an inventor would never receive any reward for it.

Now the last sentence—

> I suppose I invent as much as ever, but the pathway to the Patent Office is not so hot with my footsteps as it used to be.

Then he says that all the money he has made has been out of manufacturing rather than the protection which he received from inventions granted by the Patent Office. Therefore I say the point for the consideration of the House is, Do you upon the evidence submitted have confidence in the integrity, the truthfulness, and capacity of this man who claims to have made this discovery? There is not the slightest question about its value. If he has made the discovery which enables us to utilize free energies without the use of fuel, a discovery even greater than the discovery of steam, it will rank with the discovery of electricity as a producer of energy—I say, if he has made any such discovery as that and comes to us with the recommendation of reputable, intelligent men whose faith in him has been aroused by their association with him, we can afford to take their statements and the expression of their judgment and yield to this man that boon which he seeks, an opportunity to make his discovery known to the world, a blessing to the Government of the United States and the people of our country. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire about the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has consumed 13 minutes of his time, and the gentleman from Kansas 21 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield eight minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS].

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I have been somewhat surprised at the attitude of some of the Members of this body toward the pending resolution. There is nothing fantastic about this situation, unless perhaps it is the criticisms of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. [Laughter.] I listened to his far-fetched suggestion that the passage of this resolution would afford the opportunity for deluding a misguided public into the purchase of worthless stock, and wondered in that connection why the gentleman from Wisconsin had not read the resolution itself. If he would only look to section 6 of this measure he would find that the Government is given the option to purchase the device from the inventor. The five scientists, who are to pass on the merits of this alleged discovery must be approved by the Secretary of the Interior. Should they upon investigation pronounce that the inventor's machine is wholly without merit, and the Government of the United States should thereupon decline to exercise its option of purchase, I wonder what opportunity would be thereafter afforded to anyone to sell stock in this enterprise. An adverse report from the committee will be destructive of any scheme of stock selling if one is in contemplation. On the other hand should this report be favorable, the Government should exercise its option at once. There are only two things we ought to consider in this connection, First: the nature of the alleged discovery, second; the proposition submitted by the inventor.

Now, what is the alleged discovery? It is simply this: This investigator—and I do not know whether he can make good or not; on this point I am no better informed than any other Member on this floor—claims that he has discovered the secret of using the mighty cosmic forces to drive machinery, that in other words he has learned how to utilize for motive purposes the infinite streams of energy that ceaselessly flow through the vast spaces of the universe. Many scientists have maintained that in time this would be done.

I do not suppose that Lord Kelvin would be denominated by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] as a fantastic dreamer, and yet Lord Kelvin predicted that in time some man greater than his fellows would discover this mighty secret of harnessing for the various purposes of man's use some portion of the infinite energy which holds the stars in their appointed courses, and maintains the orderly movements of the whirling suns.

This man claims that he has arrived at this secret through long years of patient study.

His is no perpetual-motion machine. He connects his machine or mechanical device, with the infinite forces of the cosmos, as I understand his contention, and deriving its power from this infinite source, his machine will continue to run until in time it will wear out and must be replaced, just as the mighty turbines driven by the falling waters of Niagara must be replaced, though humanly speaking the power that drives them will go on forever. It is a vast claim that he makes. I do not know that it is true, but the man Giragossian asks only that we afford him the opportunity to make good this contention without money, and without price on our part.

Now, what is the proposition submitted to the United States? It is very simple. The claimant asks that five scientists be appointed to pass judgment on the merits of his discovery. The Secretary of the Interior is to approve each and every one of these scientists before he will be allowed to sit in judgment on this board. Do you suppose for a moment that the Secretary of the Interior will not insist that the five scientists so selected shall be the brightest luminaries in our world of science? Will not such a board be competent to protect our interests, and fairly determine the merits of this alleged discovery?

The Government pays nothing, and is asked to pay nothing. It can not be exploited in any way. The inventor does not ask for the means to construct a machine. He agrees to submit one in perfected form, and actually running.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am sorry to say I can not yield in this connection.

Hence the interests of the United States are completely and absolutely protected. Should the committee of scientistis report that the inventor has sustained his contention, then the Government is given the option to purchase the rights of the inventor in his discovery, but it is not compellable to make this purchase.

The criticism directed against this man Giragossian is most unjust and unfounded in so far as it undertakes to laugh him out of court. I do not know that he has made the discovery claimed, but he may have made it, and if so it is the greatest discovery of all the ages. We may be pursuing a bubble, but we will not purchase a bubble. Before we enter upon any contract of purchase, we will be fully advised as to the nature and merits of the thing proposed to be obtained.

Further the inventor asks that if he makes good before the board, the Government shall give him for a period of 17 years a greater measure of protection against suits and encroachments than he conceives that he can secure under a patent, and the operation of the patent laws. Are you not willing to do this? I am, for one. As I have said, if this man has made the discovery that he alleges that he has made, then there is nothing too great for us to give him in the way of protection against encroachments and infringements. In addition the resolution provides that if the board makes a favorable report, then the Government is to have free of cost, as many of the Giragossian machines, as it may care to use for governmental purposes.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have but little time, but I am disposed to yield to the gentleman. I will yield to him.

Mr. FESS. I would like to know how the inventor impressed the gentleman and the other members of the committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am glad the gentleman has asked the question. So far as I am aware all the members who have come into acquaintance with Mr. Giragossian have been favorably impressed, but he has not revealed his secret to any of them. He is reserving his demonstration for the scientists. In further answer to the gentleman I wish to say that the two committees who have dealt with this matter, namely the Committee on Patents which reported the resolution, and the Committee on Rules, which has reported this rule, have been unanimous in action, as the record will show. Do you think that the members of these committees are frivolous and empty-headed figureheads who would ask you to expend your time in the consideration of a matter that they deemed trivial and fantastic? Nay rather the members of these committees are able and high-minded Members of this House, who would not submit this proposition for consideration if they were not assured in their own minds that it was worthy at this time of the serious consideration of every patriotic citizen. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. One other question. Would what you are giving in the bill prevent anyone outside making improvements by later discovery?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes. But the whole matter will be in the hands of the Government, all of it. Mark you, the inventor will not hold a whip hand over the Government. The whip and the control will be in our hands.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield? I want to make a correction for the gentleman. It does not prevent ourselves from making an improvement, but it provides that if we do so the Government shall pay him for it, because the Government is the most interested party.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The Government is to take it over and pay for it. He will be unable to put an improvement on the market.

Mr. FESS. My idea was that nearly every invention in its incipiency is very imperfect, and that later improvements add wonderfully to them.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If we buy an imperfect, but meritorious invention it will be to our interest to perfect it.

Mr. FESS. I will say to my friend that I am in sympathy with it.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman will allow me, it will be free after 17 years?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Absolutely.

Mr. CANNON. I think that ought to satisfy the gentleman.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this man claims to have made an amazing discovery, but merely on that score it will not do to undertake to whistle him down the winds. It was not many years ago that Prof. Langley went to his grave with his last hours embittered by the venomous attacks upon his work and researches related to the great subject of aerial flight. Many people regarded him as actually crazy upon this subject. He was ridiculed beyond measure in the newspapers and magazines.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] has expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yet within the last few months that machine, Prof. Langley's machine, was resurrected, and with but few changes made a successful flight when equipped with a modern motor, thereby demonstrating that his basic idea was right, and that he was the true father of modern aerial flight. [Applause.]

Mr. HULBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HULBERT Is not the same true with respect to the invention of the telephone and telegraph and almost every other discovery?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes. I well remember, and other gentlemen will remember, the learned scientific articles, of 10 or 15 years ago, that demonstrated with all the precision of a mathematical demonstration that aerial flight by a machine heavier than the air was a mechanical impossibility. I recall these articles with much amusement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman another minute.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, Copernicus, in his day, was regarded as a lunatic, and if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] had lived at that time and passed on his case, he would undoubtedly have sent him to a lunatic asylum. [Laughter.]

Why do I say this? Because Copernicus undertook to demonstrate that the planets revolve around the sun, when every gentleman of that time who resembled the gentleman from Wisconsin in his present attitude knew perfectly well as a matter of daily observation that the sun revolved about the earth. He saw it with his own eyes rise in the east, and set in the west, revolving about the earth according to the good old Ptolemaic theory. [Laughter.] Gallileo in his day was not only regarded as a lunatic, but actually as a blasphemer as a result of his upsetting theories.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. In a moment. Gallileo, I say, was not only regarded as a lunatic, but as a blasphemer, and under the pressure of the Inquisition, had to make an open recantation of his heresies.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman one minute more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for one minute more.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. A few days ago I saw that before a meeting of American scientists an American professor undertook to demonstrate that to a limited extent he was able to destroy the force of gravitation. Prof. Ramsay of London is at the very threshhold of the transmutation of metals. We are living in an age of amazing discoveries.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not want to seem to be discourteous, and will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Did any of these eminent scientists that the gentleman refers to decline to divulge his secret to the world as this gentleman does?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No. They divulged them, and were regarded by the doubters of that day as lunatics. I have no doubt that if this gentleman, Mr. Giragossian, would divulge his discovery to the gentleman from Wisconsin he would still regard him as a lunatic, or an impostor. Just one word more. Suppose Mr. Marconi had anticipated by a hundred years his world-shaking discovery of wireless communication, and had gone before the Congress of that day and said, "Mr. Speaker, if you will give me opportunity, I will enable you and other gentlemen, to talk in your natural voice with England, or Hawaii, or the Philippine Islands, or with any of the other remote corners of the earth, using as a vehicle for that purpose a substance that no one has ever seen, weighed, or measured, a thing which is a mere working scientific hypothesis, used to explain certain observed phenomena, what would the answer have been to such a proposition? To the lunatic asylum with this fellow, would have been the instant response of the Speaker, adding that public officials were not safe, when men maintaining such vagaries were allowed to be at large. The gentleman from Wisconsin is a present exemplar of this ancient attitude which waves aside the men who are ahead of the general knowledge of their age and time. [Applause and laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in three minutes I can not say a great deal, but I can indorse all that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] has said. [Applause.]

There is one thing certain: If this man does have this secret, and does not divulge it, we will not have it. That is perfectly certain. [Laughter.] It does not cost us anything to find out, and the fact that he has convinced every member of the Committee on Patents and every member of the Committee on Rules that he has something that ought to be investigated, ought, it seems to me, to foreclose all opposition. [Applause.]

"Oh, but it might hurt somebody in the future that might make improvements. Maybe some other fellow has investigated it." Oh, we do not know about it.

I want to say a word about the flying machine. Prof. Langley died—I believe he was ridiculed to death about his flying machine. He appeared before the Committee on Appropriations that I had the honor to preside over, and he said, "I want five or ten thousand dollars"—whichever it was—"to experiment." "What is it," I said, "Professor?" "Oh," said he, "I want to perfect a flying machine." Said I, "My God!" [Laughter.] He said, "Now, Mr. CANNON, do not birds fly, and are they not heavier than air?" I came down, as Davy Crockett's coon offered to do when Davy Crockett was out with his gun. I reported it, and we had a lively contest in the House to pass it, and they passed it in the Senate; they made fun of it, and the newspapers made fun of it. And yet he had a flying machine; he developed the machinery, you see. He had the idea. His engine was imperfect, but it was good enough to make it fly for a minute, and it made all things follow. And now we have the flying machine. [Applause.]

Now, I recollect that Indiana incident that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] referred to. I heard a joint discussion between William J. Brown and David Wallace, the father of Lew Wallace, the author of Ben Hur, elected in 1840 from the Indianapolis district, which took in about one-third of the State. I was a boy 6 years old. I tagged. They had a general discussion in the grove near Annapolis, in Parke County, Ind. He voted for a $30,000 appropriation to construct a telegraph line from Washington to Baltimore. William J. Brown, his Democratic opponent in the campaign of 1842, said this and that and the other about the Whigs, and finally said, "My fellow citizens, think of it! This man, my opponent, voted for an appropriation of $30,000 to send news by lightning—by lightning—by lightning!" [Laughter.]

Why, William J. Brown beat him at the election two to one.

Now, I am going to vote for this bill. That is all I want to say. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I realize that the House is in a kind of mesmeric trance, and that after these delightful speeches about Copernicus and various other discoverers and inventors from the beginning, down to the present time, it may be futile to say a word about the practices that prevail with regard to patents. It seems to me that the House is in rather an extreme frame of mind when it proposes by a rule to give an exclusive privilege to an individual who does not divulge his plans, and when it goes further and proposes to enter into a contract with him for whatever he possesses, about which the Government at the present time knows absolutely nothing. The Patent Office is open to this gentleman, certified to, as he is, by several gentlemen from Massachusetts. He can go, as other inventors and patentees go, to obtain protection under the laws of the United States. But apparently he prefers not to do that and has convinced the members of the Rules Committee that he should not. Every Congressman's office now is in receipt of correspondence coming from inventors of devices by which it is proposed to save the Government and stop the war. You have not brought in, in favor of these gentlemen, a bill proposing to give them exclusive privileges. None of them can obtain it.

I say nothing with regard to this mysterious invention or discovery, or whatever this thing is. It may be all that the inventor claims for it, and all that the highly susceptible members of the Committee on Patents and the Committee on Rules believe. But still this is not the ordinary practice. It is extreme and extraordinary, and it seems to smack of favoritism toward one man who does not divulge his plans, as against thousands of other inventors, who would gladly come to Congress for similar privilege, if Congress saw fit to grant it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the rule.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 116) for the purpose of promoting efficiency, for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States, for lessening the expenses of the war, and restoring the loss caused by the war by providing for the employment of a discovery or invention called the "Garabed," claiming to make possible the utilization of free energy, was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept, as trustee for the United States Government, from Garabed T. K. Giragossian, an assignment of the right to utilize for the Government's own use a discovery or invention to be known as the "Garabed."

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to perform any and all acts, and to make such rules and regulations, and enter into such contracts as may be necessary to carry this resolution into effect: Provided, however, That the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian shall demonstrate the practicability of his discovery or invention to a commission of five eminent scientists, who shall be appointed by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian and be approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The United States Government shall be under no expense in connection with the demonstration of the "Garabed."

SEC. 3. That if such demonstration shall, in the opinion of the said scientists, prove the practicability of said discovery or invention, the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian shall be recognized by the United States Government as the original discoverer, inventor, and legal owner of the invention or discovery and of any improvements pertaining thereto that may be made by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian. The certificate of said commission of scientists, to the effect that said discovery or invention is practicable shall constitute the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian the legal owner of, and entitle him to all the rights and benefits of said discovery or invention for a period of 17 years. The right is reserved to the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian, his heirs, and assigns to take out patents for his aforesaid discovery, invention, or for any improvement or device pertaining thereto.

SEC. 4. That the United States Government shall not issue to anyone else any patent for any kind of free-energy generator, regardless of its form or shape, or for any device, improvement, process, equipment, or apparatus based upon the system or correlative principle of the said discovery or invention, or for any improvement or change developed in the use of the said "Garabed," and shall prevent the construction, importation, use, or exploitation thereof, in whole or in part, in the United States, and shall protect the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian, his heirs, and assigns in the rights and interests in the "Garabed" in the above respect for a period of 17 years in the United States and in foreign countries where such protection is afforded by treaty obligation, international law, or diplomatic representation.

SEC. 5. That any essential improvement or contrivance by any person or persons other than Garabed T. K. Giragossian relating to the "Garabed," or its principle, which shall prove valuable and essential thereto in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior during the period of the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian's special protection shall be bought by the United States Government for its own use in conjunction with its use of the said "Garabed," with adequate compensation to the inventor or contriver thereof. If, however, the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian wishes to utilize any such invention or contrivance so acquired by the United States Government, he or his assigns, and no other person or corporation, shall be entitled thereto upon the payment of a fair, just, and reasonable royalty therefor. In consideration of this right the United States Government shall have, without expense, the right to use for its own purpose any new improvement or device made by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian.

SEC. 6. That after the successful demonstration of the "Garabed," if the United States Government wishes to purchase the right and title for the exclusive use of said discoverey or invention within the boundaries of the United States, the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian will comply with the request of the United States Government: Provided, That he shall be remunerated to the extent commensurate with the value of his discovery or invention, which shall be appraised and determined by a joint committee selected by the Secretary of the Interior and by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian.

If the United States Congress in session at the time of the demonstration, or, at the latest during the following session, does not decide to avail itself of this privilege, the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian's legal rights and powers shall continue unimpaired as prescribed and set forth in this resolution.

SEC. 7. That any sale, or attempted sale, by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian, or by his representatives or assigns, of any interest in or any title to said discovery or invention, or any part thereof, prior to the approval of the same by said commission of scientists, shall be illegal, invalid, and void.

SEC. 8. That the United States Government will have the right to exercise the aforesaid right to utilize said discovery or invention for its own use simultaneously with the beginning of the public and general use of the said "Garabed" system.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is on the House Calendar, and I assume that amendments are in order to any section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is to strike out, on page 2, in lines 5 and 6, the words "by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian and be approved."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 2, lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian and be approved."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, no matter how the House may regard the invention, if there be one, of this Mr. Giragossian, I think in all seriousness that the House ought not to undertake to grant to him all these rights, as this bill purports to do, without the protection of this committee of scientists being appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. Certainly you do not wish to surrender all control of the decision as to whether this man has a practical and useful invention to five scientists who may be named by him. True, as the bill has been reported, it provides that these five scientists named by him are to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior; but if the Government is going to be protected—and the Government certainly will have rights not only in the use of this invention, if invention it be, for its own purposes—and other users, and other persons who have improvements on that device should be protected, then this committee of five scientists who are to determine whether this device is practicable should be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior. Whom would the Secretary of the Interior be likely to name? There is at the head of the Bureau of Standards one of the most eminent scientists of the country, performing service for the Government at a salary much lower than he could command in industrial life, who would very likely head that committee. There would be men also connected with that Bureau of Standards who are versed in this special subject about which this man claims to have an original device and idea. Certainly he, being directly interested, should not claim the privilege of naming these five men.

Now, there is another provision in this bill which I shall seek to have eliminated for the protection of the Government, and that is section 5. While I have the floor I wish to direct the attention of the committee to it, and I say this in all seriousness: If he has this device, certainly, gentlemen, you should not provide, as section 5 provides, that any improvement upon it shall be bought by the United States Government.

You should not give him any greater right to improvements on the device than are granted to other inventors. He bases his claim for withholding knowledge of this device from any representative of the Government or any representative of Congress on the fact that if he discloses it it may be appropriated by some one else. But this section 5 goes further. He may have something that has been discovered long ago. In the discussion of the nitrate proposition upon this floor it was disclosed that there are inventions for extracting nitrogen from the air, and that those inventions might be utilized for the development of energy. Are you going to say that the men who have developed those ideas are to be debarred from improvement of their devices? I think we are going very far afield indeed when we seek to pass this bill without any adequate protection to the Government. We are granting to this man unlimited privileges, compelling the Government to give him an exclusive privilege when he may not be the original inventor. I ask any gentleman who has reported this bill from the Committee on Patents, What is the evidence that this man is the original inventor and what rights should be granted if he has merely got some device that is practicable though he is not the original inventor? Is he to be given an exclusive patent as against prior inventors? And yet the phraseology of this joint resolution would grant him that and compel the Government to waive its protection to inventors of improvements. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I believe the House ought to adopt the amendment if we are going to proceed in this way, and that this committee of five scientists should be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior.

This is not the last bill of this kind that will come into this House. If you pass this bill you will be beset by every inventor to take up his scheme on the ground that he has an invention that can be utilized by the Army and the Navy or by some other Government agency and that he has no capital to promote the device. That is the Pandora's box we are opening when we pass this bill.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I want to reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin. This amendment is very objectionable not only to the inventor but to the committee. If this man has what he claims to have, no reasonable man, no man who is not self-centered and more concerned about having a reputation for objecting to everything, more concerned about little technicalities, than he is about the great things that may be accomplished for the country, will object to the inventor's having a voice in the appointment of this commission. [Applause.] I have sat here with some impatience listening to two or three gentlemen who want to ridicule this thing out of court.

If any man has the slightest notion that Mr. Giragossian has what he claims to have, he is acting against the best interests of his country and the people of the world in trying to oppose it on such a petty basis as has been stated by them. [Applause.]

Gentlemen, let us not be small in dealing with this question. This man came before the Committee on Patents and we had a full hearing. We had the testimony of those who have lived in the same city with Mr. Giragossian for many years, men who knew him and who say that he was a man of high character and intelligence. But we were not controlled entirely by what those gentlemen say. Many members of the committee have spent hours in talking with Mr. Giragossian. Not one of us but who felt convinced that he was a man not only of the highest character but of the greatest intelligence.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. What did this man tell you he was going to accomplish? I want to be for this bill, and I am for it. I believe he has something; but what is it?

Mr. CROSSER. I will come to that in a minute. We feel that this man is an unusual man. We know from what he said that he has given the most intense application for years to the study of this question. He has said to me a great many times, "Mr. CROSSER, I know what it means if this resolution passes and I should fail to make good. I know that it means disgrace and the loss of the esteem of those who know me. Do you think I want such a thing to happen? It may be that some morning we will rise and find the sun setting on the wrong side and men walking heads down. In that case the laws of nature would be reversed and I might fail, but," he said, "I tell you positively there is no such thing as failure in regard to this matter."

I say, he has convinced every member of the Patents Committee of his honesty and intelligence. I did not press him to know the details of his alleged discovery. I did not feel that it was the part of propriety on my part to do so.

I know something about legal procedure and parliamentary procedure, but when I see a thing of the magnitude of this proposition coming before the American Congress I am not going to stand upon technicalities. We are not justified in trying to ridicule the proposition simply because it seems so stupendous as to be beyond the ken of man. I think we are performing a patriotic duty to the people of this country in giving this man a chance to demonstrate what he has. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman been approached at any time since he came to Washington by any other inventor of a device——

Mr. CROSSER. The Patent Committee has had numerous men coming before them, wanting to present their propositions. We have considered some of them and have generally found that they have had little merit.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want to deprive this man of any opportunity or to get advantage of his invention, if he has an invention. I ask the gentleman if it is not true that men come to Congressmen, to their offices, with devices for guns, ships, and for various things which they say will help settle the war, and who get no such help as is proposed by this bill?

Mr. CROSSER. If a thousand men were to come before the Patent Committee with inventions for guns, ships, and so forth, all of them put together could not mean as much to the human race as this man's invention, if he has what he claims to have. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman tell us what it is, because all the information we have comes from the gentleman himself and those who have talked with this man.

Mr. CROSSER. If the man had disclosed his patent to us, he would not be here asking for a demonstration.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROSSER. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. I suggest to my friend that it is not wise and best for anybody to know exactly what this patent is.

Mr. CROSSER. Exactly. If the man were willing to come before the committee and disclose his patent, we would not want to make it public at this time. If he has what he says he has, it will save thousands of lives and millions of dollars to the American people.

Think of just what it costs for fuel for the Government itself in one year. Millions would not begin to measure it. It goes beyond the billion mark. When you consider what it would mean to the individual citizen of the United States, the advantage is beyond comprehension. We do not say that we know this man has what he claims he has. We say to you that we have listened to his testimony, and we feel absolutely convinced of the man's high intelligence and his honesty and patriotism. He says he wants to give this to the Government for the good it will do the American people, and I think it is small business on our part to quibble about the terms upon which we shall grant him protection when he offers the Government the free use of his invention for all its purposes.

I do not know the nature of his discovery, but I hope that I am not so bigoted as those who say that a thing is impossible merely because they themselves have never seen or heard of its being done. No man who has studied history or philosophy will assume such an attitude.

Lord Kelvin and other great scientists predicted that a discovery of some such character would be made which would revolutionize the world.

But some gentlemen object to the protection proposed, assuming that Mr. Giragossian has made the discovery in question. How they can justify such an attitude is hard to understand, for if Mr. Giragossian's claims are well founded he has made the supreme discovery of the ages, one which would be a blessing to every human being. Anyone with the least power of imagination can not but understand the tremendous results such a discovery would make possible.

Why, then, quibble about the method by which this man is granted protection? He asks no money. He asks only an opportunity to demonstrate his proposition before a competent tribunal. Shall we be so narrow-minded as to refuse him an opportunity? Surely not.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The question was taken.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. There is another amendment that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] desires to offer. We do not care to delay the bill at all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. STAFFORD (interrupting the count). Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order, but there is no desire to postpone the consideration of the resolution. I had an hour, but I used only a small part of the hour.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. STAFFORD), there were—ayes 29, noes 79.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-one Members present, not a quorum. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 234, nays 14, answered "present" 5, not voting 178, as follows:

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BUTLER. Did he vote?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. STEELE. I desire to withdraw my vote of "aye" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. STEELE was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present; the Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

On motion of Mr. CROSSER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution, from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 160 (H. Rept. No. 185).

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration under the general rules of the House of H. R. 6361, entitled "A bill to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war," and it shall be considered from day to day until disposed of, subject to consideration of conference reports.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, this provides for the consideration of one of the most important measures, so far as the soldiers and sailors are concerned, that has been considered by the Congress during this memorable session. I believe that every Member of the House is acquainted in a general way certainly with the provisions of the act which is called by some a soldiers' and sailors' civil-rights bill and by others the soldiers' and sailors' stay bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I suppose the proper term would be a moratorium bill.

Mr. POU. I think that it would probably—well, I do not know about that. No; a moratorium bill would hardly be a correct description of it.

Mr. MADDEN. It is to stay the payment of obligations until after the war.

Mr. POU. The bill does that under certain circumstances, but the circumstances are to be determined by the court, and I do not think the name moratorium would be entirely accurate. If I am mistaken——

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I think it is a good bill and ought to be considered.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to detain the House with any debate on the bill. I believe the House wants to do itself the credit of passing this bill before it agrees to any resolution of adjournment. If another body, if the Senate decides to put this matter over until the regular session in December, the responsibility, of course, is not with the House of Representatives. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6361) to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war.

Be it enacted, etc.—

ARTICLE I.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

SEC. 100. That for the purpose of enabling the United States the more successfully to prosecute and carry on the war in which it is at present engaged, protection is hereby extended to persons in the military service of the United States in order to prevent prejudice or injury to their civil rights during their term of service and to enable them to devote their entire energy to the military needs of the Nation, and to this end the following provisions are made for the temporary suspension of legal proceedings and transactions which may prejudice the civil rights of persons in such service during the continuance of the present war.

SEC. 101. (1) That the term "persons in military service" as used in this act shall include the following persons, and no others: All officers and enlisted men of the Regular Army, the Regular Army Reserve, the Officers' Reserve Corps, and the Enlisted Reserve Corps; all officers and enlisted men of the National Guard and National Guard Reserve recognized by the Militia Bureau of the War Department; all forces raised under the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917; all officers and enlisted men of the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard; all officers and enlisted men of the Naval Militia, Naval Reserve force, Marine Corps Reserve, and National Naval Volunteers recognized by the Navy Department; all officers of the Public Health Service detailed by the Secretary of the Treasury for duty either with the Army or the Navy; any of the personnel of the Lighthouse Service and of the Coast and Geodetic Survey transferred by the President to the service and jurisdiction of the War Department or of the Navy Department; members of the Nurse Corps; field clerks who have taken the oath as members of the military forces of the United States; and members of any other body who have heretofore or may hereafter become a part of the military or naval forces of the United States. The term "military service" as used in this definition shall signify active service in any branch of service heretofore mentioned or referred to, but reserves and persons on the retired list shall not be included in the term "persons in military service" until ordered to active service. The term "active service" shall include the period during which a person in military service is absent from duty on account of sickness, wounds, leave, or other lawful cause.

(2) The term "period of military service" as used in this act shall include the time between the following dates: For persons in active service at the date of the approval of this act it shall begin with the date of approval of this act; for persons entering active service after the date of this act, with the date of entering active service. It shall terminate with the date of discharge from active service or death while in active service, but in no case later than the date when this act ceases to be in force.

(3) The term "person," as used in this act, with reference to the holder of any right alleged to exist against a person in military service, shall include individuals, partnerships, corporations, and any other forms of business association.

(4) The term "court" as used in this act shall include any court of competent jurisdiction of the United States or of any State, whether or not a court of record.

(5) The term "termination of the war" as used in this act shall mean the termination of the present war by the treaty of peace as proclaimed by the President.

SEC. 102. (1) That the provisions of this act shall apply to the United States, the several States and Territories, the District of Columbia, and all territory subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, and to proceedings commenced in any court therein, and shall be enforced through the usual forms of procedure obtaining in such courts or under such regulations as may be by them prescribed.

(2) When under this act any application is required to be made to a court in which no proceeding has already been commenced with respect to the matter, such application may be made to any court of competent jurisdiction, Federal, State, or local.

ARTICLE II.

GENERAL RELIEF.

SEC. 200. That in any action or proceeding commenced in any court if there shall be a default of an appearance by the defendant the plaintiff before entering judgment shall file in the court an affidavit setting forth facts showing that the defendant is not in military service. If unable to file such affidavit plaintiff shall in lieu thereof file an affidavit setting forth either that the defendant is in the military service or that plaintiff is not able to determine whether or not defendant is in such service. If an affidavit is not filed showing that the defendant is not in the military service, no judgment shall be entered without first securing an order of court directing such entry, and no such order shall be made if the defendant is in such service until after the court shall have appointed an attorney to represent defendant and protect his interest and the court shall on application make such appointment. Unless it appears that the defendant is not in such service the court may require as a condition before judgment is entered that the plaintiff file a bond approved by the court conditioned to indemnify the defendant, if in military service, against any loss or damage that he may suffer by reason of any judgment should the judgment be thereafter set aside in whole or in part. And the court may make such other and further order or enter such judgment as in its opinion may be necessary to protect the rights of the defendant under this act.

(2) Any person who shall make or use an affidavit required under this section knowing it to be false shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by imprisonment not to exceed one year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

(3) In any action or proceeding in which a person in military service is a party if such party does not personally appear therein or is not represented by an authorized attorney, the court may appoint an attorney to represent him; and in such case a like bond may be required and an order made to protect the rights of such person. But no attorney appointed under this act to protect a person in military service shall have power to waive any right of the person for whom he is appointed or bind him by his acts.

(4) If any judgment shall be rendered in any action or proceeding governed by this section against any person in military service during the period of such service or within 30 days thereafter, and it appears that such person was prejudiced by reason of his military service in making his defense thereto, such judgment may, upon application, made by such person or his legal representative, not later than 90 days after the termination of such service, be opened by the court rendering the same and such defendant or his legal representative let in to defend; provided it is made to appear that the defendant has a meritorious or legal defense to the action or some part thereof. Vacating, setting aside, or reversing any judgment because of any of the provisions of this act shall not impair any right or title acquired by any bona fide purchaser for value under such judgment.

SEC. 201. That at any stage thereof any action or proceeding commenced in any court against a person in military service during the period of such service or within 60 days thereafter may, in the discretion of the court in which it is pending, on its own motion, and shall, on application to it by such person or some person on his behalf, be stayed as provided in this act, unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of the defendant to comply with the judgment or order sought is not materially affected by reason of his military service.

SEC. 202. That when an action for compliance with the terms of any contract is stayed pursuant to this act no fine or penalty shall accrue by reason of failure to comply with the terms of such contract during the period of such stay, and in any case where a person fails to perform any obligation and a fine or penalty for such nonperformance is incurred a court may, on such terms as may be just, relieve against the enforcement of such fine or penalty if it shall appear that the person who would suffer by such fine or penalty was in the military service when the penalty was incurred and that by reason of such service the ability of such person to pay was thereby materially impaired.

SEC. 203. That in any action or proceeding commenced in any court against a person in military service, before or during the period of such service, or within 60 days thereafter, the court may, in its discretion, on its own motion, and on application to it by such person or some person on his behalf shall, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the defendant to comply with the judgment or order entered or sought is not materially affected by reason of his military service:

(1) Stay the execution of any judgment or order entered against such person, as provided in this act, and

(2) Vacate or stay any attachment or garnishment of property, money, or debts in the hands of another, whether before or after judgment, as provided in this act.

SEC. 204. That any stay of any action, proceeding, attachment, or execution, ordered by any court under the provisions of this act may, except as otherwise provided, be ordered for the period of military service and three months thereafter or any part of such period, and subject to such terms as may be just, whether as to payment in installments of such amounts and at such times as the court may fix or otherwise. Where the person in military service is a codefendant with others the plaintiff may nevertheless by leave of court proceed against the others.

SEC. 205. That the period of military service shall not be included in computing any period now or hereafter to be limited by any law for the bringing of any action by or against any person in military service or by or against his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, whether such cause of action shall have accrued prior to or during the period of such service.

ARTICLE III.

RENT, INSTALLMENT CONTRACTS, MORTGAGES.

SEC. 300. (1) That no eviction or distress shall be made during the period of military service in respect of any premises for which the agreed rent does not exceed $50 per month, occupied for dwelling purposes by the wife, children, or other dependents of a person in military service, except upon leave of court granted upon application therefor or granted in an action affecting the right of possession.

(2) On any such application or in any such action the court may, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, on application, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the tenant to pay the agreed rent is not materially affected by reason of such military service, stay the proceedings for not longer than three months, as provided in this act, or it may make such other order as may be just.

(3) Any person who shall take part in any eviction or distress otherwise than as provided in subsection (1) hereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punishable by imprisonment not to exceed one year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

(4) The Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, is hereby empowered, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, to order an allotment of the pay of a person in military service in reasonable proportion to discharge the rent of premises occupied for dwelling purposes by the wife, children, or other dependents of such person.

SEC. 301. (1) That no person who has received, or whose assignor has received, under a contract for the purchase of real or personal property, or of lease or bailment with a view to purchase of such property, a deposit or installment of the purchase price from a person or from the assignor of a person who, after the date of payment of such deposit or installment, has entered military service, shall exercise any right or option under such contract to rescind or terminate the contract or resume possession of the property for nonpayment of any installment falling due during the period of such military service, except by action in any court.

(2) Upon the hearing of such action the court may order the repayment of prior installments or deposits or any part thereof, as a condition of terminating the contract and resuming possession of the property, or may, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, on application to it by such person in military service or some person on his behalf, under a stay of proceedings as provided in this act unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of the defendant to comply with the terms of the contract is not materially affected by reason of such service; or it may make such other disposition of the case as may be equitable to conserve the interests of all parties.

SEC. 302. (1) That the provisions of this section shall apply only to obligations originating prior to the date of approval of this act and secured by mortgage, trust deed, or other security in the nature of a mortgage upon real or personal property owned by a person in military service at the commencement of the period of the military service and still so owned by him.

(2) In any proceeding commenced in any court during the period of military service to enforce such obligation arising out of nonpayment of any sum thereunder due or out of any other breach of the terms thereof occurring prior to or during the period of such service, the court may, after hearing, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, on application to it by such person in military service or some person on his behalf, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the defendant to comply with the terms of the obligation is not materially affected by reason of his military service—

(a) Stay the proceedings as provided in this act; or

(b) Make such other disposition of the case as may be equitable to conserve the interests of all parties.

(3) No sale under a power of sale or under a judgment entered upon warrant of attorney to confess judgment contained in any such obligation shall be valid if made during the period of military service or within three months thereafter, unless upon an order of sale previously granted by the court and a return thereto made and approved by the court.

ARTICLE IV.

INSURANCE.

SEC. 400. That in this article the term "policy" shall include any contract of life insurance on the level premium or legal reserve plan. It shall also include any benefit in the nature of life insurance arising out of membership in any fraternal or beneficial association; the term "premium" shall include membership dues or assessments in such association, and the date of issuance of policy as herein limited shall refer to the date of admission to membership in such association; the term "insured" shall include any person who is the holder of a policy as defined in this article; the term "insurer" shall include any corporation, partnership, or other form of association which secures or provides insurance under any policy as defined in this article.

SEC. 401. That the benefits of this article shall apply to any person in military service who is the holder of a policy of life insurance, when such holder shall apply for such benefits on a form prepared in accordance with regulations, which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and in all cases where under the terms of the contract of insurance any person other than the insured has a vested interest therein the consent of such other person shall be included in such application. Such form shall set forth particularly that the application therein made is a consent to such modification of the terms of the original contract of insurance as are made necessary by the provisions of this act, and by receiving and filing the same the insurer shall be deemed to have assented thereto to the extent, if any, to which the policy on which the application is made is within the provisions of this article. The original or such application shall be sent by the insured to the insurer and a copy thereof to the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance.

Second. That the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance shall send to every person in the military service a notice explaining in simple language the provisions of this article and inclosing forms for the making of applications for its benefits.

SEC. 402. That the benefits of this act shall be available to any person in military service in respect of contracts of insurance in force under their terms up to but not exceeding a face value of $5,000, irrespective of the number of policies held by such person, whether in one or more companies, when such contracts were made and a premium was paid thereon before September 1, 1917; but in no event shall the provisions of this article apply to any policy on which premiums are due and unpaid for a period of more than one year at the time when application for the benefits of this article is made.

SEC. 403. That the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance shall, subject to regulations, which shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, compile and maintain a list of such persons in military service as have made application for the benefits of this article, and shall (1) reject any applications for such benefits made by persons who are not persons in military service; (2) reject any applications for such benefits in excess of the amount permitted by section 402; and (3) reject any applications in respect of contracts of insurance otherwise not entitled to the benefits of this article. Said bureau shall immediately notify the insurer and the insured in writing of every rejection or approval.

SEC. 404. That when one or more applications are made under this article by any one person in military service in respect of insurance exceeding a total face value of $5,000, whether on one or more policies or in one or more companies, the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance shall, in its discretion, select which of such applications shall be rejected, and where necessary for bringing the total benefits conferred within the face value of $5,000 shall direct the insurer to divide any policy into two separate policies. The said bureau shall immediately notify the insurer and the insured in writing of such selection.

SEC. 405. That no policy of insurance which has not lapsed for the nonpayment of premium before the commencement of the period of military service of the insured, and to which the benefits of this article have been extended, shall lapse or be forfeited for the nonpayment of premium during the period of such service or during one year after the expiration of such period: Provided, That in no case shall this prohibition extend for more than one year after the termination of the war.

SEC. 406. That within the first 15 days of each calendar month after the date of approval of this act until the expiration of one year after the termination of the war every insurance corporation or association to which application has been made, as herein provided, for the benefits of this article shall render to the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance a report, duly verified, setting forth the following facts:

First. The names of the persons who have applied for such benefits, and the face value of the policies in respect of which such benefits have been applied for by such persons, during the preceding calendar month:

Second. A list, as far as practicable, of the premiums in respect of policies entitled to the benefits of this article which remain unpaid on the last day of the preceding calendar month, which day is at least 31 days after the due date of the premiums, provided such premiums have not previously been so reported as in default.

Third. A list of premiums which, having been previously reported as in default, have been paid by the policyholder or some one on his behalf, in whole or in part, during the preceding calendar month.

Fourth. A computation of the difference between the total amount of defaulted premiums therein reported and the total amount of premiums paid as therein reported, after having been previously reported as in default. From this sum shall be deducted the total sum of any premiums previously reported as in default, upon policies in respect of which the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance has, since the date of such report, rejected an application for the benefits of this article. The final sum so arrived at shall be denominated the monthly difference.

SEC. 407. That the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance shall verify the computation of monthly difference reported by each insurer, and shall certify it, as corrected, to the Secretary of the Treasury and the insurer.

SEC. 408. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, within 10 days thereafter, deliver each month to the proper officer of each insurer bonds of the United States in the nearest amount of round figures to the monthly difference certified in respect of each insurer. Such bonds shall be registered in the names of the respective insurers, who shall be entitled to receive the interest accruing thereon, and such bonds shall not be transferred or again registered except upon the approval of the Director of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, and shall remain in the possession of the insurer until settlement is made in accordance with this article: Provided, That whenever the fact of insolvency shall be ascertained by the Director of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance all obligation on the part of the United States, under this article, for future premiums on policies of such insurer shall thereupon terminate.

SEC. 409. That the bonds so delivered shall be held by the respective insurers as security for the payment of the defaulted premiums with interest. To indemnify it against loss the United States shall have a first lien upon the value of any policy receiving the benefits of this article, and no loan or settlement shall be made by the insurer on such policy which may prejudice the security of such lien.

SEC. 410. That in the event that the military service of any person being the holder of a policy receiving the benefits of this article shall be terminated by death, the amount of any unpaid premiums, with interest at the rate provided for in the policy for policy loans, shall be deducted from the proceeds of the policy and shall be included in the next monthly report of the insurer as premiums paid.

SEC. 411. That if the insured does not within one year after the termination of his period of military service pay to the insurer all past-due premiums, with interest thereon from their several due dates at the rate provided in the policy for policy loans, the policy shall at the end of such year immediately lapse and become void, and the insurer shall thereupon become liable to pay the cash surrender value thereof, if any: Provided, That if the insured is in the military service at the termination of the war such lapse shall occur and surrender value be payable at the expiration of one year after the termination of the war.

SEC. 412. That at the expiration of one year after the termination of the war there shall be an account stated between each insurer and the United States, in which the following items shall be credited to the insurer:

(1) The total amount of the monthly differences reported under this article;

(2) The difference between the total interest received by the insurer upon the bonds held by it as security and the total interest upon such monthly differences at the rate of 5 per cent per annum; and in which there shall be credited to the United States the amount of the cash surrender value of each policy lapsed or forfeited as provided in section 411, but not in any case a greater amount on any policy than the total of the unpaid premiums with interest thereon at the rate provided for in the policy for policy loans.

SEC. 413. That the balance in favor of the insurer shall, in each case, be paid to it by the United States upon the surrender by the insurer of the bonds delivered to it from time to time by the Secretary of the Treasury under the provisions of this article.

SEC. 414. That this article shall not apply to any policy which is void or which may at the option of the insurer be voidable, if the insured is in military service, either in this country or abroad, nor to any policy which as a result of being in military service, either in this country or abroad, provides for the payment of any sum less than the face thereof or for the payment of an additional amount as premium.

SEC. 415. That this article shall apply only to insurance companies or associations which are required by the law under which they are organized or doing business to maintain a reserve, or which, if not so required, have made or shall make provision for the collection from all those insured in such insurer of a premium to cover the special war risk of those insured persons who are in military service.

ARTICLE V.

TAXES AND PUBLIC LANDS.

SEC. 500. (1) That the provisions of this section shall apply when any taxes or assessments, whether general or special, falling due during the period of military service in respect of real property owned and occupied for dwelling or business purposes by a person in military service or his dependents at the commencement of his period of military service and still so occupied by his dependents or employees, are not paid.

(2) When any person in military service, or any person in his behalf, shall file with the collector of taxes, or other officer whose duty it is to enforce the collection of taxes or assessments, an affidavit showing (a) that a tax or assessment has been assessed upon property which is the subject of this section, (b) that such tax or assessment is unpaid, and (c) that by reason of such military service the ability of such person to pay such tax or assessment is materially affected, no sale of such property shall be made to enforce the collection of such tax or assessment, or any proceeding or action for such purpose commenced, except upon leave of court granted upon an application made therefor by such collector or other officer. The court thereupon may stay such proceedings or such sale, as provided in this act, for a period extending not more than six months after the termination of the war.

(3) When by law such property may be sold or forfeited to enforce the collection of such tax or assessment, such person in military service shall have the right to redeem or commence an action to redeem such property, at any time not later than six months after the termination of such service, but in no case later than six months after the termination of the war; but this shall not be taken to shorten any period now or hereafter provided by the laws of any State or Territory for such redemption.

(4) Whenever any tax or assessment shall not be paid when due, such tax or assessment due and unpaid shall bear interest until paid at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, and no other penalty or interest shall be incurred by reason of such nonpayment. Any lien for such unpaid taxes or assessment shall also include such interest thereon.

SEC. 501. That no right to any public lands initiated or acquired prior to entering military service by any person under the homestead laws, the desert-land laws, the mining-land laws, or any other laws of the United States, shall be forfeited or prejudiced by reason of his absence from such land, or of his failure to perform any work or make any improvements thereon, or to do any other act required by any such law during the period of such service. Nothing in this section contained shall be construed to deprive a person in military service or his heirs or devisees of any benefits to which he or they may be entitled under the act entitled "An act for the relief of homestead entrymen or settlers who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war," approved July 28, 1917; the act entitled "An act for the protection of desert-land entrymen who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war," approved August 7, 1917; the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," approved August 10, 1917; the joint resolution "To relieve the owners of mining claims who have been mustered into the military or naval service of the United States as officers or enlisted men from performing assessment work during the term of such service," approved July 17, 1917; or any other act or resolution of Congress: Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall be construed to limit or affect the right of a person in the military service to take any action during his term of service that may be authorized by law, or the regulations of the Interior Department thereunder, for the perfection, defense, or further assertion of rights initiated prior to the date of entering military service, and it shall be lawful for any person while in military service, to make any affidavit or submit any proof that may be required by law, or the practice of the General Land Office in connection with the entry, perfection, defense, or further assertion of any rights initiated prior to entering military service, before the officer commanding in the branch of the service in which the party is engaged, which affidavits shall be as binding in law and with like penalties as if taken before the Register of the United States Land Office.

ARTICLE VI.

ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES.

SEC. 600. That where in any proceeding to enforce a civil right in any court it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that any interest, property, or contract has since the date of the approval of this act been transferred or acquired with intent to delay the just enforcement of such right by taking advantage of this act, the court shall enter such judgment or make such order as might lawfully be entered or made irrespective of the provisions of this act.

SEC. 601. (1) That in any proceeding under this act a certificate signed by The Adjutant General of the Army as to persons in the Army or in any branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Army, signed by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department as to persons in the Navy or in any other branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Navy, and signed by the Major General Commandant, United States Marine Corps, as to persons in the Marine Corps, or in any other branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Marine Corps, or signed by an officer designated by any of them, respectively, for the purpose, shall when produced be prima facie evidence as to any of the following facts stated in such certificate:

That a person named has not been, or is, or has been in military service; the time when and the place where such person entered military service, his residence at that time, and the rank, branch, and unit of such service that he entered, the dates within which he was in military service, the monthly pay received by such person at the date of issuing the certificate, the time when and place where such person died in or was discharged from such service.

It shall be the duty of the foregoing officers to furnish such certificate on application, and any such certificate when purporting to be signed by any one of such officers or by any person appearing upon the face of the certificate to have been so authorized shall be prima facie evidence of its contents and of the authority of the signer to issue the same.

(2) Where a person in military service has been reported missing he shall be presumed to continue in the service until accounted for, and no period herein limited which begins or ends with the death of such person shall begin or end until the death of such person is in fact reported to or found by the Department of War or Navy, or any court or board thereof, or until such death is found by a court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, That no period herein limited which begins or ends with the death of such person shall be extended hereby beyond a period of six months after the termination of the war.

SEC. 602. That any interlocutory order made by any court under the provisions of this act may, upon the court's own motion or otherwise, be revoked, modified, or extended by it upon such notice to the parties affected as it may require.

SEC. 603. That this act shall remain in force until the termination of the war, and for six months thereafter.

SEC. 604 That this act may be cited as the soldiers' and sailors' civil rights act

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill may be limited to one hour, 30 minutes of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] and 30 minutes by myself. And, of course, as my friend from Wisconsin suggests, the debate shall be confined to the bill itself and not general.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent——

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the gentleman from North Carolina whether it is the intention to go on with the consideration of the bill to-night under the five-minute rule?

Mr. WEBB. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. MADDEN. And whether they intend to finish general debate to-night?

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman will understand there will be no five-minute debate under the rule under which we are considering this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. But it will be open for amendment.

Mr. WEBB. Of course. I will state to my friend that I thought we might get some debate in to-night and finish the bill to-morrow.

Mr. MADDEN. How long does the gentleman intend to run?

Mr. WEBB. My friend from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] suggests that we might adjourn now. I would like to know the temper of the House about it.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether an opportunity will be given to amend it or not?

Mr. WEBB. Absolutely.

Mr. ROBBINS. There are several sections that I think ought to be amended slightly.

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend that the chairman of the committee and the committee itself would be glad to have any gentlemen offer any amendment that they have to offer to this bill.

Mr. ROBBINS. Those that I will propose will strengthen the bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] will find it consistent and convenient to rise at this time. To-morrow we have not anything of consequence, and we can finish the bill then.

Mr. WEBB. If we can agree on one hour for general debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill continue for one hour, half of the time to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], and that the debate shall be confined to the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will.

Mr. CANNON. There are many paragraphs in this bill amending various sections. As one Member of the House, I have not read the bill and the report thoroughly. I tried to listen to it, but was interrupted while it was being read. It seems to me if the gentleman will modify his motion or his request to let the bill be considered under the five-minute rule, paragraph by paragraph, as it would be considered in the Committee of the Whole, it seems to me with that agreement it can be completed to-morrow. And it is so important a bill that while I have no doubt he is outside of it himself, being the chairman of the committee that has reported it, yet I believe Members generally would like to have a little time for a short debate.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to considering it section by section under the five-minute rule, provided we can have some agreement as to when we will vote on the bill to-morrow afternoon. I am willing to agree to that if we can vote on the bill at 4.30 or 5 o'clock p. m.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not think the gentleman ought to limit the time. I think there is no disposition to delay it. On a bill like this there is usually debate and amendment.

Mr. WEBB. My only wish in getting the bill through early is to aid early adjournment. I think if we can get it through we will adjourn at 5 o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. GILLETT. I understand the Senate will not pass it this session.

Mr. WEBB. It is for us to get through with it, and let them consider it in December. I would not want to hold it over here Friday and Saturday. We have got conference reports to come in.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think there is any disposition to delay it, not on my part, anyway, and yet it is so important a bill that I think it ought to be considered under the five-minute rule, paragraph by paragraph.

Mr. WEBB. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that, because we are going to adjourn now, and to-morrow every Member can offer amendments. It will kill a lot of time if we go over it section by section.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is not a Union Calendar bill. It makes a charge on the Treasury.

Mr. WEBB. I do not think it makes any charge on the Treasury.

Mr. STAFFORD. It makes a charge in the way of bonds, and the like. But there is no desire to delay the consideration of this bill.

Mr. GILLETT. If the gentleman does not agree to take it up by paragraph under the five-minute rule, anyone who gets the floor will have an hour, and they can debate it as long as you please, if amendments are offered. It seems to me it would expedite the consideration of the bill to take it up by paragraphs.

Mr. WEBB. I would like to get unanimous consent for general debate to-night, and then we can agree about the five-minute rule to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. GILLETT. What does the gentleman mean by general debate? Does he mean by general debate that after general debate is completed, if a man offers an amendment he will have an hour?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. And you do not mean to cut that off?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; I would——

Mr. GILLETT. What do you mean by it, then? Technically, there is not any such thing as general debate, as I understand it, on such a bill.

Mr. WEBB. I understand this, that everybody wants to get the bill passed, and nobody wants to speak an hour on an amendment. In good faith I do not think he will. I think if a gentleman has an amendment he will cover it in 5 or 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Why not accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]? That is the easiest way.

Mr. WEBB. I did not understand the gentleman suggested cutting out general debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman suggested, as the Chair understood it, that after this general debate the bill was to be taken up and read section by section, and adopted under the five-minute rule, as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CANNON. Debate it or amend it; yes. I do not care whether you have general debate or not.

Mr. GILLETT. You ought to have general debate to explain it.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I feel like my brethren on this side that some members of the committee ought to have time to explain the bill, and there should be some time allowed on the other side in general debate. But I have no objection to taking the bill up under the five-minute rule immediately after we have consumed an hour in general debate.

The SPEAKER. The whole request is that the general debate shall not exceed an hour, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB] and the other half by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD], and be confined to the bill; and after that the bill shall be taken up and read by sections and debated under the five-minute rule as it exists in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to file at any time before midnight the conference report on the urgent deficiency bill, H. R. 5949, and that that report and accompanying statement be printed in the RECORD and also in report form.

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, are there any additions to the bill as it left the House, since it went into conference?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is only the formal presentation for printing under the rule, but the statement can not be completed before the House is likely to adjourn.

Mr. MADDEN. What I want to find out is whether anything has been added to the bill since it went into conference.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; and no rights will be prejudiced, because the Members will have the same rights as if I presented the conference report now.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it a complete report?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a complete report, and on matters on which some discussion was had I have conferred with Members.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, asks unanimous consent that he be permitted to file the conference report on the bill H. R. 5949, the urgent deficiency bill, at any time between now and midnight, and that the report and statement be printed in the RECORD——

Mr. FITZGERALD. And in report form——

The SPEAKER. And also in report form. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair directs whoever has charge of that printing to attend to it.

COPIES OF THE WAR-REVENUE ACT.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 44,000 copies of the new revenue law, H. R. 4280, as approved, be printed for the use of the House, 6,480 copies to go to the document room, 35,520 copies to the folding room, and 2,000 copies to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I would like to know how far that apportionment will meet the demands of each Member of the House.

Mr. BARNHART. Eighty copies will go to each Member.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It will be a uniform distribution, will it? Each Member will be entitled to 80 copies?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes. The 6,480 copies will go to the document room. There are already large demands on the document room by correspondents for copies of the law. I understand from members of the Committee on Ways and Means that there is also a large number of demands pending before that committee. I will state to the House that we ought to have more copies; but we are now near the end of the session, and I do not know whether it will be possible to get a quorum of the Committee on Printing and put through a concurrent resolution and get it through the Senate, but under this action we can get some copies for our own use.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will say to the gentleman that I know it has been expected that a request would be made for 50,000 copies. It was felt during the conference that that number of copies would be required to meet the urgent demands of the Members. Why could not 10,000 copies be added to the 44,000?

Mr. BARNHART. Because the House is authorized to print only $500 worth of documents without the concurrence of the Senate. If we should go above that amount, we would have to get the concurrence of the Senate.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Has the gentleman any reason to believe he could not get the concurrence of the Senate? I believe he could.

Mr. BARNHART. It is a risk. I think the Members of the House would prefer to have 80 copies at this time rather than none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, may I make this inquiry: Is there anything to prevent our passing this House resolution, and the gentleman also introducing a concurrent resolution providing for additional copies?

Mr. BARNHART. No; there would not be anything to prevent that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman realizes that there will be a tremendous demand upon Members for copies of this act?

Mr. BARNHART. Yes; there will be.

Mr. STAFFORD. I approve of the gentleman's desire to get as many copies as possible under the rules of the House.

Mr. BARNHART. I apprehend every Member of this House will have requests for at least a thousand copies.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is not the gentleman willing to pass this resolution, getting as many as can be obtained under the authority of the House, and then introduce a concurrent resolution providing for an additional number?

Mr. BARNHART. I think that would be entirely proper.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In support of the suggestion for an additional number I wish to say that the collector of internal revenue at Philadelphia has announced publicly that he can not be expected to furnish blanks, and that business men and others interested in this revenue law must take notice from the newspapers and from the passage of the law itself and be ready to comply with it. That is only one of hundreds of cities that will be similarly affected. In consequence of that sort of a notice, coming officially from a representative of the Government in a great city, business men will be compelled to send to Members of Congress for copies of this law in order to know how to make their returns. Forty-four thousand copies will be a mere drop in the bucket to the demand that is coming. I imagine there will be 44,000 business men in my city alone who will want copies of this law within the next month. Of course, it may be separately printed, and some copies may be printed at private expense; but the Members of Congress ought to be able to supply at least a reasonable demand for a law of such far-reaching consequences as this.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] asks unanimous consent to have printed 44,000 copies of the revenue bill, 6,480 to go to the document room, 35,520 to the folding room, and 2,000 to the Committee on Ways and Means. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, even if we print a less number of copies, can not the gentleman have it printed in large type?

Mr. BARNHART. That would increase the size of the document and decrease the number of copies.

Mr. CANNON. I know it would; but if it is printed in the ordinary document type, can it not be double leaded? It is almost impossible for the nonprofessional man to read this fine print.

Mr. BARNHART. I appreciate that, but it is proposed to print it in bill form, consisting of 48 pages, and that is the type in which it will be printed.

Mr. CANNON. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that the gentleman was going to have it printed in document form.

Mr. BARNHART. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means suggests that we have it printed in this form.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARNHART. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. When will this document be ready for distribution?

Mr. BARNHART. They have the forms on the press now, and it can be rushed out, but I could not say just how soon.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Does the gentleman think it will be before the adjournment of this session?

Mr. CANNON. I should think so.

Mr. BARNHART. I apprehend so, although there is now tremendously heavy demand on the Government Printing Office for rush orders.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many more copies could be printed if they were printed in document form?

Mr. BARNHART. In the form of a pamphlet?

Mr. STAFFORD. In the regular document form. For instance, suppose we send to the document room now for a copy of the last income-tax law, the act of September 8, 1916, we get it in document form. How many copies would be available to Members if printed in that form?

Mr. BARNHART. It would be impossible to say without an estimate from the Printer. There would be a decrease in the number of pages and in the size of the type, but the reduction in size of the page would have to be reckoned in estimating. I could not tell what it would be or cost without an estimate from the Printer.

Mr. MADDEN. The bill size makes it much easier to find out what its provisions are.

Mr. BARNHART. The gentleman from Illinois prefers the bill type?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BARNHART. I think it more convenient.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. BARNHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that 110,000 copies of the bill H. R. 5723, known, I believe, as the war-risk insurance bill, be printed for the use of the House and distributed through the folding room. That, Mr. Speaker, will give to each Member 240 copies.

Mr. GILLETT. But that bill has not passed.

Mr. BARNHART. No; neither has the revenue bill been signed, but I ask to print it after it is perfected.

Mr. STAFFORD. The revenue bill is not a law yet.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to print 110,000 copies of the bill known as the soldiers' life insurance bill, which shall go to the folding room.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman one question. I have received several requests for copies of the revenue bill, and may I ask the gentleman when they will be ready?

Mr. BARNHART. I can not tell, except that I had a conversation with the Public Printer a few minutes ago, and he said that they had the forms all ready and could get them out at a very early date, whatever that may mean.

Mr. FARR. They expect to have the laws in the document room on Saturday.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, do I understand the gentleman to request the printing of the war-insurance bill in the form that it passed the House?

Mr. BARNHART. No; in the form that it will be when enacted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana that 110,000 copies of the soldiers' life insurance bill in the form when signed by the President be printed and go to the folding room?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech delivered by our distinguished fellow Member, Dr. FESS, of Ohio, on September 27 last, on the Wilbur Wright Field at Dayton, Ohio, on the occasion of the dedication of the clubhouse, on the subject of the part that aviation is expected to play in this war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an address by Dr. FESS on aviation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on common sense and war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, October 4, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for examination and classification of lands for homesteads required by the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year 1918 (H. SENATE.

THURSDAY, October 4, 1917.

(Legislative day of Tuesday, October 2, 1917.)

The Senate reassembled at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

JOSEPH S. M'COY.

Mr. SMOOT. Out of order, I submit a Senate resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 140) was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Joseph S. McCoy, for extra services as expert actuary and statistician rendered to the Senate Committee on Finance during the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, $1,600.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

Mr. KENDRICK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2493) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 146) thereon.

WITHDRAWAL OF COMMUNICATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On Monday the Chair inadvertently laid before the Senate a communication from W. E. D. Stokes, which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The Chair had no intention of laying that communication before the Senate. It is one that the Chair believes the Chair ought not to have laid before the Senate. The Chair now asks unanimous consent to withdraw the communication and have it considered as never having been referred. Is there any objection? [After a pause.] The Chair withdraws it.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Curtis	Kendrick	Pittman	Swanson
Fernald	McNary	Poindexter	Warren
Hale	Martin	Robinson	Williams

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I will let this announcement stand for the present.

Mr. JAMES. I wish to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] by reason of illness in his family. I ask that this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of illness, and to state that he is paired with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Twenty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. JONES of New Mexico, Mr. KENYON, Mr. MCCUMBER, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. STONE, Mr. SUTHERLAND, and Mr. VARDAMAN answered to their names when called.

Mr. PITTMAN. I desire to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] are detained on official business.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. HUGHES] is absent by reason of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce that my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is absent on account of illness. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, Mr. KELLOGG, Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. KING, Mr. SHIELDS, Mr. KNOX, Mr. FALL, Mr. CULBERSON, and Mr. OVERMAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. KING. I wish to announce that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. HUSTING] is detained on official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. House bill 5723 is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi, in charge of the bill, that the committee amendment on page 31, line 15, which was passed over yesterday until to-day by consent be now taken up for consideration. [After a pause.] I am apprised that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] desires to address the Senate, and I will withhold the suggestion for the present.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest that we take up this amendment and get rid of it, and then the Senator from Utah can proceed.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Utah desires to proceed now, I understand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

JOSEPH S. M'COY.

Mr. SMOOT. Before beginning my remarks upon the pending bill, out of order I ask unanimous consent to submit a favorable report from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate on a Senate resolution, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 140) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed, to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Joseph S. McCoy for extra services as expert actuary and statistician rendered to the Senate Committee on Finance during the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, $1,600.

Mr. SMOOT. Last evening I introduced Senate joint resolution 103 for the same purpose. Since introducing that joint resolution, which was passed yesterday, the auditor has informed me that the amount of $1,600 can be paid from the fund for contingent expenses of the Senate without a joint resolution notwithstanding the provision in the law, section 1736 of the Revised Statutes. Therefore, the Senate having passed the Senate resolution, I move to reconsider the votes by which the Senate joint resolution 103 was ordered to a third reading and passed last evening.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the joint resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF WAR-REVENUE ACT.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which I report from the Committee on Printing to print additional copies of the war-revenue law. I do this at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 141) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed 41,000 additional copies of Public Act, No. —, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session, entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses," for the use of the Senate Folding Room.

PUBLIC-LAND ENTRIES.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In behalf of the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 5082) providing for an amendment to section 2293 of the Revised Statutes, allowing homestead and other public-land affidavits to be taken before the military commander of any person engaged in military or naval service of the United States, and I submit a report (No. 145) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. I will state that the bill simply provides that a soldier can make an affidavit before the commanding officer instead of having to go to the land district, which the law now requires.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am informed that it will not take any time of the Senate, but I give notice if it takes over 10 minutes I shall call for the regular order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It will not take any time, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the continuance of the present war with Germany, and until his discharge from service, any man serving in the armed forces of the United States, who, prior, to the beginning of his services was a settler, an applicant, or entryman under the land laws of the United States, or who has, prior to enlistment, filed a contest, with the view of exercising preference right of entry therefor, may make any affidavit required by law or regulation of the department, affecting such application, entry or contest, or necessary to the making of entry in the case of the successful termination of such contest awarding him preference right of entry before his commanding officer as provided in section 2293 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which affidavits shall be as binding in law and with like penalties as if taken before the Register of the United States Land Office.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5723) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War-Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in discussing the pending bill, I wish to state that, as to Article II and Article III of the bill, Article II being the provision for family allowances and Article III for compensation or, in other words, a pension for certain soldiers and sailors in the Army and Navy of the United States, I most heartily approve of the principle. I think that legislation of this kind should have been enacted many years ago, but I also think, Mr. President, that there should be something said at this time in relation to the cost to the Government that the passage of this bill will entail, particularly so if Article IV of the bill is agreed to as reported to the Senate. I will say, so far as I am concerned, that if the compensation provided in Article III is not sufficient, or if the Senate shall deem it too small an allowance, I should very much prefer to increase the family allowance or compensation to voting for Article IV, which is known as the insurance provision.

There is a new bureau proposed to be created in the Treasury Department, to be known as the division of marine and seamen's insurance and a division of military and naval insurance in charge of a commissioner of marine and seamen's insurance and a commissioner of military and naval insurance, respectively.

In section 14 of the bill authority is given to employ an unlimited number of experts, as well as other employees, and yet there is only provision made for the payment of the expenses of this bureau for the coming fiscal year to the amount of $100,000. No one will doubt for a moment that that amount is insufficient. We have established the Federal Trade Commission and other commissions within the last few years; we have established bureaus in the various departments; and in the initial appropriations which have been made for those commissions and bureaus there is scarcely one of the commissions which has not cost two, three, four, or five times the amount appropriated in the bill creating them. When the Senate stops and thinks of the immense amount of work which will be entailed upon this bureau, if Article IV is put into effect, every one will at once realize that the amount of $100,000 is a mere bagatelle.

In section 18 there is provided an appropriation of $141,000,000. That sum is to be known as the military and naval family allowance appropriation, and is to be for the payment of the family allowances provided in Article II of this bill.

Mr. President, I ask Senators to turn to Article II, and observe the rate therein provided in class A and in class B. This clause is found near the bottom of page 15, and is as follows:

Subject to the conditions, limitations, and exceptions hereinabove and hereinafter specified, the family allowance payable per month shall be as follows:
Class A—

And it is compulsory on the part of the soldier to pay at least $15 of his monthly compensation in order that this family allowance shall be given to those who are named in class A—

Class A. In the case of a man, to his wife (including a former wife divorced) and to his child or children:
(a) If there be a wife, but no child, $15.
(b) If there be a wife and one child, $25.
(c) If there be a wife and two children, $32.50, with $5 per month additional for each additional child.
(d) If there be no wife, but one child, $5.
(e) If there be no wife, but two children, $12.50.
(f) If there be no wife, but three children, $20.
(g) If there be no wife, but four children, $30, with $5 per month additional for each additional child.

Then, in class B, under which it is voluntary on the part of the soldier to have the half of his pay retained in order that the beneficiaries under class B may receive the amount of allowance named, the provision is as follows:

Class B. In the case of a man or woman, to a grandchild, a parent, brother, or sister:
(a) If there be one parent, $10.
(b) If there be two parents, $20.
(c) For each grandchild, brother, sister, and additional parent, $5.
In the case of a woman, to a child or children:
(d) If there be one child, $5.
(e) If there be two children, $12.50.
(f) If there be three children, $20.
(g) If there be four children, $30, with $5 per month additional for each additional child.

Mr. President, it is provided that in no case shall there be a month allowance to the dependents in class B or to the relatives named in class A of more than $50 per month. I want Senators to understand that each soldier, if $15 of his salary is retained toward the support of the persons named in classes A and B, can not only name the wife as the beneficiary, who would get $25 per month and from five to ten dollars additional for each child, according to number, but if he has a brother or a sister or a parent or a grandchild, each one can be added to the allowance to the wife; and so if there be one, two, three, or whatever number of children he may have, but in the combination there could be only $50 paid by the Government of the United States per month in any case.

I think it is fair to assume that the average monthly compensation or the family allowance under Article II will amount at least to $35 per month; in many cases the combination will be such that it will amount to $50; and I think in no case would the combination be less than $25. The sum of $35 per month means $420 per annum. We all know that provision has already been made, and that the next draft will fill our Army, so that there will be in the United States Army 2,033,000 soldiers and some 300,000 officers. So I think it is fair to state that at least a million of our soldiers will apply for assistance in the way of family allowances; and if that be the case, Mr. President, it will take $420,000,000 per annum to meet the family allowances provided in Article II of this bill. We have provided an appropriation of $141,000,000. That may be sufficient until the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, for the reason that the Army is not filled to its maximum number as yet, and for the further reason that three months of the fiscal year have passed, and the bill provides that payments shall not begin until November 1, 1917.

Section 19, on page 6, of the bill provides an appropriation "of $12,150,000, to be known as the military and naval compensation appropriation for the payment of the compensation, funeral expenses, services, and supplies, as provided by Article III."

No one, Mr. President, can state what the actual expense to the Government will be; but it does seem to me, after reading the monthly and weekly reports of casualties amongst the English and the French soldiers and after listening to reports of officers who have returned from the western front in Europe and who have given accounts of some of the great battles which have been fought in France, we can come near estimating, at least, what may be expected if our soldiers become involved in actual conflict in this terrible war, and no Senator doubts that they will become so involved.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I will state that I saw an article in a publication some days ago in which it was stated that the number of deaths growing out of the fighting in the European war up to that date, which was only a short time ago, had been only 11 in 1,000, and that the total number of wounded and deaths had been 56 in each thousand. According to that estimate, if it were to apply to our troops, what would be the amount of expenditure we would have to make?

Mr. SMOOT. Whatever paper made that statement made a statement that was absolutely contrary to the figures contained in the weekly and monthly reports made by England and France as to the casualties among their soldiers. Let me call attention to the latest reports of losses on the western front. Take the British loss alone for September. I read from a telegraphic report:

LONDON, September 29.

British casualties reported during the month of September total 104,598, divided as follows:
Officers killed or died of wounds, 636; men, 18,302.
Officers wounded or missing, 2,151; men, 83,509.

This is for the month of September.

The severity of the fighting——

Mr. WILLIAMS. And there are some 5,000,000 British troops under arms.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think there are 2,000,000 British troops in the trenches; and there is where the fighting takes place and the losses occur.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, the statement——

Mr. SMOOT. I trust the Senator will wait until I finish this. I desire to read the weekly report, and then I will yield to the Senator.

The severity of the fighting in which the British have been engaged during September is indicated not only by the total casualties of more than 104,000, but by comparison with the August figures, which were 59,811. Casualties in some of the late August fighting in Flanders are naturally included in the September total, but this may well be offset by late September casualties not reported in time to be covered in the figures announced to-day.

I will now read the weekly report, which is dated October 2:

The British casualties reported for the week ending to-day numbered 21,179, divided as follows:
Killed or died of wounds, officers, 151; men, 3,773.
Wounded or missing, officers, 571; men, 16,724.

Mr. President, if the reports which have come to me from Canadian officers and also from French officers are true, many of the men reported missing have been killed. So, Mr. President, it seems to me——

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I should like to state with reference to the statement to which I have referred that it included only the killed and wounded. As the Senator will observe, in the statement which he has read the missing are included, and they aggregate always, I think, a larger number than either the killed or the wounded; and the fact is commented upon that while the number given was apparently a small percentage, yet it was greater than the casualties which had occurred in any other war in the history of the world. So it seems to me that our losses are not going to be so great as we anticipate.

Mr. SMOOT. I think, Mr. President, that our losses are going to be greater than we anticipate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an interruption?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to say that the number of casualties which the Senator has read includes not only the desperately wounded, the severely wounded, but the slightly wounded.

Mr. SMOOT. Why, nobody has doubts that but even the slightly wounded come under the provisions of this bill. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But if the Senator will pardon me and let me finish the statement, if he yields to me at all——

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In this war a larger proportion of men slightly wounded have been completely rehabilitated than in any war at all prior to this time. The only war that even resembled it was the Russian and the Japanese War. Most of the men who are slightly wounded, with the improved surgical science now, go back to the colors within a few months, perfectly all right.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I would to God that all the predictions made by the two Senators would result as they think they will; but we must understand that when we enter the war with our allies we will find our soldiers on the offensive. We will have to assist in driving the German Army from the positions it occupies to-day; and every army attacking loses more men in proportion than if it were on the defensive.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. If we are going to win this war other than by starving Germany into submission, which some people think can be done, we have got to put in the trenches in Europe not 500,000 or 1,000,000 men but at least 2,000,000 men.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wanted simply to correct some of the errors with respect to losses. These late losses on the British front are very much less than the average losses during all of the fighting period of the summer months. They range, commencing with April, during the summer months, all the way from 135,000 to 145,000 on all of the British fronts alone, without reference to the French or any other front.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I heard a Canadian officer make the statement that in driving the German forces 4 miles during the Battle of the Somme there were 975,000 men put out of commission—500,000 and a little over of British men and four hundred and some odd thousand of French men. He told me that he was in the battle from the day it started until the drive of the 4 miles was completed. We have no child's play before us in defeating Germany, and I am not discussing the question as to the percentage of our soldiers that will be killed. All that I am doing is to call attention to the fact that in passing this legislation we want to do it with our eyes open. As far as Articles II and III are concerned, I am ready to support the allowances and compensations provided in them, and, if necessary, provide even greater amounts, because no Senator believes more strongly than I do that the Government of the United States ought to take care of its soldiers and their families.

Now, Mr. President, suppose it does cost billions of dollars—and the passage of this bill will cost the Government billions of dollars—we ought to see that the provisions of the bill are such that there will be no discriminations between soldiers and officers, rich and poor, and the money appropriated used to the best advantage. All ought to stand upon the same footing. If the compensation to the families or relatives provided in this bill in case of death is paid to but 200,000 families, and the average monthly compensation in case of death be $50 per month, we can understand what this part of the bill will cost. The bill provides a maximum compensation of $75, but I take it for granted that there will be an average compensation for death of a soldier of $50 per month; and that would amount to $600 each per year, or a total of $120,000,000 per annum. If there are 300,000 soldiers wounded during the whole of the war, their average compensation under the bill no doubt will be $55 per month. The Senators will notice that there is $5 difference between the compensation for death and the compensation for disability. That would be $660 per annum. For 300,000 soldiers the amount would be $318,000,000, or a total under the compensation article of $438,000,000 per annum.

Now, these are not all of the allowances. I think the additional allowances granted in the bill are just as important, and I could defend them even with greater pleasure than I could the allowance of compensation and family allowances.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield to the Senator just as soon as I finish this particular matter.

On page 23 of the bill you will find that, notwithstanding the maximum allowance is $75 in case of disability, there is also a provision made that where the soldier is so helpless as to be in constant need of a nurse or attendant, an additional sum shall be paid, not exceeding $20 per month. Then, again, on page 24, it is provided:

In addition to the compensation above provided, the injured person shall be furnished by the United States such reasonable governmental medical, surgical, and hospital services and with such supplies, including artificial limbs, trusses, and similar appliances, as the director may determine to be useful and reasonably necessary.

Again, on page 26, in section 305, it is provided:

That in cases of dismemberment, of injuries to sight or hearing, and of other injuries commonly causing permanent disability, the injured person shall follow such course or courses of rehabilitation, reeducation, and vocational training as the United States may provide or procure to be provided. Should such course prevent the injured person from following a substantially gainful occupation while taking same, a form of enlistment may be required which shall bring the injured person into the military or naval service.

A splendid provision; and, Mr. President, after this bill passes, with the above provision in it, I expect to see additional legislation by Congress providing for the erection and maintenance in different parts of the country of institutions for the rehabilitation, the reeducation, and the vocational training of all such soldiers as are named in this section.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, does not the Senator approve of that?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, certainly. As I said before, I commend it. I think it is a splendid provision.

Mr. VARDAMAN. What is the purpose of the Senator's opposition, then?

Mr. SMOOT. I have no opposition to it. The purpose for which I am speaking now is to call the attention of the Senate to the amount that must be hereafter appropriated to meet the provisions of this bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does not the Senator think there is a sufficiently large appropriation provided in the bill to carry out its purpose until the Congress meets again in December?

Mr. SMOOT. I doubt it, Mr. President. But what I want to call the attention of the Senate to is this: Under Title II and under Title III of this bill, providing the amounts for family allowance and compensation, I believe ought to be considered in connection with Title IV of the bill, known as the insurance provision. As I said before, if Title II and Title III do not grant sufficient relief to our soldiers and sailors I am willing to increase it rather than to force the Government into the insurance business as we are doing, and particularly when nobody can tell what the result will be.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption I want to say just at this point that this bill appeals to me—to my sense of justice and squares absolutely with my idea of the eternal fitness of things. In truth I find it difficult to command language with which to express my unconditional and absolute approval of its purposes. One of the most horrible and disturbing facts connected with this war is the suffering of the dependent fathers, mothers, wives, and children, who would feel so keenly the chilling and harrowing deprivations incident thereto. I have letters by the thousand calling my attention to this fact—letters from wives, pleading for their little ones, aged mothers and fathers asking for the support and protecting care of their sons who have been called to the colors. It is the one act of Congress in all the great mass of war legislation which recognized the human being, the immortal soul, the anguish, and human suffering, as being of more concern and more importance to the Congress and the people of the country than mere dollars and cents. We know that it is going to be costly. But who cares for the cost when hungry children are crying, when the aged parents, the loving wives are suffering for the necessaries of life? The American people can afford to pay it. They will cheerfully bear any expense that may be necessary in order to keep the wolf of want from the doors of the families of the men who are commanded to give their lives in defense of the Nation's flag upon the blood-soaked soil of France. The man who is fighting his country's battles will make a better soldier if he knows that the Government for which he is fighting is providing the loved ones at home with the essential things of life. Not only will it strengthen the strong arm and nerve the heart of the soldier but it will make a better citizen, a better man, a better woman of the children who are to receive this munificent protection at the hands of their Government.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has only stated what I have already stated, but in a better way than I did. I approve of all that he says.

I am in sympathy with the provisions of this bill as far as Articles II and III—family allowances and compensation—are concerned; and I think there is where the provision ought to be made for whatever assistance we intend to extend to the soldier or the beneficiaries of the soldier who is disabled or loses his life in the war.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SMOOT. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator whether this legislation is intended to supersede and take the place of the general pension legislation to which the Government has been committed for many years?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it does not interfere with any of the present pension laws; but the supposed object of the legislation is to prevent any future pensions being granted to soldiers and sailors of the Army and the Navy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the way in which we do that is to deprive the soldier who resorts to pensions from the compensation and other benefits of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Right on that point I want the Senator's judgment. A soldier must be wounded in battle before he can get any relief under this law, must he not?

Mr. POMERENE. No.

Mr. SMOOT. Before he can get any compensation under the law. He can get a family allowance under the law whether he is wounded or not.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And for the first time in the history of the country that is true under this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Now, suppose a soldier enters the service. Presumably he must be sound in health and bodily vigor or he could not get in. As the result of his exposure he contracts a slow and yet an insidious disease. As a result of exposure he may have pneumonia. He may gradually become afflicted with tuberculosis. Where will that soldier get relief?

Mr. SMOOT. Under the bill if he dies within five years he falls within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not talking about him. If he dies, he is beyond relief. You can not reach him. I want to know where the relief can be found for those that were dependent upon that soldier and gave him to the Union.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that I have no doubt whatever that if this bill passes just as it has been reported to the Senate, without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i," we are going to have pensions granted to the soldiers and sailors of the present war.

Mr. KING. On top of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then the whole matter will be taken up by Congress, as it has the power to do, and justice will be done to the deserving men who have given their lives to the country and to their dependent relatives. I suppose, of course, that is our power and will be our privilege and our duty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not lose sight of this fact, however: Even if Congress should, in spite of this legislation, resort again to the old pension system, the man who permits Congress to give him a gratuity will receive none of these benefits. The bill provides for that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is, the soldier for whom Congress passes a private pension bill will be deprived of these benefits?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am not concerned about that. I just want to emphasize one phase of it.

During my long service in both Houses of Congress I have had thousands of soldiers in dire distress come to me for relief. I have had soldiers come to me who formed a compact on the field of battle that they never would burden their Government by asking for a pension or any other form of relief; and yet, through the vicissitudes of life, they have become dependent, and with their hearts breaking they have lived up to the agreement they made with their associates. Now, I say that I do not care a rap about any legislation here that will make complainers out of soldiers. I do not want to reward the constant complainer, but I do want the liberty and the privilege of caring for the brave man who not only bears the burdens of his country but bears his own physical distresses with courage and with fortitude. Any legislation that in any way compromises that right I disapprove, and any attempt to build up a stone wall here by which men shall be deprived of the right to apply for pensions in the future, if their necessities require it, does not meet with my approval.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator that Article III of the bill is designated compensation. It is nothing more nor less than a pension, but our Democratic friends shied at the word "pension."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Why? It is an honorable term.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly; but they substituted for it the word "compensation." I feel just as sure as I live that there will be special pension legislation for the soldiers and widows of the present war notwithstanding the rate of family allowance or compensation provided for in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will permit me to say a word, I do not like the word "compensation." When a man receives that, he is practically debarred from asking for anything else, no matter what his necessities and his condition may be. When he receives a pension from the Government he may still, if the necessities require, ask for more, and he should have it. I do all honor to Senators on the other side of the Chamber, many of them Confederates in the War of the Rebellion, who sat with me upon the Committee on Pensions and who upheld our hands in every endeavor to recognize appropriately the soldiers of the Union. I do not like this idea, surreptitiously or otherwise, of taking out of the legislation of our country the word "pension." It is an honorable word, and the roll is a roll of honor.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, Mr. President, I will proceed.

Mr. POMERENE rose.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Ohio—I should have done it before.

Mr. POMERENE. I simply want in partial answer to what the Senator from Michigan stated to say that I do not imagine this Congress is going to tie any succeeding Congress down, and if the situation is such in future that it is necessary to give additional relief it will be given from time to time.

But what I rose a moment ago to ask the Senator from Utah is this: He has given some figures here which are startling in their character as to amount that this is going to cost the Government. I desire to say preliminarily that I think we are all anxious to do the right thing here, no matter what that cost is, but as I understood the Senator his amounts were based upon an assumption that in the case of all the deaths there would be many dependents within the definition of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. They are all allowed a family allowance, providing the soldier so designates.

Mr. POMERENE. They are, provided there are dependents.

Mr. SMOOT. In class A they do not have to be dependents at all. In class B they must be dependents.

Mr. POMERENE. But the point I wish to make is that many of the men who are now in the service or will go into the service hereafter will probably not have many dependents within the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. He would have a dependent if he had a brother or sister or widowed mother. I do not see how many can escape having dependents.

Mr. POMERENE. That is, if they are dependents within the meaning of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. If they are dependents within the meaning of the act, as far as class B is concerned, that is true; but I want to say to the Senator that past experience has shown that there have been very few of them who do not have dependents. Particularly that is the case when the cost of living is so high as it is to-day.

Mr. GERRY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. GERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah if he means that under class A the soldier's family does not have to be dependent?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly it does have to be dependent.

Mr. GERRY. That was my understanding of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. May I ask the Senator a question? Has he any data showing the number of enlisted men who have dependents as defined here?

Mr. SMOOT. No. That information is in the possession of no one to-day. Of course, that will develop hereafter, and I suppose it is developing each day in the department as new men enter the Army.

Referring to section 7, on page 20 of the bill, there is an appropriation made of $23,000,000 to be known as a military and naval insurance appropriation. Upon the same basis of deaths as stated by me respecting the question of compensation, namely, 200,000 during the whole period of the war, and there is an average insurance of $5,000—not what is the limit of the bill as reported to the Senate, namely, $7,500—but if the average is $5,000—and there is going to be an endeavor on the part of the Senate to increase that $7,500 to $10,000—with $5,000 only, it would mean a payment by the Government of the United States for deaths alone of $1,000,000,000. Not only that, if there are only a million men carrying insurance of $5,000 each, there in an insurance obligation on the part of the Government of the United States of $5,000,000,000. If the amount is $10,000 and half of them take the amount without any of the others taking any part of insurance whatever, it will be $10,000,000,000.

The insurance article is the undefendable part of the bill. Assistance can be rendered in a much more satisfactory way. Therefore, Mr. President, I have prepared amendments that I intend to offer to the bill to obviate at least a part of the unsatisfactory conditions which will arise if Article IV, as reported to the Senate, is adopted.

Do Senators know that $5,000,000,000 of insurance liability is greater than is carried by the three greatest insurance companies in the world? As far as I am concerned, I would much prefer, if the allowances and compensation are not sufficient, to give each soldier a paid-up insurance policy of a couple of thousand dollars. Then we would know approximately what it is going to cost. There could be some justification for such action, particularly if it were acknowledged that the allowances and compensation provided for in the bill are not sufficient.

Mr. President, there is no need for me to call attention to the amount of the allotment either as family allowance or for compensation, because I take it for granted every Senator is familiar with that part of the bill. So I shall hasten on.

I shall now, because I may not have time later in the day, discuss some of the amendments that I intend to offer to the bill. I want to tell the Senate just what they will cost the Government of the United States, as they refer to the veterans of the Civil and Spanish Wars, their widows and dependent children. We have the record of all in the Pension Office and we know just how many of them there are. We know just what the increases will amount to under my amendments, and we can tell exactly what all the amendments that I propose to offer will cost in dollars and cents.

I can not think that the Senate of the United States is going to say to the widows of the Civil War that we shall provide for the widows of the present war to an amount two or three times greater than we are now granting them. I can not believe that the Senate is going to say to a veteran of the Civil War, helplessly bedridden, requiring constant attention, directly due to his wounds or disease in the line of service, that he shall not have the same as the soldier of the present war will receive.

I will offer an amendment as follows:

SEC. 315. That all soldiers, sailors, and marines who are, or who may hereafter become, so totally and permanently helpless from wounds or injuries received or disease contracted in the service and line of duty as to require the regular personal aid and attendance of another person, shall be entitled to receive a pension at the rate of $100 per month from the date of the passage of this act or of the certificate of the examining surgeon or board of surgeons showing such degree of disability made subsequent to the passage of this act.

It is the same class of soldiers that is provided for in this bill. For the same disability under the existing law they receive $72 and we are providing $100 in the pending bill.

I know that many of the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber are going to claim now is not the time to pass such legislation and that it should not be placed in the pending bill. They will say, "Bring in a bill at the next session of Congress, offer these proposed amendments to existing pension laws, and we will vote for them." I want Senators to know that I am not offering amendments to increase a pension one cent unless the soldier has received wounds and disabilities in line of duty.

I did have an idea of offering an amendment increasing the pension of soldiers and sailors of the Spanish War and of the Civil War to $30 per month in all cases where a small amount was at present being received, but I am not going to do so. However, I am going to have Congress act on legislation of this character at the next session of Congress. There may be some excuse then for saying that that kind of legislation is not germane to this bill.

Mr. KING. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. KING. In view of the enormous expenses which this gigantic conflict imposes upon the country and the great burdens that we are called upon to meet in order to properly prosecute the war, why did not the committee in framing the bill try to adjust the compensation allowed to sailors and soldiers to the same lines as those which prevail with respect to soldiers and sailors of the Civil and Spanish-American Wars? In other words, why did they not adopt the same schedules so nearly as they might that were applicable in the legislation governing the cases just referred to?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague that that was discussed in the committee for a number of days. The reason given was that to-day the cost of living is a hundred and sometimes two hundred per cent more than at the time of the passage of the legislation that granted pensions to the Civil War veterans and their widows.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will pardon me, there is another reason. These men who get these allowances pay something themselves in the shape of allotments. The pensions that exist now are purely gratuities.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Senator's statement there would be certainly a misunderstanding in the mind of Senators. The family allowances and compensations are in addition to the $15 that the Government retains from the pay of the soldier. The Government does not give that $15; the Government takes it from the pay of the soldier. All the family allowances and all the compensation provided in Article II and Article III of the bill are in addition to what is taken from the pay of the soldier. The compensation, as I said before, is nothing more nor less than a pension.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the Senator must admit the fact that the man is helping himself is a reason for being more generous with him than if he was not helping himself.

Mr. SMOOT. I deny the statement to be a fact. There is not a widow of the Civil War or the Spanish War in the United States to-day who is not doing all that her strength will allow to earn enough to keep her body and soul together and clothe and feed her children. The only difference is that when she earns it the Government does not retain a part of it, but she spends it for herself and for her children all the same. Now, the Government says to the soldier, "We will deduct monthly from your pay $15; we will then hand it to your family."

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. As the Senator from Mississippi has suggested, the soldier himself pays $15, or a certain amount of this sum; but when comparison is made with what was done for the soldiers of the Civil War, the Senator ought to remember that the Government is now paying the soldier $23 a month more than the soldier of the Civil War received, and is simply taking a proportion of the additional payment that is made to the soldier and turning it over to his dependents.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is true, except as to the Senator's figures. The compensation is $20 more instead of $23 more. We paid them then $13, and we pay them now $33.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is $33 while in France.

Mr. SMOOT. The compensation is $33 while performing foreign service.

Mr. President, we know that the amendment which I have just read would cost the Government of the United States $132,665.04 per annum. There are 397 soldiers who are totally and permanently helpless from wounds and injuries received or disease contracted in the service and in the line of duty who are on the pension rolls to-day. An increase from $72 to $100 means an increase of $28 per month, and makes a total of $132,665.04.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to his colleague?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. That is, assuming that the same number who are now helpless will so continue, and that there will be no increase?

Mr. SMOOT. There can not be any increase, Mr. President, of which I can conceive.

Mr. KING. I would assume that the diseases from which some of them suffer might in a progressive form bring about total incapacity, whereas now they are only partially incapacitated.

Mr. SMOOT. My colleague must understand that it is now over 50 years since the Civil War, and it is a difficult proposition to prove service origin in the case of any kind of a disease alleged to have originated during the Civil War. That is why there are so many special pension acts passed by Congress.

Mr. KING. I had in mind the Spanish-American War, as well as the Civil War.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, there are some increases, but I will say to the Senator that there will be more deaths than there will be increases.

Mr. President, in the next amendment which I shall propose, Senators will notice, if they have the amendment on their desks, that I have made a change in the amounts provided. The amendment will read as follows:

SEC. 316. That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension for widows, minor children under the age of 16 years, and helpless minors as defined by existing laws, of an officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who served in the Civil War, the War with Spain, or Philippine insurrection, now on the roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll because of the death of the husband or father as the result of wound or injury received or disease contracted in the service and line of duty, and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided, shall be as follows:

(a) For widow alone, $25.
(b) For a widow and one child, $35.
(c) For a widow and two children, $47.50, with $5 for each additional child up to two.
(d) If there be no widow, then for one child, $20.
(e) For two children, $35.
(f) For three children, $40, and $5 for each additional child up to two.

Mr. NORRIS. Why does the Senator limit the number of children to two?

Mr. SMOOT. The provision is $5 for each additional child up to two.

Mr. NORRIS. But suppose the soldier had three children?

Mr. SMOOT. Then it would be $45, and if he had four children it would be $50.

Mr. NORRIS. The language says, "each additional child up to two."

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment limits it to five children. I am following exactly the wording of the pending bill, so as to put them precisely on the same parallel.

Mr. NORRIS. I know the Senator is doing so; but I have wondered why such a limitation should be placed in any law.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that one reason why it was done was that if there be a widow and five children they will get $50 a month, and under the provision $50 is the total sum allowed. I continue the reading of my amendment:

And the rate of pension for a dependent mother of a soldier, sailor, or marine who served in the Civil War, the War with Spain, or Philippine insurrection now on the roll, or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll, and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided, shall be $20 per month: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall be administered, executed, and enforced by the Commissioner of Pensions.

That is in the exact language of the section which I previously read. I desire the administration of both sections to be under the Commissioner of Pensions, rather than in the new bureau proposed to be created by this bill in the Treasury Department.

Mr. President, this is the result as to the cost to the Government of the provisions of the amendment: The number of Civil War widows, including dependent minor children, is 48,544; the annual cost will be $7,260,828. The number of Spanish-American War widows, including minor children and dependents, is 4,141; the annual cost will be $871,176. The number of dependent mothers is 3,945; the annual cost will be $378,720; or a total under this amendment of $8,510,724. This is proposed in order that all of the widows of the Civil War and of the Spanish-American War shall be put upon the same basis as a widow alone is placed as a result of the present war.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Senator leaves the amendment on which he is speaking, which applies only to widows who became widows on account of the death of their husbands, the cause of death having originated in some way in the service——

Mr. SMOOT. In the line of service.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. It does not apply to those widows,

Mr. SMOOT. It does not apply to all widows of soldiers of the Civil War who are now drawing pensions of $20 a month and widows of soldiers of the Spanish-American War who are now drawing pensions of $12 a month.

Mr. NORRIS. As I understand from the figures which the Senator has given as to the number of widows, those are widows who became such on account of the death of their husbands having been caused by service origin.

Mr. SMOOT. Because of their having resulted from service origin.

My next amendment goes further than the one which I have previously read. It provides:

SEC. 316. That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension for a widow of an officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who served in the Civil War, the War with Spain, or Philippine insurrection, now on the pension roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll, and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided, shall be $25 per month——

Mr. NORRIS. That applies to all of them?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes. The amendment continues:

and nothing herein shall be construed to affect the additional allowance provided by existing pension laws on account of a helpless child or child under 16 years of age: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall be administered, executed, and enforced by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. President, under that provision the cost to the United States will be $3,558,636; or, in other words, the number of Civil War widows is 48,544, with a $5 increase, from $20 to $25 per month, which is $60 per annum, or for the widows of the Civil War $2,912,640. The number of Spanish-American War widows is 4,141, and with an increase of $156 each per annum the total increase would be $645,996.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask a question in order to make a suggestion to the Senator, and if it is not convenient for him to answer it or discuss it now he can do so at some other time. His amendments bring the idea prominently before anyone considering this subject. The pending bill—which, as the Senator has said, in reality provides a system of pensioning—proposes to create a new bureau in the Treasury Department. The amendments of the Senator from Utah provide that certain increases shall be made in existing pensions, and that the provisions of the amendments shall be administered by the Pension Bureau. Did the committee take into consideration the question of having all this business handled by one bureau? If we have a bureau in the Treasury Department that is to administer this business, would it not be economy to abolish the Pension Bureau? And did the committee consider the advisability, instead of creating a new bureau, of putting it all under the Bureau of Pensions, which is already in operation?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator, I will state that the committee did discuss the question as to whether it was feasible to have the Pension Bureau administer the provisions of this bill. The committee decided that that was not the best thing to do. The question came up as to the advisability of having two bureaus for the purpose of administering pension laws. I will say to the Senator that, in my opinion, Congress at some time in the future will see to it that only one bureau shall be authorized to take care of this character of business. After the war closes, the family allowance part of the bill will be entirely eliminated. The compensation part of the bill, which is the pension part of the bill, can be handled just as well, and better handled, by the present Pension Bureau than by any new bureau of the Government. The bureau which will be built up under the provisions of this bill will be a much larger one than is the Pension Bureau to-day.

Mr. NORRIS. I concede that. Now, let me suggest to the Senator that, if we pass this bill, we shall have two bureaus of the Government doing the same line of work, and that will be so, even though we should provide that that part of the bill which the Senator says will cease to be operative when the war is over, shall be administered by the new bureau in the Treasury Department. Would it not be economy to have the other part of it administered now by the Pension Bureau, which is, as I understand, fully equipped to meet the situation? If we have in the future two bureaus doing the same character of business, one of them looking after pension matters growing out of one war and the other looking after pension matters growing out of different wars, will there not be a likelihood, in addition to the enormous extra expense of having two systems, of one bureau running along one line and another one along another line, so that they will not be performing their functions in the same way, and perhaps not granting pensions or allowances even in the same degree under the same condition of circumstances.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if I were running the Government and running it upon business principles, I would have the payment of the compensation provided for in this bill and the family-allowance provision administered by the War Department and by the Navy Department, as has been done under the compensation law of 1916. No complaint has ever been offered as to the administration of that law; no one has ever said that it was not administered fairly and thoroughly. The officials of the War Department know the soldiers, where they are, and the work they are doing, and in many cases in close touch with their families; the officials of the Navy Department know where the sailors are, and what they are doing; they have all the officers under their command and charge, and this whole matter could have been administered by the War Department and the Navy Department by the employment of not one-third of the number of employees who will be required in the new bureau.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator ever estimated how many new employees there will be?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is absolutely impossible to do that. If the insurance provisions of the bill are retained in it, with payments to be made weekly or monthly, how many employees we are going to have it is impossible to say. I will tell the Senator now, however, that it will be one of the largest bureaus in Washington and will have more employees than have many of the departments of the Government to-day.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator; I think he is right.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to his colleague?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KING. Representative RICHARD WAYNE PARKER, in the other House, in filing the minority views, reviews this bill with a great deal of learning and, to my mind, in a very fair and just manner. He suggests that the establishment of a new bureau is unnecessary and unwise, and indulges in some of the criticisms which, I understand, my colleague has submitted, and, I think, in justice, too, to the Senate. Is it too late, permit me to inquire of the Senator, to frame this bill so as to meet the suggestions just made or to meet the criticisms offered by Mr. PARKER? Were those criticisms considered in the House, and were they considered by the committee of the Senate which has had this bill under consideration?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague that it is not too late, but we have not enough votes to do it; and, not only that, but we can not get Senators to listen to the discussion of this bill so that they will understand why such changes ought to be made. I do not expect, Mr. President, that we shall be able to make very many changes in this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I heard the question propounded by the Senator's colleague [Mr. KING]; I also heard the question propounded by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. Both seem to be laboring under the impression that this bill creates a new bureau. This bill does not do that; this bill amends an act which has already created the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance. We had our choice as to whether the work to be done under this bill should be done by the Bureau of Pensions or by the existing Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, and we thought that the existing Bureau of War-Risk Insurance could do it better. Therefore, we made two divisions in that bureau, one division to take care of the work which they are now doing and the other division to take care of the new work.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if my colleague will yield, and the Senator from Mississippi will permit me, the War Risk Insurance Bureau, to which the Senator has just referred, has jurisdiction of marine insurance, rather than of insuring the lives and protecting the dependents of soldiers.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that, but, nevertheless, that bureau is in existence and the Pension Bureau is in existence, and we could have made a new division in either bureau. We thought, however, that, taking it all in all, this business was more nearly cognate to insurance business than it was to pension business. The only part of this measure that is cognate to the pension business is the compensation part. The Senators must remember that when the war closes the allowance and allotment business all stops. Then, what will we have left? The compensation and insurance features. Which one of the two will require the most work? Undoubtedly, the insurance feature will. Perhaps after the war is over the compensation feature of this bill may be turned over to the Pension Bureau; but we did not want to turn over part of this work now to one bureau and part to another.

There was another reason for it: We wanted to keep, so far as we could, in the hands of the Army and the Navy, or the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, this work, because they collect the allotments, and to a very great extent that is done under this bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to proceed——

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator just permit me to make a suggestion to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. While it is true that we do not create a new bureau, we create new divisions in the bureau, and of course we expand the bureau away beyond imagination.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You would have had to do that with the present Pension Bureau if you had created there a new division of insurance.

Mr. NORRIS. Somewhat; but the head would have been the same, the outline would have been the same. But what I rose to suggest was that while this bureau that we are enlarging is already in existence, the law creating it provides that it shall cease operation and go out of business at the close of the war.

Mr. SMOOT. Not only that, Mr. President, but it was only for marine insurance. It amounts to very little. All the compensation that was paid to our soldiers' families when our Army was on the Mexican border was handled through the War Department without any additional cost. We did not furnish the War Department extra clerks of every class, experts, actuaries, and employees not otherwise specified, to make the distribution of such allowances.

I have two other amendments. In the first place, I am going to offer as a substitute for Article IV the following:

SEC. 400. That in order to give to every commissioned officer and enlisted man and to every member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) when employed in active service under the War Department or Navy Department greater protection for themselves and their dependents than is provided in Article III the United States shall grant without medical examination to all such persons fully paid up indemnity in the amount of $2,000, payable in the event of death or total and permanent disability occurring during the period of the war, or within two years thereafter. All such persons shall forfeit such indemnity in the event of dishonorable discharge.

SEC. 401. Any person in the active service on or after the 6th day of April, 1917, who, while in such service and before the enactment of this amendment, becomes or has become totally and permanently disabled or dies, or has died, shall be entitled to the benefits of this indemnity.

SEC. 402. This indemnity shall be payable to such person or persons as the insured may elect from among the beneficiaries designated in Article III, section 301, of this act.

SEC. 403. To provide further insurance for persons mentioned in section 400, who at the expiration of the period of two years after the war, by reason of physical defects resulting from their war service, are not able to secure insurance from private life insurance corporations at normal rates, the bureau may continue such indemnity for life upon payment of normal premiums by the insured, and to that end may conclude contracts with existing life insurance companies to assume such contracts of indemnity on the following basis: The premium rates shall not exceed the net premium rates based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality and 3½ per cent per annum, but the United States shall reimburse such companies for any excess mortality experienced under such policies.

SEC. 404. That in the event of disagreement as to a claim under the contract of insurance between the bureau and any beneficiary or beneficiaries thereunder, an action on the claim may be brought against the United States in the district court of the United States in and for the district in which such beneficiaries or any one of them resides. The court, as part of its judgment, shall determine and allow such reasonable attorney's fees, not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount recovered, to be paid by the claimant on behalf of whom such proceedings are instituted to his attorney; and it shall be unlawful for the attorney or for any other person acting as claim agent or otherwise to ask for, or receive, any other compensation because of such action.

And provided further, That no other compensation or fee shall be charged or received by any person except such as may be authorized by the commissioner in regulations to be promulgated by him. Any person violating this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall, for each and every such offense be fined not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned at hard labor not exceeding two years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Article IV—and I should like the Senators present to follow what I have to say in relation to it—puts the National Government into the life insurance business not merely for the war but permanently. The provisions of the bill are so drawn that the great bureau of life insurance contemplated in it becomes necessarily self-perpetuating.

It is proposed to give every commissioned officer and enlisted man, and every member of the Nurse Corps, insurance against death and permanent total disability in any sum not less than $1,000 and not more than $7,500, and there will be an endeavor to increase that limitation to $10,000. However, these sums are not granted to all alike, but are dependent upon the payment of a premium averaging $8 per thousand per year for ages between 21 and 31, and at higher rates for older men. In other words, we have older men in the Regular Army and if they take insurance and are 45 years of age they will be compelled to pay the 45-year rate.

It is also provided that this insurance must be taken within 120 days after the passage of the bill. The premium rate is to be the net rate usually paid in peace times for term insurance for successive terms of one year each.

The country, by means of the unusual publicity facilities open to the administration, has been made to believe that the Government will furnish life insurance to its soldiers and sailors in time of war at an average rate of $8 per thousand. The fact that the form of insurance is one commonly known as "term insurance," which increases with the age of the insured, and that there are no surrender values, extended insurance, paid-up insurance, or nonforfeiture features, is discreetly withheld from the public.

The bill provides also, in section 402, as follows:

> Provisions for maturity at certain ages, for continuous installments during the life of the insured or beneficiaries, or both, for cash, loan, paid-up and extended values, dividends from gains and savings, and such other provisions for the protection and advantage of and for alternative benefits to the insured and the beneficiaries as may be found to be reasonable and practicable, may be provided for in the contract of insurance, or from time to time by regulations.

The language quoted above from the bill is merely another way of saying that the Government proposes to exchange these term policies for policies of well-known standard forms as now issued by existing life insurance companies.

In section 404 there is a provision for converting these term policies, "without medical examination, into such form or forms of insurance as may be prescribed by regulations and as the insured may request."

In passing, it might be well to call attention to the fact that these various forms of policies are to be paid for in installments, and that the policyholders are not to be required to pay premiums in advance for more than one month each. This puts the Government to an enormous expense, because it practically converts its insurance policies into industrial policies, which may be payable, according to the terms of this section, by the day, week, or month, or not less frequently than monthly.

In section 403 the bill states that "the United States shall bear the expenses of administration and the excess mortality and disability cost resulting from the hazards of war." No one can say what will be the cost to the United States Government of this experiment. It is conceded at the outset that there will be an excess mortality and an excess disability beyond any experience hitherto compiled in mortality tables.

The policy of insurance in question is open to the following serious objections:

First. It is an experiment, pure and simple. The Government is proposing to engage in the most highly specialized and technical form of business known to the American people.

Second. It is offering a gratuity to the few, to which all in the same service should be entitled, if any are entitled to it.

Third. It is miscalled "insurance," and should be "indemnity" or "additional indemnity"; for it is conceded that the Government proposes to pay this excess mortality cost and the overhead expense as additional indemnity to the soldiers or sailors or their beneficiaries because the compensation or pension privileges provided in section 3 are not adequate. No such generous provision has ever been offered the soldiers of any nation as is contained in Articles II and III of this bill, and I am in favor of the provisions of Articles II and III.

It is the opinion of many thoughtful men that when the Government provides for the widow of a soldier or sailor who has no children the equivalent of about $7,200 of life insurance the Government has been just and generous. It is, therefore, a question whether the Government is justified in taxing the people of the country for an additional indemnity, the cost of which no one can foretell.

Fourth. The article provides for discrimination, which is exceedingly unfortunate and unfair. The private soldier, whose large or small family at home requires every dollar of the separation allowance and all that the soldier can possibly spare from the remaining portion of his wages, will be left dependent upon the same pension as any other family in the event of his death. I might add at this point, Mr. President, that there are hundreds of thousands of the boys that have gone to war that are at the present time carrying insurance policies, many of them without the war-insurance clause. They have got to meet those payments as well as to meet the payments provided for in Article IV of this bill. The private soldier to whom I have referred will not be able to supplement that pension with this life insurance. The officer, with a good salary or with well-to-do relatives, or perhaps a wife with an independent income, and the private soldier who has no dependents, or who is forehanded, will take the limit of the $7,500 or $10,000. Hence, it comes to pass that the Government will be paying $7,500 or $10,000, as the case may be, for the support of the dependents of the well-to-do and rich man, and not the dependents of the poor man.

Fifth. It is discriminatory also in that it compels the soldier, whether he be in the trenches or elsewhere, to make application for his insurance within 120 days after enlistment. If for any reason he shall fail to make application for the insurance, he is deprived of the privilege.

Sixth. Of necessity, when the Government embarks in the life insurance business, it must conduct a great life insurance company. The proponents of this article contemplate exactly this thing. They are forcing the Government into the life insurance business, and in no way leaving the Government the opportunity to withdraw, if it shall later find the experiment to be an enormously expensive failure. If the bill is to be of any real value to the Army and Navy, at least one-half of all the soldiers and sailors should take the limit of $5,000, which would mean a total volume of business of $5,000,000,000. This, as I have already said, is a larger volume than the total of all the policies of the three greatest ordinary life insurance companies in the world, to wit, the New York Life, the Mutual Life, and the Equitable Life Insurance Companies, all of the City of New York.

Seventh. There is absolutely no necessity whatever for the creation of a department to handle monthly payments on five billions of insurance. By giving to every soldier and sailor a policy or contract to pay at the time he is totally disabled, or to his beneficiaries at his death, provided it occurs within two years after the termination of the war, the Government will incur no large expense for managing a life insurance bureau and will at the same time be treating all its soldiers and sailors and their dependents with equal and exact justice. This would be tremendously expensive, but it would be a direct recognition of the obligation of the Government to the soldiers and their dependents. If the benefits provided for in Article III are inadequate, this is the way for the Government to provide the additional indemnity.

What the Government does for an army taken as our Army has been taken from all walks of life should be done for all alike, whether officers or enlisted men. There can be no justification for distinctions either in the amount of so-called compensation or in the death and disability benefits. It would be just as fair to pay the rich man's son a disability benefit of twice the amount paid the poor man's son as to pay the citizen officer twice the sum paid the citizen soldier. The same illustration applies to insurance policies, and reinforces the suggestion already made by me that whatever is done for the man in the ranks, whether officer or enlisted man, should be done without discrimination.

Mr. President, I know there is very little use of discussing these questions in detail any further. I wish we had days or weeks to discuss this bill. This bill does not simply make an appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918. Every Senator upon the floor of this Chamber will be dead years before the necessity of appropriations to meet the provisions of this bill will have passed.

I wish, Mr. President, that Article I, Article II, and Article III of the bill constituted the whole of the bill. In fact, I may add that in the case of Article I if I had my way I would have provided for the administration in an entirely different way.

Mr. KING. That is, by the War and the Navy Departments?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; by the War and the Navy Departments. All of the distribution of the allotments, all of the distribution of the compensation, no matter what they are, I would have made by those two great departments of the Government.

Mr. President, when the proper time arrives I shall offer these amendments, and I shall ask the Senate to vote upon them; and I feel confident that if the amendments I will offer are adopted by the Senate, first, they will make the bill a better bill; second, Mr. President, the bill will do justice to the widows and the helpless dependent children of the veterans of our Civil and our Spanish-American War, and it is not going to cost very much money.

If I should do what I think ought to be done, but what I have concluded is best to be done by separate legislation, then it would have cost many millions of dollars. In fact, I had better call attention to what it would have cost. To increase to $30 per month pensions to the survivors of the Civil War on the roll at less rates than $30 would cost the Government of the United States $24,419,583 per annum. To increase the pensions of all Civil War widows and their dependents to $30 per month would cost the Government per annum $46,782,612. That, of course, is understood to be all the widows, whether they are widows of soldiers who were disabled in the line of service or not. If all of the widows of the Civil War and Spanish War and all of the veterans of the Civil War and Spanish War were put upon the same basis—I will not say the same basis, because it is not the same—at the rates we are providing for in this bill, that is the amount it would cost the Government.

Mr. KING. Before my colleague takes his seat, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. Certain figures have been submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury to the President of the United States in support of this bill. I do not have them before me; I thought I did. I will ask the Senator whether or not the figures which were given by the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. McAdoo, as to the probable cost for the first and second years were based upon the assumption that there would be 1,000,000 soldiers and sailors or was it based upon the assumption that there would be 2,000,000? That letter and those figures are very indefinite.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say that I have read that report and really I can not tell what the Secretary of the Treasury had in mind when he submitted it. In fact, I have no doubt in my mind but that the death rate and disability rate will be greater than the Secretary of the Treasury suggests.

Mr. KING. I will say to my colleague I did a little figuring last evening. It seems to me if there were 1,000,000 soldiers, to say nothing of the sailors, instead of the cost being as suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury it would be infinitely greater, and progressively greater perhaps for 10 or 15 years; the tide would increase and perhaps the crest of the tide would be reached in 15 or 16 years, as the crest of the tide in the Civil War was not reached until 15 or 20 years after the termination of the war.

Mr. SMOOT. The crest of the payment of pensions of the Civil War did not arrive until nearly 46 years afterwards.

Mr. KING. I mean for certain disabilities. Has the Senator figured the cost that would arise under the bill, under all features of the bill, assuming that we have 3,000,000 soldiers and sailors?

Mr. SMOOT. If we have 3,000,000 soldiers and sailors in service in this war, and——

Mr. KING. Probably more.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not tell the Senator how many. I have not figured it even on the basis of a million.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand my colleague, if we should get into the war and do our part and the war should last several years and we should have two or three or four or five million soldiers, this measure would impose upon the Government perhaps from five to ten billion dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question about that.

Mr. KING. And possibly more.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest now that we proceed to the consideration of the committee amendment which was passed over yesterday.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator yield just a second? The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] wants to put in some figures in reply to what has been stated by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, in the current number of the North American Review there is a very interesting discussion of the question of losses from death and total disability during the present war. It is very pertinent to the discussion by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and of the colloquy that arose during that discussion.

I think it is important from two or three standpoints. First, from the standpoint of allaying some of the apprehension and dread which arises from the fact that we are sending our soldiers abroad to fight in a foreign field. It is pertinent again from the standpoint of the liability of the Government under two features of the bill, the compensation and the insurance features. I think it would be well to have this short discussion in the North American Review read from the desk. There are two pages and a little more of it. I send it to the desk with the request that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

We advert now to a matter of the utmost importance to American families, respecting which wholly unwarranted and most unfortunate misapprehension has arisen, namely, that of casualties in the war as now waged. As a consequence of ignorance of the facts and unceasing mouthings of traitors and pacifists, "trench fighting" has come to be regarded as virtually synonymous with "slaughter," and the impression has been strengthened materially by personal tales of minor engagements made vivid by ghastly pictures. The truth is that the death toll exacted by modern warfare is immeasurably smaller than ever before in history, and has decreased steadily since the fighting began.

Innumerable comparisons might be cited from the days of Alexander in substantiation of this assertion, but a few will suffice. In the charge of the Light Brigade 113 were killed and 134 wounded out of 673, or 36.7 per cent. In our Civil War, the Ninth Illinois lost at Shiloh 63.3 per cent, the First Minnesota at Gettysburg 82 per cent, and the Sixty-ninth New York 1,000 out of 1,200 in 20 minutes. Even the Prussians sacrificed of the Third Westphalian Regiment at Mars la Tour, in 1871, 1,484 men out of 3,000, or 49.4 per cent.

Similar losses were experienced, especially by the inefficiently officered British, in the early engagements of the present war, but in open fighting, not in trenches. Later, too, as we noted last month, the splendid Canadians left 600 out of 800 on the field, in consequence of an unrescinded order. By way of contrast we are indebted to Sir Charles Ross for a statement of the casualties at the recent Battle of Messines, as follows:

"Total number of men engaged, 280,000.
"Total casualties less than 9 per cent.
"Total fatalities less than 1 in 7 of total casualties."

Reported from the same authoritative source of another recent battle: "Engaged: First line, 250,000; second line, 250,000. Casualties: Walking, 6,000; stretcher, 2,600; killed and wholly disabled, 1,400."

These, of course, were single engagements, and can be regarded only as illustrative. But take the percentage of casualties in the entire French Army in proportion to mobilized strength, with this result:

Battles of Charleroi and of the Marne	5.41
First six months of 1915	2.39
Second six months of 1915	1.68
First six months of 1916	1.47
Second six months of 1916	1.28

These figures, taken when the casualties were greatest in proportion to mobilized strength and combined with the highest proportion of deaths, show losses due to deaths from wounds and killed in action to be approximately 11 in every 1,000 of mobilized strength. According to the figures presented by the French high commissioner in his letter to the Secretary of War, the high-water mark of casualties in the French Army was reached early in the war—at the Battles of Charleroi and the Marne. The casualties in that period were 5.41 per cent of the mobilized strength, or 541 men in every 10,000 with the colors. Military experts in this country agree that the killed in action and died of wounds have never at any time in this war exceeded 20 per cent of the total casualties. This gives a figure of 108.2 fatalities from these causes in every 10,000 mobilized strength; or practically 11 men killed in action or died of wounds for every 1,000 with the colors, a ratio of 1.1 per cent.

To say, as we used to say of crossing the Atlantic, that fighting in France as now conducted is safer than crossing Broadway, would seem absurd; and yet the concrete fact is that if the percentage of American fatalities, in an army of 500,000, in 1918, should not exceed that of the French last year, more Americans will perish from intentional and accidental use of firearms in the United States than in Europe. Nor is there apparent reason to doubt that this will be the case. The heavy sacrifices of the bewildered French and the untrained British in the first year of the war and of the German boys cynically used for "cannon fodder" throughout, conformably to system, signify nothing. American fighting is to be done on the "precise and scientific" lines wisely decreed by the President in preference to the happy-go-lucky methods of Rough Riders; our men have no superiors in intelligence or in initiative, and will be trained to a nicety before being sent into action; and if there live more capable officers than the professional soldiers graduated from West Point, the fact is yet to be demonstrated.

We would not think of minimizing the dangers which confront the young Americans who go to fight their country's battles; war is war and the Huns are Huns; but we do insist, upon the records, that the too common assumption that they are going to "certain death" or to certain anything except honor for themselves and glory for their country is as unwarranted in fact as it surely is harmful in promulgation and altogether foolish.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, following up the statement in the article just read and in partial reply to the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], of course he has overestimated the losses that will come from the insurance side of this proposition. In the first place, all the men will not be insured. In the second place, all the men who are insured will neither suffer death nor total disability. In the third place, all the men who will draw allowances have not got dependents. I have two boys in the Army. The Senator has one. Neither one of them could get an allowance on the ground of having any dependent relatives. That just occurred to me on the spur of the moment.

Now, as to the insurance. While we can not estimate what it would be, we can suppose a case. Suppose that we had 1,000,000 men, and suppose that the war lasted one year after we got to Europe, and suppose that the casualties are 75 per 1,000. I mean the deaths and total disabilities. That is the highest figure that I have heard given. I therefore take that first. Suppose that each man of the million took out a policy of $7,000, which, of course, he is not going to do, because people generally carry policies of very much less than that. But I am supposing the maximum now in each case. Then the United States will receive upon those million policies, each for $7,000, $56,000,000 for the year, and if 75 out of each 1,000 die, which would be 75,000 dead or disabled, and there would be that many losses upon the policies, the Government would pay out $525,000,000. It had received $56,000,000, and the net loss would be $469,000,000.

Now, suppose the figures in that magazine article are correct, and that the loss is 11 per 1,000, and undoubtedly they seem to be correct from what the writer said, then the United States would receive $56,000,000 and would pay out $77,000,000, and the net loss would be $21,000,000. But in neither event upon the maximum nor upon the minimum does it run into billions, as the Senator supposes.

The junior Senator from Utah says, suppose we have 2,000,000 men there we would have to pay some $5,000,000,000. As far as that is concerned, if we had 2,000,000 men there it would cost $1,000 plus 40 per cent for each man to pay them under the old schedule of $15. Now it costs $33 per month, and the pay of the soldier would run up pretty close to the figures the Senator is talking about, without taking into consideration any of these other matters.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will not be agreed to. As the measure passed the House of Representatives the maximum amount of insurance authorized under the bill is $10,000. That would make $56 per month for a period of 240 months payable to the soldier's dependents in case of the death or the total disability of the soldier.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I inquire what amendment the Senator is discussing?

Mr. ROBINSON. The amendment of the committee at page 31, line 15, striking out $10,000 and inserting $7,500 in lieu of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As the maximum.

Mr. ROBINSON. As the maximum amount of insurance that may be obtained under the provisions of the bill.

If the committee provision is adopted and $10,000 is taken out and $7,500 agreed to, the monthly payment will be approximately $42 instead of $56 a month in case of the death or total disability of the soldier.

It should be remembered that compensation relates only to the wife, child or children, or widowed mother of the soldier, and if he is to make adequate provision for any other relative or dependent it must be by means of insurance. Under the draft law a great many of the men who are now entering the service are giving up profitable businesses and large incomes. Many of them are now insured. They lose their insurable status. and they are compelled to rely for insurance upon whatever provision Congress places in this bill.

I submit to the Senate that $56 a month as a maximum is not an unreasonable provision for cases where soldiers are now receiving large sums of money from their private business and are giving up that business and that income in order to serve in the Army.

But in addition to that Senators throughout this debate have treated the insurance feature of the bill largely as a gratuity to the soldiers. It should be borne in mind, Senators, that the soldier pays for his insurance. If the bill is passed, the soldier will pay for his insurance on the same basis that he would pay if he were a civilian. The only thing that the Government carries is the war risk. The Government is drafting into its service for the necessary defense of the Nation thousands of the best men in the country, and it is bad policy to be parsimonious concerning a provision of this character. It is bad policy while depriving the soldier of his insurability, depriving him of his income, compelling him to risk his life on the battle field, to say to him: "You can make some provision in the way of insurance for your dependents or your relatives, but that provision shall be parsimonious."

The Secretary of the Treasury thinks it is vitally important that the $10,000 maximum should be retained. In a letter to the chairman of the committee reporting this bill, dated September 29, 1917, Secretary McAdoo uses this language:

> I believe that the maximum insurance should be raised to $10,000. Under the scheme of this bill compensation is limited to wife, child, and widowed mother; only through insurance can a man take care of his other dependents.
> Again, many thousands of men in this drafted army are giving up large incomes and brilliant futures. If they become totally disabled or die, families which would have been in a prosperous condition, with all the comforts of life, had the man not gone to war, will be left in bad shape. Ten thousand dollars insurance will give them only about $56 a month.

It should also be remembered, Mr. President, that the only officers who receive retirement pay are those in the Regular Army.

It does seem to me that in view of these facts and these arguments that the committee amendment ought to be rejected and the original item, as passed by the House of Representatives, ought to be approved. It appears that $10,000 is low enough when you consider the fact that the soldier is paying for his insurance, and that the Government is only carrying the war risk. It is fair for the Government to carry the war risk, because the undertaking of a soldier is an extremely hazardous one. If it is fair for the Government to carry the war risk, then it ought to carry it in a sufficient amount to accomplish the purposes for which the insurance is taken out.

Undoubtedly it is true, as stated by the Senator in charge of the bill, that many soldiers who enter the service will not avail themselves of the privilege of carrying insurance under the provisions of the bill, and it is also true that many who obtain policies will not avail themselves of the maximum amount. Perhaps comparatively few will desire to take out a policy in the amount of $10,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is discussing one of the most important matters that has come before the Senate in connection with this measure, and I really think we ought to have a fuller attendance. I make the point of no quorum, if the Senator from Arkansas does not object.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brady	Hitchcock	New	Simmons
Calder	James	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Smith, Md.
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Page	Smoot
Curtis	Kellogg	Pittman	Sterling
Dillingham	Kenyon	Poindexter	Stone
Fall	King	Pomerene	Sutherland
Fletcher	La Follette	Reed	Vardaman
France	Lewis	Robinson	Warren
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Saulsbury	Williams
Gerry	McKellar	Shafroth	Wolcott
Hale	McNary	Sheppard
Harding	Martin	Shields

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] because of illness, and to announce that he is paired with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], who is also ill. I ask to have this announcement stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, when the absence of a quorum was suggested I was discussing a very important committee amendment to the pending bill. The committee has reported an amendment striking out "$10,000" and inserting "$7,500" as the maximum amount of insurance obtainable under the provisions of this bill. I am opposing the adoption of that amendment; and before Senators came into the Chamber, to a select company of the Senators who were present at that time, I had made some statements which I will take the liberty of reviewing for the benefit of those who are now here. I promise, if Senators will listen for 10 minutes, that I shall conclude within that time unless I am interrupted.

In the first place, in the drafted army there will be a large number of men who will be compelled to give up profitable occupations and large incomes when they enter the military service of the Government. If they take out insurance under this bill, they will pay for the insurance just as the civilian now pays for his insurance; but the war risk, and that only, will be carried by the Government. Under the provisions of this bill compensation is available only for a certain class of dependents, and a very narrow class at that—a wife and child, or the widowed mother. No adequate provision can be made by the soldier for his dependents or relatives, except through the insurance feature of this bill.

This is one of the most important and beneficial measures that has come to Congress in the enactment of the war program. It is fair and just, if a portion of the population of this country are compelled to abandon their peaceful pursuits and to take up arms for the defense of the Nation, that those of us who stay at home and enjoy the increased profits which may come to our toil and to our activities, and the security and comfort of our hopes, should not be parsimonious, but that we should be liberal in making provision for the men who are thus compelled to make this great sacrifice.

There are thousands of men entering the National Army now whose families have been accustomed to the enjoyment of every comfort and luxury known to life; there are thousands of men who are receiving enormous incomes. If you take the view of the matter which I take, and keep the sum of $10,000 in the bill, and vote to reject the committee amendment, it will then be possible under this feature of the bill for a dependent or dependents of the soldier who dies in the service or is totally disabled to receive $56 per month for the period of 240 months; but if you adopt the committee view, you will reduce that maximum amount to $42 per month.

I have heard it whispered about me here by some Senators that the retention of this item as the House of Representatives passed it will bankrupt the Government. I now repeat the statement which I made previous to the call for a quorum, and that is that only a comparatively few soldiers will avail themselves of the maximum amount of insurance. I wish to God that every man who enters the military service of the United States would be able to, and would, in fact, avail himself of this provision. I shall never contribute for any purpose more cheerfully than I shall to provide the funds made necessary by the passage of this bill.

I think it is a bad policy, I think it is wrong in spirit and in purpose to be parsimonious in making a provision of this character. It is not a gratuity, but it is a duty which the Government owes to the men who are taking this great risk. They pay for their own insurance, and the Government assumes merely the war risk. Why not be liberal? Why be parsimonious?

Officers in the Regular Army enjoy retirement pay, but the man who enters the National Army, if he falls upholding the American flag on the French battle front, or if he is totally disabled, can receive no retirement pay. If he dies, his widow, his child, or his widowed mother, if he have such relatives, may receive compensation under other features of this bill; but if he has a decrepit father or a dependent sister or other relative dependent upon him, no substantial provision is made for them. Insurance is the only feature of the bill which contemplates enabling the soldier to care for other dependents than the wife, the child, or the widowed mother.

It would of course be impossible, Mr. President, to say just exactly what would be the additional cost of making the maximum insurance $10,000, instead of $7,500. We do not know how many soldiers are going to fall; we do not know how many are going to be totally disabled; neither can we tell how many are going to avail themselves of the maximum; but, to me, that is an immaterial consideration. If a great number must be sacrificed, that is a reason which impels me to make more liberal provision, rather than to justify a parsimonious provision.

I have looked upon the progress of this war with confidence, and yet with amazement. We all recognize it as the most gigantic and most stupendous conflict that the human race has ever engaged in. Some have said that we ought not to send our soldiers to France; that we ought to keep them here at home and let them fight on American soil. To those who make that statement I point to bleeding Belgium and to prostrate Poland. I can not recite the deeds of barbarism and cruelty that have been imposed upon the noncombatant populations of those two nations. For my part, if we have to fight, I would rather have our soldiers fight on foreign soil than to have the enemy invade this country and subject our population to the miseries and desolation of conflict. But in sending our soldiers abroad I am willing to pledge the faith and the resources of this Government not only to the fair treatment of our soldiers but to the liberal treatment of their dependents. In doing that we shall nerve the soldier's heart with courage and inspire him to victory. If we take away from the American soldier whom we are sending abroad to fight the battles of this country the thought and the fear that his dependents may suffer during his absence, we shall do much toward encouraging him and strengthening his arm in this conflict.

What is the difference between $7,500 and $10,000? It is the difference of the Senate of the United States showing itself more parsimonious than the House at the other end of the Capitol. The item passed through that great body without question; it ought to pass this body likewise. The Senate ought to show itself liberal in this particular.

I express the hope that this committee amendment will be voted down. The Secretary of the Treasury, as I said, some time ago sent a letter to the chairman of the committee urging that this item of $10,000 be restored. I sincerely hope that the Senate will take that action.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the statement contained in the article which has been read from the North American Review be true, the safest place on earth to which we can send our boys is to the trenches of France. I am told the article claims that soldiers in the trenches are safer there than if they were on Broadway; that they are safer in war than they are in the general vocations of life. Of course, Mr. President, I do not believe any such rot as that, nor do any of the insurance companies in the world believe it. I understand that there is but one insurance company in the United States which will now take an insurance risk on the officers and soldiers entering the European war, and it adds what the insurance companies of Canada have added, $50 per thousand to the peace-time premium; and instead of $8, it is $58 per thousand. When anyone tries to demonstrate that there are not as many deaths occurring on the firing line on the battle fields of Europe as in ordinary walks of life, when such a conflict is going on as is going on there to-day, and that our soldiers will be safer in the trenches than in any other place on earth, I think he is undertaking a task which no man can accomplish, or is making a statement which very few will even believe.

The House provided a maximum rate of insurance of $10,000. The House provided that upon the death of a soldier the $10,000 should be paid to his beneficiary or beneficiaries, as the case might be. Experience has taught, as has been demonstrated by the statistics of all the insurance companies of the world, that when a lump sum of $5,000 or $10,000, or even of $2,000 or $4,000, is left to a widow through insurance or in any other way, she never having had experience in the handling of large sums of money before, in 95 per cent of the cases the money is dissipated in a very few years. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY] had placed in the RECORD yesterday a letter which I think was prepared by Dr. Kerr, was it not?

Mr. BRADY. It was.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose we all know who Dr. Kerr is. I had a copy of that letter, and I want to say that if the House provision is retained in the bill, instead of the beneficiaries of a soldier being taken care of for 20 years after the death of the soldier, the money in many cases will be dissipated, and not only dissipated, but in many cases it will be worse than dissipated.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, does not the Senator think the argument he is making is an argument against all insurance in favor of a man's wife?

Mr. SMOOT. No; I do not, Mr. President, for I think when the Government is to pay for it that the Government ought to dictate the terms upon which the money shall be received. Experience has taught that the statement I have just made is correct; and if the insurance companies were allowed to put in their policies a provision similar to the one the committee recommends in this instance, I think it would be better for all beneficiaries receiving money from life insurance.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. I will yield in just a moment. I notice that Congress of late years, in providing for the payment of claims of those who have been injured or in the case of death, stipulate that the payments shall be made in monthly installments, and I will say, without a question of doubt, that in the great majority of cases that is better for the beneficiary than to have the amount paid out in a lump sum and turned over to him.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not that apply with reference to the $7,500 amount as recommended by the committee, as well as to the amount of $10,000 recommended by the House?

Mr. SMOOT. It would apply if we had allowed the provision to remain as it passed the House; but we have not left it in that way. The Senate has amended the House provision so that the $7,500 shall not be paid out at once to the beneficiary, but shall be paid in 240 monthly installments.

Mr. SIMMONS. Would not that same provision apply if the maximum is increased to $10,000?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, as a matter of fact, according to the ordinary methods of computation, the beneficiary would receive less under such a provision than he would if he received the entire amount at once, because he would be entitled to obtain interest upon it in the theory of law.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Arkansas did not hear what I said, or else I did not make myself clear, or I was interrupted before I concluded what I had to say. The $7,500, which is the maximum allowed under the Senate committee's provision, will draw 3½ per cent interest on the deferred payments. Those payments are to be made in 240 monthly installments. The interest on $7,500 at 3½ per cent when paid in 240 monthly installments will amount to $2,700; or, in other words, the beneficiaries will receive not $7,500, but they will receive $10,200 in 240 monthly payments, or extending over a period of 20 years.

Mr. President, with the $7,500 maximum, as recommended by the committee, and under the method of payment I have indicated, the beneficiaries will receive, as I have said, $10,200. That amounts to $42 a month. Is that all that we will pay the wife of a soldier or the children of a soldier? No. We provide further in this bill for a compensation up to the amount of $75 per month. With the $42 per month and an average compensation of $50 per month, the wife and her children will receive from the Government a monthly income of $92.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SHIELDS. I desire to ask the Senator from Utah a question while he is on the subject of the objections to the higher maximum of insurance. As has been very well said, the objection that the money might be dissipated by the wife or family of the insured might very well go to any amount; but the Senator seems to be entirely familiar with insurance statistics, and I should like to ask him what proportion of the 43,000,000 policies that are in force in the United States and in Canada, carrying some $23,756,000,000 of insurance, are now drawn in favor of the widows and children of the insured, and whether or not the practice of making the policies in favor of the widows and children has not been followed for many years and has not been approved by the experience of the generation in which the insurance business has been more highly and extensively developed than during any other period in the history of the world?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I said, in answer to the question of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], that the insurance companies to-day pay the insurance in case of death just as the insured directs and to whom he directs. The company has nothing to say as to whom it shall be paid; the man who takes out the insurance decides that.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is true; but is it not a fact that 90 per cent of these policies are payable to the families of the insured, and that that practice has now been approved by the whole world?

Mr. SMOOT. I think, Mr. President, that the Senator is correct as to that.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then, why should we not follow that practice in the case of soldiers?

Mr. SMOOT. I have already stated why I think it should not be done. Mr. President, when we take into consideration that the average amount of insurance carried in the United States is only $1,800; that is, taking insurance policies on the life of one individual running into hundreds of thousands of dollars and all other insurance issued in the United States, the average insurance policy is only $1,800, and that is in peace times——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that embraces, of course, a large amount of industrial insurance and insurance to cover funeral expenses and contingencies of that sort, which can not be made a basis of comparison with the character of insurance provided for in this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is mistaken in that statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator, then, inform me what class of insurance he has included in his estimate?

Mr. SMOOT. I have included all the regular lines of life insurance and insurance written by the old-line insurance companies. I do not have reference to accident insurance and that kind of insurance; I refer to the old-line insurance.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator embraces in his estimate nothing but old-line insurance?

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the Senator embrace mutual insurance in that statement?

Mr. BRADY. There is nothing compulsory in this provision. The soldier may take neither $7,500 nor $10,000. If the applicant so desires, he can take out $1,800 or $2,000 or $3,000, or whatever amount he desires.

Mr. SMOOT. Or he need not take out any.

Mr. BRADY. He need not take out any.

Mr. SMOOT. No.

Mr. BRADY. It is entirely optional with the one who desires to be insured.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If he takes out any, he must take it out in multiples of $500.

Mr. SMOOT. But if he does not take out any there can be no multiple.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But he could not take out $1,800 worth of insurance, for instance, because that is not a multiple of $500.

Mr. BRADY. The point I wish to make is that there is no need of making the comparison as to the average amount of insurance in the United States being $1,800, for the reason that the insurance taken out under this provision may only average $1,800 after years of operation.

Mr. ROBINSON. It may average much less than that.

Mr. SMOOT. I referred to the average amount of insurance taken out in answer to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] in connection with my reference to the amount of money that was being dissipated and in connection with my statement as to the general policy of the insurance companies to-day. That general policy is, of course, that the amount of the insurance shall go to the family or the immediate relatives of the deceased in a lump sum.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. The old-line insurance companies sometimes issue policies to the amount of half a million or a million dollars, do they not, on the life of a single individual?

Mr. SMOOT. There are probably a few that run as high as that, but I think I could count them on my fingers.

Mr. ROBINSON. I want the Senator to point out to me how he thinks the average of the policies issued by the old-line insurance companies is material to this proposition, in view of the fact that their maximum is unlimited and their minimum is practically unlimited?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, Mr. President, as I said to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BRADY], I referred to the average of insurance in answer to a statement made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. I never would have referred to the average amount of insurance if it had not been for the question which the Senator from Tennessee asked me.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will pardon me there, I do not see its application to any statement made by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, I can not assist the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BRADY. The Senator from Utah was simply using it as an illustration, in answer to a question asked him by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SMOOT. That is all.

Now, Mr. President, there are two sides to this question. I have no doubt that the officers will take the limit of insurance provided for in this bill. If the limit is $10,000, they will take out $10,000. I have noticed, Mr. President, that when many of the wives of officers of the Army and the Navy have special pension bills introduced for their relief, and when reports are made to the Pensions Committee of the Senate as to the value of their possessions or what property they own, the wife of nearly every general and the wife of nearly every admiral has received in insurance about $15,000 or $16,000.

Most of the officers of the Army and the Navy to-day are carrying insurance, and as I stated, as far as the generals and the admirals are concerned, it appears the amount that has been carried in the past is about $15,000.

Under this provision, Mr. President, with a $50 compensation, and if we increase the maximum to $10,000 of insurance and made it payable monthly, it would amount to $56 per month, and that would be an income to the widow of $106 per month.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not to the wife alone.

Mr. SMOOT. I mean to the wife and children or beneficiaries.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator has just made a statement about the large amount of insurance carried by officers in the Army and the Navy. Can the Senator state what premiums they pay, relatively?

Mr. SMOOT. That would all depend upon the age at which they took out the policy. I could not say as to that.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator has investigated that question and makes the statement that Army and Navy officers are very heavily insured, I would accept his statement, because I know his powers of research; but I have some information which has been recently communicated to me from sources that I have relied on implicitly up to this time that leads me to think that the Senator from Utah has made, unintentionally, an exaggerated statement in that particular.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish the chairman of the Pensions Committee were present. I think the former chairman, the Senator North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], will bear me out in the statement I made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that I referred to generals and to admirals. I know, as a member of the Pensions Committee, from the investigations that have been made, that the widow reports quite often as having received $15,000 of insurance from the estate of her husband. I do not say that every one of them carries that amount of insurance. I am only saying that that seems to be the amount, as a general thing, as demonstrated by investigations made in the past.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think upon investigation it will be found to be true that, while officers in the Army and Navy do carry insurance, they pay a larger premium than most other people, because they take policies without the war-risk clause.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You or I, as a rule, do not care about that, or we have not in the past cared for it, rather; because when the company wanted to put in the policy a stipulation that if you went into war the policy should lapse, or that you should pay an increased premium, we did not care. We thought we probably would not go. But with the Army officer there is always a war clause, so that his premium during war times is very much increased. I have no figures about it, but I have understood that from conversations with some of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the premium in war times is not increased, but it may be that the premium that they pay in peace times is more than it would be without the war clause.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is what I mean.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. They pay a higher rate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I meant that their premiums were increased by the fact that they were subject all the time to be called into war.

Mr. SMOOT. As to that I can not say, Mr. President, because I do not know what rate they pay; but I do know that as a rule they are carrying insurance. That is, I mean that when their widows apply for pensions we very seldom find one but that has received insurance from the estate of her husband.

Mr. President, there may be a good reason why the Government of the United States should pay $106 a month to a soldier's family, and do so as long as they live, unless the widow gets married again; but it seems to me that if a family had $106 a month coming to them, and they had been used to living upon, perhaps, three-fourths of that amount, instead of being a blessing to the family or the children I rather think it would be the opposite. In time of war we ought to require every able-bodied man and woman to do his or her share in producing enough of the commodities of life for the people of the United States to live upon and assist in producing enough commodities and merchandise to meet the demands of the people.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has spoken about the amount that the Government would have to pay to the families of deceased soldiers in case they took out the maximum amount of insurance. I will ask the Senator if he does not think that the number of soldiers who would take out the maximum amount, as compared with the number who would take out a less amount, would be quite small? Is not that a natural conclusion, in view of the fact that we know that in common experience people are not apt to take out insurance for their brothers and sisters, and that as a rule insurance is taken out for the benefit of a man's immediate family or for the benefit of his dependents?

While the soldier who has a wife and children would likely take out as much as he feels able to take out, probably in many instances as much as the law will permit him to take out, that large class of soldiers who have no wife and no children would likely do just as the man in civil life who has neither wife nor children, take out but little if any insurance; and therefore those who would take out insurance to the maximum, whether it be $7,500 or $10,000, would be that small class of soldiers who have left behind them dependent families or parents. Does not the Senator think that would limit the number who would take out the larger amount?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I can not say what percentage of the soldiers would take out the full amount, nor can any one say; but I see no reason why every soldier should not take out every dollar of this insurance that he can, for this reason: As I said before, there is only one insurance company in the United States that will issue a policy to our soldiers without the war-risk clause, and that company charges $50 per thousand more than the peace rate. Now, any soldier that takes out insurance under this plan can take it out at $8 a thousand, so he is making $50 per thousand on his life insurance; and why should he not take every dollar that he can? I will agree with the Senator that it will be utterly impossible for all of them to do it. There are many soldiers now that must not only furnish the $15 required before the family allowance is granted, but they will have to send every cent of their money for the further assistance of their immediate family.

Mr. McCUMBER and Mr. WEEKS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will ask the Senator if this would not be an appropriate time for him to yield long enough for me to ask for unanimous consent that after half past 2 o'clock to-day all debate shall be limited to not exceeding 15 minutes? There are three or four Senators upon their feet at the present time to question and cross-question and then make arguments on what has been said over and over again on a single item of this bill; and the time will soon be up, so that when we get to 5 o'clock those of us who have amendments to propose will not have any time in which to explain them. Now, I do not want to ask that, but it seems to me that Senators ought in their own time present their amendments and the answers to the arguments in regard to them.

Mr. SMOOT. Just one other point, Mr. President, and I shall be through. In fact, I would have been through before if I had not been interrupted.

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not criticizing the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question but that the experience of Canada has shown that even a rate of $50 per thousand above peace rates on the insurance of their soldiers is not sufficient to cover the risk. Now, $50 per thousand, if there is $10,000 of insurance, means $500 per annum to the officer or the enlisted man who carries the full amount. If there are even 100,000 deaths during this war, it would mean a loss of $50,000,000.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senate provision is altogether better than the House provision, and under it the beneficiaries will actually receive $10,200.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I call his attention to the fact that my amendment does not affect the method of payment and does not contemplate anything of the kind that he has just mentioned. My amendment simply makes the maximum amount of insurance obtainable $10,000; and it is not my purpose to change or seek to change the other provision to which he has referred.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President, I did not refer to the Senator's amendment. I referred to the House provision.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course that is true; but I desire to call the attention of the Senator now to the fact that I am not attacking that feature of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to say just one word in answer to the argument of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. The gist of his argument is based upon the assumption that the insurance provision is the only provision in this bill that takes care of the soldier. I say it is based upon that assumption, although I admit that the Senate understands the bill well enough to know that there are other provisions which fully care for the soldier and his dependents; but the point I want to make is that in this bill there are practically two provisions for insurance. One of them you call compensation; the other one you call insurance. Whatever you may call them, under whatever name you may designate them, they are in reality an insurance to the soldier and to the members and dependents in his family; and I want that to be made absolutely clear before we vote to increase the provisions of Article IV, the insurance article, which are gratuities in every respect.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator heard my statement concerning this matter, I pointed out the fact that compensation under the terms of the bill is available only for a very narrow class of dependents and relatives. Within the class who may avail themselves of the benefits of compensation are included only a wife, a child, or a widowed mother. No other class can be benefited by the compensation feature of the bill; and if a soldier desires or has the duty of taking care of or making provision for other dependents or relatives, he must take out insurance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Say a father or a dependent sister.

Mr. ROBINSON. A father, or a father and mother, because the mother can only avail herself of the compensation if she is a widow; and if the soldier's load is doubly increased by having decrepit or infirm or dependent parents, both of whom are living, neither of them can avail themselves of the compensation feature; and it is therefore the more important that the insurance feature be liberal.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think it takes care of all of those that the soldier would be in duty bound to care for.

Mr. ROBINSON. Well——

Mr. McCUMBER. Just a moment. The Senator has made his address, and we all understand clearly what he means.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have no disposition to interrupt the Senator if he does not desire it.

Mr. McCUMBER. It is clear from the bill itself that the soldier is insured under Article III. What is he insured for? In case of death resulting from an injury, without one penny of payment upon his part, the wife, while his widow, will receive $25 a month. Why, we only gave the widows of the soldiers of the Civil War $8 a month until within a few years ago. Here we in the very beginning of this war start with $25 per month. If there is one child, the widow will receive $35 per month. The soldier of the Civil War, if he died, would by his services to his country have insured his widow and child only in the sum of $10 per month. If there are three children, they are insured under this bill to the extent of $47.50 per month. If there be no widow, but one child, it will receive $20 per month. If there be two children, the insurance will be $30 per month; if three children, $40 per month; if a widowed mother, $20 per month.

That is insurance pure and simple, call it by whatever name you see fit. In addition to this, there has been granted what is called regular insurance. It is most liberal in its provisions. I am not objecting to it; but when you are assuming that the country not only owes to the soldier the duty of insuring him under Article III, but also owes the additional duty of insuring him under Article IV, and carrying a double insurance, you are making a statement that is not wholly justified. That he should be insured, every one of us will agree. That his wife and children should be cared for in case of his death or disability, all will agree; but the claim that we should then, in addition to that insurance, provide another insurance that may run to any limit, I think is untenable.

Nevertheless I shall vote for the provision that the Government may carry all of this double insurance—this additional insurance—if it stops there; but I am opposed to our raising this from what now amounts to $10,200, payable in 20 years, or 240 monthly installments, to what would practically amount to $13,500, payable in the same number of installments, provided you change the $7,500 to $10,000. It is most liberal as it is at the present time, and we ought not to increase it.

Mr. President, Senators do not realize what this measure is going to mean to this country before we get through with the payments which will be made under it. We all want to do what is right; but back of the soldier in the trenches we want the civilian to do his part in this great war, and we do not want any laggards. We want every man, woman, and child to perform his or her duty in lines of productivity; we want to tax every dollar to its limit to make the war a success; but we ought not, by any kind of legislation, to create a class of people who will be supported irrespective of their dependence to such an extent that they will not be required to exercise mind or muscle for the purpose of carrying this war to a successful issue. That is just exactly what this bill, in some of its provisions, tends to do.

Mr. President, I do not know whether I ought to vote for this bill for the splendid provisions that are in it, or whether I ought to vote against it because of some of the objectionable provisions that are in it. Certainly we can heartily support that provision of the bill which requires every soldier, whether he be upon American soil or whether he be in the trenches of France, to take the surplus of his earnings—more than he needs to expend and more than he should expend for his own welfare and the welfare of his country and the Army—and have it laid aside for him, the Government paying him 4 per cent semi-annually compounded, which will amount to about 5 per cent, and holding it for him until the end of the war, so that when he comes out of the battle line he will have a snug little nest egg to his credit with which to start in business, or, at least, to support him for a while.

We all heartily agree with that provision; and, Mr. President, so we might heartily support the provision which provides for what is generally known as the laborers' compensation and apply it to our soldiers wherever they may be located. It is most liberal; it is most beneficial; and of itself it is an ample insurance, liberal far beyond anything that has ever been dreamed of by this Government or any other government upon the face of the earth. So we may well justify that. As the duties of the soldier, in my opinion at least, notwithstanding some of the articles that have been read here, are a hundredfold more hazardous in war than in ordinary employments, so we should meet that extra hazard with a spirit of liberality and generosity; but we ought not to allow that most commendable spirit to carry us beyond the line of good judgment and national safety, and I fear we are crossing that line by our more than liberality in this bill. No one can accuse me, Mr. President, of not being as stanch a friend of the soldier as anyone, whether of those who have fought our past battles or those who will fight our future ones. Every syllable of the three general pension laws preceding the very recent one placed upon the statute books has been penned by me, and I think the country has been well satisfied with the results. But there is such a thing as allowing the noblest of our impulses to carry us beyond the limits of full and exact justice.

Few, I say, realize what the cost of this measure will be to the American people. I do not know how many boys will take advantage of the $10,000 insurance or the $7,500 insurance, but I know that every soldier who does not take advantage of it shows by his failure, in a great degree, a lack of good judgment, because he will never again have such an opportunity in his life. He can get the lowest possible rate of insurance with the heavier part carried by the Government during the war, and then he can transfer this into an insurance that will be paid to him in a 20-year endowment or any other form of insurance that he may desire at the end of the war. Every one of them ought to take advantage of it, whether they will do so or not.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator whether he has any statistics showing what percentage of the adult male population of the United States now takes out any insurance at all?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no, Mr. President; but there would be a very large percentage, I anticipate, if the Government would carry more than half of the premiums; the number would be increased enormously if the Government would pay each male citizen a sum that would enable him to take care of such premiums. I think it then would include 90 per cent of all the male population of the United States.

Mr. President, it has been shown here, I think, that this bill alone will cost the Government of the United States not less than $500,000,000 for every 1,000,000 men enlisted. My own candid judgment is that it will reach far beyond that sum. Any man who believes that we will win this war with such a victory that will enable us to dictate terms of peace that will prevent such a damnable outrage ever again being perpetrated on the civilized world with less than 4,000,000 men in the trenches will have a rude awakening to a realization of the full meaning of this war before we ever get through with it. If it takes 4,000,000 men, that would be an annual average of $2,000,000,000 under the provisions of the bill from now for half a century yet to come. Now, that is what it is going to mean, and we ought not to add greatly to it.

If it meant no more than the mere matter of costs in dollars, I do not know that I would have any serious objection to it, but it does mean far more than this. It means far more than the loss of dollars to the Nation.

Mr. President and Senators, during the seven long years our forefathers fought for the independence of this country, during those long, struggling winters and summers, every American man, woman, and child was a participant in that war. There were no slackers. Our grandmothers sat at their wheels and at their looms into the long hours of the night. Their children with tiny hands performed their labors in adding to the output of commodities that was necessary to support the American Army. So during the great Civil War we know, because some of us well remember, our mothers sat with their knitting needles until the old clock on the mantel passed the hour of 12 and 1 and sometimes 2 o'clock in the morning. We know that every child who was old enough to do any kind of work was performing his or her duty. There were no slackers. There were none in those days who were asking that the Government should take care of them while they could fold their hands in idleness, and it would not have been well for the country if we had done so or attempted to do so.

Mr. President, we need to-day just as much as we ever needed in any war the active energy of every man, woman, and child in this country, that that energy may be coined into products for the support of the American people and of the Army and the Navy. We can not afford to lose any of the potential energy of the great American people if we are going to win this war, as we should win it.

Is there anything in this bill that of itself diminishes the sum total, the quantity of that human energy which is required at home as well as in the trenches? Let us see. We can divide the people of the world into about two classes. The one class will be made up of those people who labor, even though it is not necessary for them to do so in order to secure a competence. We have another class—I will not venture to say which is the larger—which will never perform any more labor than is necessary to secure a plain living. Now, what is the result of this bill upon those two classes of the people?

Probably most of us will remember that the moment we passed the conscription law the number of marriages in the United States was greatly increased, and that is as it should be. The young man before going to the front took his sweetheart for a wife. Most of these young men were of that age where they had accumulated nothing in the world. They had nothing to support themselves except that innate energy of all our American people. They were laboring for their own support, and all those who got married as a rule married girls who in this age were also performing their duties in the world and were producing either by their hands or minds for the general benefit of the people of the United States.

Now, what happens? Under the provisions of this bill the moment a soldier enlists his wife gets $30 a month. You may say that $15 of it belongs to the soldier. That is true, but it first comes out of the pocket of the taxpayer to the Government and into the hands of the soldier, and it is taken only out of what you all concede to be the surplus above what is necessary for the soldier's expenses while in the Army.

Now, what will this wife do? Suppose he marries a good school-teacher here in the city, and she is earning and will continue to earn $100 a month. Notwithstanding the fact that she is earning a good living, the Government will nevertheless hand her over $30 per month, not that she needs it, but that the law so provides. Probably there are few soldiers who can not say that they have an old parent more or less dependent upon them, and again the law says, "There is $20 more for each one of those parents, provided the whole does not exceed $50 per month."

Do you understand that in a great many of these cases you are by the action of this law diminishing the active energies of individuals that otherwise would be utilized in some line of endeavor for the benefit of the country; that you are shelving that much that ought to be kept in action?

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit me a word?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. As the bill came here from the House, I understand the contention of the Senator to be absolutely correct. It has been suggested that the bill has been so amended that, in the concrete case which is suggested by the Senator, where the wife is earning $100 per month and is therefore not dependent upon the husband, she would not be the recipient of the provisions contained in the bill. That is the construction of the bill that has been placed upon it, I understand, by other Senators.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senators who have placed that construction upon the bill are in error.

Mr. KING. I think so, too.

Mr. McCUMBER. The matter was brought before the committee, and it was discussed. I stated to the committee that I doubted very much if the word "dependent" could be given that construction under our pension laws, and that I would therefore look into the matter a little more thoroughly, and if I became convinced that it was not given that construction I would offer an amendment. It has not been given that construction, and I shall offer an amendment after I have explained it a little further.

Now, that is not all, Mr. President. In most cases, so far as the white population of the United States are concerned, when a man marries he takes care of his wife. I would record the exception only in the executive departments of the United States Government at Washington, where the wife still continues to be the breadwinner for her—what do I call him?—effeminate husband.

Mr. KING. Parasite.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; male parasite. A husband who is lacking in that manly pride which demands that he shall be a supporter and protector of his family. But that is not true, as a rule, of the colored population of the United States. I think a very large proportion of the female domestic servants who are colored and who are laboring here in the city of Washington are married. The wife is cook or waitress; the husband is barber or butler or chauffeur. Under the conscription law the moment a butler or chauffeur becomes a soldier $30 is paid over to his wife, who heretofore has been doing something for herself, and thereby for the common good.

Now, let me ask the Senators coming from the Southern States, who know more about this than I do, is she going to do anything further? In most cases will she continue to labor when the Government is paying her $30 a month? I think in a great many cases she will remain at home with folded hands, and the old term "Nellie am a lady" will apply to her case, and there will be so much unexercised human energy that ought to be utilized that the Government and the people will be deprived of.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask the Senator if it is his purpose to make any discrimination as between the colored cooks and waitresses who are engaged in those occupations and those wives who were not so engaged before the war?

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator knows that I would make no discrimination. I am giving this as an argument to show that the result of the bill will in many cases diminish the sum total of American efforts, every ounce of which is needed during this war, and in many instances, when it does not lessen the amount of productive labor, the individual regarded as a dependent will continue in remunerative employment and receive salaries or wages far in excess of many of those who will be called upon by the revenue bill to pay out of their own pockets to make up the amount which will have to be paid to this allottee.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Then I will ask the Senator if it is his purpose to make such limited provision for the widows of our soldiers as will require all of them to go into some kind of employment after the war is over or during the war.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the question requires a little explanation in the answer. We have conducted all our wars heretofore without making provision for the support of those who had to perform the labor at home during the time the soldier was engaged in the war. I think it would have been well during the Civil War if we could have partially, at least, assisted them. I do not think it would have been well, even though we had been able to take care of and would have taken care of able-bodied men and women, to have done so, and thereby deprived the country of their services as laborers or otherwise. What I would do is this: I would define what is meant by a dependent, and I would not say that anyone was a dependent who was fully capable of earning a livelihood—one who, having no other one requiring personal attention, had to his credit youth, health, and capability.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Was it not the purpose of the committee to make the law so as to support the dependent members of the family who are not able to support themselves?

Mr. McCUMBER. It might have been their intention; but if so, they came far from realizing their intention by the mere addition of the word "dependent."

Mr. VARDAMAN. I thought the Senator stated a moment ago that he was going to look up that matter and introduce an amendment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I did look it up, Mr. President. I shall submit the amendment, and I will explain it.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I really think that ought to be done. I agree with the Senator that it is not right to lay taxes on the American people to support an able-bodied man whose sons happen to be serving at the front, or to support a wife and child who are amply able to care for themselves; but I do think where there are dependent mothers or fathers or a dependent wife or children they ought to be supported. I think it will make a better soldier, and I think it makes a better citizen at home of the children to do that.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator and I agree entirely upon that.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I shall be glad to support a measure of that kind.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, let me not be misunderstood. I am in favor of assisting all of those who need assistance. I am in favor of caring for those whose support is taken from them by the action of the Government wherever such support is necessary. But I am not in favor of a proposition that will overindulge those who are able and who in this extremity of our Government ought to labor every day—do their bit every day.

This ought not to be a case in which the soldiers alone must sacrifice. It should be a case in which every individual should do his part. The people at home as well as those at the front should fight this battle. The soldier in the trenches is entitled to be backed not only by a patriotic people but by a people whose patriotism shall be expressed in active service in every line of industry in the United States.

Mr. President, I stated that I had looked up the matter of the meaning of the word "dependent." Heretofore no provision has ever been made for a wife or other dependent during the period of the soldier's service. Provision is made for payment of one-half of soldier's pension to the wife if he has deserted her and she is in necessitous circumstances. "Necessitous circumstances" is defined to mean that she has nothing, or practically nothing, for her support aside from her own individual earnings.

I wish the Senator from Mississippi had remained to get this definition.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I shall be glad to listen to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. The act of June 27, 1890, provided a pension for a widow who should be without other means of support than her daily labor,

That is without reference to whether she is able to perform remunerative labor. The construction placed upon this was that if she had means independent of anything she might earn in excess of the amount of pension, which was $8 per month, she would not be regarded as dependent. Under the pension laws dealing with dependent parents it has been held that if the mother is a widow and has but small means, yielding practically an income of but two or three hundred dollars a year, she would be, under the rules of the Pension Bureau, regarded as dependent. The same would be the rule if she had a husband who was physically incapable of supporting her.

In none of the pension laws is any consideration given to her ability to support herself by her own labor. If she has nothing but what she can individually earn, no matter whether that be much or little, she would have a status for pension.

In other words, taking the case of the school-teacher whom I have mentioned. If she had no income outside of her $1,200 or $1,400 a year that she earned by her own labor, then she would be regarded as a dependent and would be entitled under the provisions of this bill to the extra $30 a month. So the mere use of the word "dependent" in this measure would not prohibit the payment of any of these allowances under subdivision (A), because the allottee is perfectly able to earn his or her own support. That is the reason why I have provided an amendment, which I think ought to go in; but before I offer that I have prepared a statement showing the provisions of the present pension laws and the rules of the Pension Bureau concerning dependency, and that it may at least guide us in the future I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, such will be the order.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PROVISIONS OF PRESENT PENSION LAWS AND RULES OF THE PENSION BUREAU CONCERNING DEPENDENCY.

"The pension laws make no provisions for a wife during the period of her soldier husband's service. In two cases only is a wife provided for in the pension laws after the soldier's discharge, and those only where the soldier is a pensioner: First, if the soldier is insane and he has no guardian or if he is confined in a penitentiary for crime, then the wife may be paid his pension if she is in necessitous circumstances and a woman of good moral character; second, if the soldier is a pensioner, has deserted his wife for six months, she may be paid one-half the pension if she is in necessitous circumstances and a woman of good moral character. Necessitous circumstances is defined to mean that she has nothing or practically nothing for her support aside from her own individual earnings.

"The pension laws now provide pension for widows of soldiers, and there is no limitation at present in respect to property holdings or worth of any kind. Where the soldier's death was due to some cause arising out of service in line of duty there never was any limitation in respect to her means or ability to earn a support to entitle her to a pension.

"When the act of June 27, 1890, was passed it was provided that a widow, to entitle her to pension—and this was a service pension—should be without other means of support than her daily labor. The construction placed on this was that if she had means, independent of anything she might earn, in excess of the amount of pension provided, which was $8 per month, she would not be regarded as dependent.

"On May 9, 1900, this was amended by the act of Congress of that date providing that if the widow did not have an income from property or other holdings in excess of $250 a year she would be entitled to pension.

"In April, 1908, all limitations in respect to property holdings and worth were removed, and at present a widow can get a pension, if otherwise entitled, without regard to her worth, whether it be a dollar or a million dollars.

"In respect to dependent parents, no pension is granted unless the soldier's death was due to military service in line of duty. The order of succession is, first, mother, then father, and finally brothers and sisters under 16 years of age. The dependency of a mother is, of course, connected with what property or other means she may have, and also the ability of her husband, the soldier's father, to support her. If she is a widow and has but small means, yielding practically an income of but two or three hundred dollars a year, she would be, under the rules of the Pension Bureau, regarded as a dependent. The same conclusion would be reached if she had a husband who was physically incapable of supporting her or who had deserted her and refused to support her.

"In none of the pension laws regarding the dependence of either widow or dependent mother is any consideration given to her ability to support herself by her own labor. If she has nothing but what she can individually earn, no matter whether that be much or little, she would have status for pension if all the other conditions of the law were satisfied.

"In regard to the dependence of a mother, another point has always been considered, and that is her relation in life, both before and after the soldier's death, and in what respect the death of the latter worked a material change in her situation. It is an element, of course, always considered in regard to determining whether the mother was wholly or in part dependent upon her son for support.

"There have been, of course, instances in the adjudication of claims in the Pension Bureau where it has been found that a widow, or perhaps a dependent mother, having no property or income or other means aside from her labor, has been receiving a salary in some clerical capacity. But in the absence of any provision in the law that the amount she herself might be able to earn should be considered, pension of course has been granted in accordance with the provisions of the law.

"Appended hereto is a brief statement prepared in the Pension Bureau, showing the proof that is necessary to submit in case of a dependent mother or father, in respect to their financial condition, in order to entitle them to a pension. But as before stated, in respect to the widow of a soldier, either of the Civil or any subsequent war, there now exists no limitation whatever in regard to her property holdings or her ability to support herself by her own labor.

PENSIONS TO DEPENDENT RELATIVES.

"470. Section 4707, Revised Statutes.—To obtain title to pension under this statute, it must be shown that the soldier or sailor died of a disability contracted in the service and in line of duty.

"471. Dependent mothers.—In a mother's claim, her relationship to the soldier or sailor, the date and cause of the son's death, whether he left a widow or minor children surviving, and her dependence on him for support at the time of his death must be shown.

"472. In proof of dependence, it must be shown that previous to the date of the said son's decease her husband had died, or that he had permanently abandoned her, or that on account of disability from injury or disease, he was unable to support her.

"473. If the husband is dead, the date of his death must be proved. If he abandoned the support of his family, the date of the abandonment and all the facts of the case, showing whether he ever returned or ever afterwards contributed to the support of the claimant, must be fully set forth. If any person who is legally bound to contribute to the support of the mother claimant neglect or fail to do so, and the State or local laws afford a remedy, it should be shown whether the claimant has invoked the aid of such laws to compel support. If the father was disabled, the nature and cause of the disability, when, and to what extent it rendered him unable to support the claimant, must be shown by the testimony of his physician. The extent of his disability during the period from the son's death to the present time should also be shown.

"474. The value of the property of the claimant and her husband, the income derived therefrom, and the other means of support possessed by her while she was receiving the contributions of the son on account of whose service and death pension is claimed, and from that time to the present, should be shown by the testimony of credible and disinterested witnesses, who must state how they know the facts. The value of property assessed for taxation may be shown by the testimony of the officer having custody of the records relative thereto, who should also state the ratio of the assessed to the actual or cash value of such property.

"475. It must be shown to what extent, for what period, and in what manner her said son contributed to her support, by the testimony of persons for whom the son labored, to whom he paid rent, of whom he purchased groceries, fuel, clothing, or other necessary articles for the mother's use, or of those who otherwise had a knowledge of the contributions of the son, and who must state how they obtained such knowledge. Any letter from the son, bearing upon the question of support, should be filed. If the son, in any other manner than by actual contributions, acknowledged his obligation to support his mother, or was by law bound to such support, the facts should be shown.

"476. Dependent fathers: In a father's claim for pension on account of the death of a legitimate son upon whom he was dependent for support, there must be proven—

"(1) The cause of his son's death.

"That said son left no widow or minor child surviving.

"The cause and extent of claimant's disability during the period in which the son contributed to his support, and from that time to the present.

"The amount of his property, and all other means of support possessed by him during that period, and the extent of his dependence upon his son for support.

"The facts of the case, in each respect, should be shown by such testimony as is required in the claim of a mother.

"(2) The date of the claimant's marriage to the mother of the soldier or sailor, the date of birth of the son, and the date of the death of said mother must be proved."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask the Senator if it is not true that in the administration of the pension laws much depends upon the attitude taken by the Commissioner of Pensions or the Secretary of the Interior? For instance, at one time in 1894 or 1895 the officers of the Pension Bureau held for a few months that if a woman had an income of $21 a year she was not dependent and would not be given a pension. Later on they held that if her income was more than $8 a month she would not be entitled to a pension. The ruling was changed so often that Congress fixed the amount of the income, so that if the widow had an income of less than $250 a year she was pensionable.

Mr. McCUMBER. That was in 1890.

Mr. CURTIS. It was under the act of 1890, but the law fixing that amount was passed May 9, 1900.

Mr. McCUMBER. What I want to make clear to the Senate is that at no time have we ever held that because a person was able or capable of earning a living, either by mental or physical labor, that that took him out of the definition of dependency, and that is the real point. If we are going outside of what we have ever gone before and are going into new fields whereby we are to give an allowance to everyone who is dependent in view of the past rulings on dependency, then we ought to define that word so that a dependent will mean one who has not the property or income to care for himself or herself or who is incapable of earning a living.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. KING. I was called out of the Chamber, much to my regret, during the discussion of the Senator, and I was wondering whether or not the amendment which he proposes to tender was suggested by him to the committee.

Mr. McCUMBER. It was suggested as I stated, but I did not want to offer it if our Pension Bureau had ever given the word "dependent" a definition that would exclude those who were entirely capable of earning their own support. I found upon examination that that was not true, and it was understood at least that I would have the privilege of presenting an amendment if I so ascertained.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand the Senator, without the amendment which he proposes to tender, the wives of soldiers and sailors who are now receiving large incomes from their own services or otherwise would be denominated or considered dependents and would be permitted to draw the compensation or allowances provided for in this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. If a woman is worth a million dollars, or if she has an income of a million dollars, she would still receive the $30 a month under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. KING. And the amendment which the Senator proposes he thinks will effectually prevent such an injustice and absurdity as that.

Mr. McCUMBER. It would, Mr. President. This is the way the amendment reads. I now offer the amendment. It is to add, after line 13, on page 11, the following under the head of "Definitions":

13. The term "dependent" means (a) any child under 16 years of age; (b) a person who by reason of the care of minor children or other members of his or her immediate family or by reason of physical or mental infirmity is incapacitated from earning a support. Any person who has an income or property from which an income can be derived sufficient for his or her support shall not be regarded as a dependent under the provisions of this act.

I offer that amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. BRADY. I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question relative to his amendment which I have heard read.

Would it not answer the purpose if we were simply to adopt the last clause of the amendment, "any person who has an income or property from which an income can be derived sufficient for his or her support shall not be regarded as a dependent under the provisions of this act." By offering that particular amendment and not interfering with the bill in any other way, it seems to me the Senator would accomplish his purpose and at the same time I think it would stand a great deal better chance of being adopted. It would be, in my judgment, very beneficial if it were adopted. On the other hand, if we attempt to destroy by a special definition other parts of the bill it might be that those who would be glad to support this clause and would be glad to help as much as they can to carry out the purpose of the amendment would still feel constrained to vote against it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I wish to say to the Senator that it would simply partially answer the argument I have made by partially defining a dependent—that one who is able and capable of earning a living physically or mentally shall not be regarded as a dependent. I want a child under 16 years old always to be regarded as a dependent; I want one who is by physical infirmity or mental infirmity incapable of earning a living always to be regarded as a dependent, but I do not want any American citizen during this war who has to his credit youth and strength and vigor and capability for earning a livelihood to say to the Government, "I am a dependent, and therefore I wish to be supported during this war."

Mr. BRADY. My only thought in making the suggestion to the Senator was, if possible, to secure the adoption of the last paragraph of his amendment, which I think is very good.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] has evidently given this bill very careful thought, and I want to ask him a question with reference to the provision of the bill where the soldier is compelled to make an allotment to his wife. I understand the allotment to the wife by the Government is made only upon condition that the soldier allots a certain amount.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. If the soldier commits some little misdemeanor, as soldiers sometimes do, and a court-martial should find him guilty, fine him a month's salary, and commit him to quarters for, say, 30 days, or something of that kind, could his salary be diverted from the support of his family in that way?

Mr. McCUMBER. It could not under the terms of the bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wished that this matter be made clear, because I wanted to provide for the support of the family.

Mr. McCUMBER. The bill is absolute in that respect.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think that is the best provision in the bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. No court-martial can set aside a law of Congress.

Mr. VARDAMAN. No; I know that.

Mr. McCUMBER. And this is the law of Congress—that these payments shall be absolutely made every month.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I am glad to know that there is no doubt on that point.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Secretary kindly state the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 31, line 15, the committee proposes to strike out "$10,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$7,500."

Mr. ROBINSON. Those who favor retaining the $10,000 in the bill will vote "nay." I suppose all Senators understand that.

Mr. SMOOT. And those in favor of the Senate committee amendment will vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I am informed that there is a misunderstanding as to the question at issue. I make a parliamentary inquiry. Those who desire that the maximum amount of insurance be $10,000 will vote "nay," and those who desire that it shall be $7,500 will vote "yea." Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

The Secretary resumed the calling of the roll.

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], but I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] to the junior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when Mr. TOWNSEND'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is unavoidably absent from the Senate on account of illness in his family. I desire the RECORD to disclose that fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Has the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have a pair with that Senator, and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN. I transfer the general pair I have with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. JAMES. My colleague [Mr. BECKHAM] is detained from the Senate by reason of illness in his family.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which I transfer to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING. I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FERNALD. I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. HARDING (after having voted in the affirmative). I note the absence of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], with whom I have a general pair. Because of his absence I will transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. MYERS. I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN], who is necessarily absent on account of illness. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and vote "nay."

Mr. HOLLIS (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], who is absent. I will therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], on account of illness. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce the pair of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON].

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 40, as follows:

So the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section to the bill, as follows:

SEC. 315. That all soldiers, sailors, and marines who are, or who may hereafter become, so totally and permanently helpless from wounds or injuries received or disease contracted in the service and line of duty as to require the regular personal aid and attendance of another person, shall be entitled to receive a pension at the rate of $100 per month from the date of the passage of this act or of the certificate of the examining surgeon or board of surgeons showing such degree of disability made subsequent to the passage of this act.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word. There are at present on the pension rolls 397 soldiers, sailors, and marines who are suffering total and permanent disabilities from wounds or injuries received or disease contracted in the service or in the line of duty. This amendment simply proposes to put them upon the same basis as the present bill provides for those who may be wounded or injured in the present war. The increase from the present rate of $72 a month is $28 per month; the annual increased cost to the Government, if the amendment should be adopted, would be $132,665.04. I sincerely hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that this amendment will not be adopted and that there will be no attempt made at this time to make a vehicle of this bill for the purpose of increasing pensions to soldiers who served in previous wars through which the country has been. I do not intend to argue the merits of this particular proposition. When it is presented in its own light and upon its own strength and its own merits, at the proper time and on the proper bill I am not sure that I would not vote for it; but this is not the time, this is not the proper bill for it, and I do not think that this bill ought to be made an excuse for raising pensions of the Civil War, the Mexican War, and the Spanish-American War. I sincerely hope that the amendment will be voted down.

If the Senator from Utah desires that this sort of legislation shall be enacted he ought to introduce a bill for that purpose, let it go to the Pensions Committee, and let it come in in the proper way. This amendment does not involve a war-emergency matter in any way in the world, nor is it connected with it. When we come back here in December Congress can consider such a proposition upon its merits, together with such other amendments of existing pension laws as some Senators may think would be justified because of the action we are proposing to take in this bill. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. HOLLIS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "nay."

Mr. MCCUMBER (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Announcing my pair as before, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES] and vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING. Transferring my pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], I vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and to state that, if present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who is absent. I will therefore refrain from voting, not being able to obtain a transfer of that pair.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 32, as follows:

So Mr. SMOOT's amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIMMONS and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move to strike out "$5,000" in Article I, line 5, page 2, and insert "$6,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$6,000"; so that it will read, "shall receive a salary at the rate of $6,000 per annum."

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will state that I shall later offer an amendment to strike out in line 11, on the same page, "$4,000" and insert "$5,000," the amendments relating to the salary fixed in the bill for the Director of the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, which is made $5,000, and secondly to the salaries of the commissioners provided for in the bill. The bill provides that the bureau shall be divided into two parts, one of the divisions to be known as the division of marine and seamen's insurance, and the other division that of military and naval insurance. The salary for these two commissioners was fixed in the bill at $4,000.

Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for only a minute or two. The bureau we are about to create will be an exceedingly important one in the scope and the variety of its work; and in a very large sense the work will be of a pioneer character. It covers family allowances and allotments, compensation for injuries, and insurance upon lives. The amount of insurance that is likely to be taken out in itself will exceed probably that issued by several of the largest insurance companies of the country combined.

I want to say now that I was not so fortunate as to be with the committee during its deliberations; I was only able to be present for any length of time at the last meeting of the committee; but the committee, in refusing to raise these salaries were controlled, I think, entirely, or almost entirely, by an idea that seems to have gained currency in the committee that the salaries of like officials of the Government were only $5,000; that the salaries of many of the heads of the larger commissions of the Government are supposed to be only $5,000. I have taken the trouble since the action of the committee to look into that matter, and I am entirely satisfied that the committee acted upon false information with reference to that matter.

I find that a number of officials under the Treasury Department, whose work certainly is not more important than that of these officials will be, receive salaries even higher than $6,000 a year.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue receives a salary of $6,000 a year.

The Surgeon General receives a salary of $6,000 a year.

A number of collectors of customs receive salaries of $6,000 a year, and even above that.

The Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing receives a salary of $6,000.

The Comptroller of the Treasury receives a salary of $6,000.

The Chief Bank Examiner receives a salary of $6,000.

The following officials in other departments receive higher salaries:

The Commissioner of Mediation and Conciliation receives a salary of $7,500.

The Director of the Geological Survey receives a salary of $6,000.

The Director of the Bureau of Mines receives a salary of $6,000.

The Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds receives a salary of $6,000.

The Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey receives a salary of $6,000.

The Director of the Census receives a salary of $6,000.

It is clear, I think, Mr. President, that the duties of the director of the great bureau we are about to create, duties that will take him into an untried field, duties of great complication and variety as well as scope, require very much more skill, technical knowledge, and I might say even ability, than are required in the discharge of the duties of some of the positions in the Government for which we pay salaries of $6,000.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should like to ask the Senator a question in regard to the officers that he has read that receive salaries of five or six thousand dollars and more.

Mr. SIMMONS. None less than $6,000 that I read.

Mr. SHIELDS. None less than $6,000. Is it not more a question that those salaries should be reduced than that the salary provided in this bill should be raised?

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, that is as the Senator may look at the matter.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will ask the Senator if it is not a fact that within his own State—I know it is in my State—a hundred men can be found that are able to discharge the duties of these offices as ably and efficiently as anybody, and that will be glad to take them for the salaries here stated? I will ask the Senator if he can not find men in North Carolina that will do it?

Mr. SIMMONS. I can find 5,000 men in North Carolina who would be willing to take the position of Senator of the United States for one-half of the salary that the Government pays us.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Senator has not answered my question. I asked him whether he could not find 100 men in his State who could discharge these duties ably and efficiently who would take the positions for the salaries here fixed?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not know. I can not answer that question. I am satisfied there are some men in North Carolina, as I am satisfied there are some men in Tennessee and in every other State in the Union, who could fill this office creditably, and probably would be willing to take it for $6,000, or even less than $6,000; but that is no criterion by which to fix a salary. The question whether there are not many men or many hundreds or many thousands of men who would be willing to take a position at a certain salary is not a question that the Senate of the United States should regard as controlling in the matter of salaries.

I want to say to the Senator from Tennessee that, in my judgment, whatever might have been said about the salaries that the United States Government has been paying during past years, when conditions were different from what they are now, I do not believe that the United States Government is paying to its officials to-day any higher salaries than it ought to pay. On the contrary, I believe that in many instances the United States Government ought to increase the salaries that it is paying. I believe further, Mr. President, that with reference to many of the great offices of this Government, offices requiring high technical skill, offices requiring special training and education, the fact that the United States Government is paying such small salaries is interfering with its getting good and efficient and competent men. All three of these places require men of ability to fill them.

Mr. President, I do not want to get into any argument; but I really do believe that $6,000 for the head of this great department and $5,000 each for the two men who are to administer the affairs of these two positions is little enough.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I desire to read a telegram that I have received from Chicago, dated October 2, from the Secretary of the Treasury to myself, in which he says:

Senator SIMMONS,
Washington, D. C.:

I urge most earnestly that salaries of the director and two commissioners under insurance bill be placed at six and five thousand dollars, respectively. It is a great mistake to put the salaries of the commissioners, particularly, at $4,000, as it will make it impossible to command the kind of ability we shall need for these important positions.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senate that the amount of $5,000, as fixed in the House bill, is only carrying out a policy that has obtained in Congress for many, many years. It is true that during the last three years we have created in the Government a number of commissions, and I suppose the word "commission" has had some unknown influence on the minds of Congressmen that was sufficient for them to vote for salaries of the members of those commissions that can not be justified when compared with the salaries of other men working in other departments of this Government; and I think now that it would be an injustice to many of the most devoted public servants receiving but $5,000 to-day if we should increase the salary of the director from $5,000 to $6,000.

We ought to stop and think that every Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, of the State Department, and of every other department of our Government, is receiving but $5,000 per annum.

The Auditor for the Treasury Department is receiving $4,000.

The Auditor for the Navy Department is receiving $4,000.

The Auditor for the Interior Department is receiving $4,000.

The Auditor for the Post Office Department is receiving $5,000.

The Assistant Treasurer is receiving only $3,600 per year.

The register of the Treasury is receiving only $4,000 a year.

The Comptroller of the Currency is receiving $5,000 a year.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Ten thousand dollars.

Mr. SMOOT. No; the salary, as provided in the legislative appropriation bill, of the Comptroller of the Currency is $5,000 a year. That has been the salary of the Comptroller of the Currency for years.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It is $12,000 now.

Mr. SMOOT. That is only because the Comptroller of the Currency now acts upon the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But he does that now, and therefore he gets the salary.

Mr. SMOOT. Not as a salary for the Comptroller of the Currency. The appropriations that are now made and that have been made for the Comptroller of the Currency for years and years and years past have been at the rate of $5,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But it is more now.

Mr. SMOOT. The Director of the Mint receives $5,000.

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs receives $5,000.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office, with this great, vast domain of country under his control, receives $5,000.

And so, Mr. President, I could go through all of the bureaus of this Government. I say now that if we increase this salary to $6,000 the salaries of all of these other heads of bureaus ought to be increased to $6,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, I know the Senator from North Carolina will say, perhaps, that they ought to be; but I want to say that there has been no effort upon the part of Congress to change the amount that has been paid these officials, and we all know that the men that hold these positions not only under this administration but under all former administrations are men that are worth more than $5,000. An important consideration is the honor that is attached to the positions, just the same as we may say with reference to position of a Senator of the United States. There is hardly a Senator but what could make more than $7,500 in private life; but there is the honor attached to the position, and so it will be with this position.

Mr. President, I know it has been said that it requires a man of exceedingly great ability and of special education to discharge these duties. I do not think there is going to be any change in the personnel of the present head of this War-Risk Insurance Bureau.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, does not the Senator know that that man is now getting $5,000, and does he not think that when we pay him $5,000 for discharging the duties connected with the present War-Risk Insurance Bureau, which involves only insurance to the amount of $75,000,000, when we add to his duties all the requirements of this legislation he ought to have an increase in his present salary?

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to the Senator I will say that the director will do no more work, in my opinion, than he is doing now, but he will have—I can not tell how many—employees under him to do it. The number of employees are unlimited in this bill. He can have actuaries to any number; he can have experts to any number; he can have other employees of any sort in any number, and the only limit is in certain cases, and then only to $20 per day.

So, Mr. President, I can not see now why we are going to undertake to increase the salary from $5,000 to $6,000 for the director of a bureau which is not yet in working condition and at the same time appropriate only $5,000 for the heads of the great bureaus of this Government, and the Assistant Secretaries of State and of the Treasury and all of the departments of our Government. I do not believe it can be justified, and I shall vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I am going to vote for the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina because I think it is right. The responsibility of this office will be very great. The head and director of this office will carry the responsibility for marine insurance business. He will carry the responsibility for the compensation statutes that we have enacted. He will carry the responsibility for a great life insurance business that we have created. Why, Senators, there is not a man anywhere in the United States who will be carrying such business responsibilities that does not receive a salary vastly larger than this.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and I have agreed in resisting a number of extreme increases and high salaries, and, generally speaking, I am with him on that proposition. I was with him in fighting carrying the compensation of these board members above $7,500, and I still agree with him about it. I do not think there is a member of one of these boards who has as responsible a position as the director of this marine and life insurance business that we intend to conduct, and this compensation business that we intend to conduct. It is a new field of work. It requires a high order of administrative capacity.

I am aware of the fact that there are a number of assistant secretaries who fill their offices just as we fill ours in the Senate, are glad to have them, are careless about the compensation, and would be perfectly willing to serve if there were not any compensation at all; but they are serving temporarily. They do not contemplate making this a life work. The man who takes charge of this business ought to take it to stay with it, organize it, and to continue to handle it. He occupies an entirely different position from an Assistant Secretary of State or an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. Few men take the position of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury except with the purpose of acquiring the acquaintance, having the broadened experience, having the honor, and returning to their own work at the end of a few years. This, however, is an entirely different thing.

Mr. President, under the supervision of this officer we are to pay out millions and millions of dollars. I am almost jarred at the thought of what we may pay. This man is to select, largely, the force that is to help him administer these responsible duties. Are we to higgle over a thousand dollars in his salary when the proposed salary, suggested originally by the Secretary of the Treasury in the bill, and now urged by the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, is only $6,000?

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should like to ask the Senator what salary the Commissioner of Pensions receives now?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think $5,000; but I do not think the responsibility of his position compares with the responsibility of this one.

Mr. SHIELDS. Under his management, how much is paid out now, annually?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Under his management there is paid out $150,000,000 a year.

Mr. SHIELDS. In view of the former legislation that we are amending, the salary of this director is now fixed at $5,000, is it not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, the salary of the Director of the Marine Insurance Bureau is $5,000.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is the officer whose salary we are proposing to raise. Under the present law that we are now proposing to amend by this bill there is no such bureau as provided in this section, called a division of marine and seaman's insurance and a division of military and naval insurance, in charge of a commissioner of marine and seaman's insurance and a commissioner of military and naval insurance, for which salaries of $4,000 each are provided. They are new officers entirely.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. The present director performs all the duties now.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all.

Mr. SHIELDS. And these two men are brought in to assist him in the additional duties put upon him.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all. None of the duties indicated by these officers exist now.

Mr. SHIELDS. That is exactly what I said. At present he is discharging all the duties under the present law.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. At present he is discharging all the duties of his present office, but not the duties that are to be discharged by the men whom the Senator names.

Mr. SHIELDS. Certainly not, because there is no law imposing them at this time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Precisely.

Mr. SHIELDS. And that was not implied in the question; but he is discharging all the duties of marine insurance now without any assistance.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. This law imposes new duties upon him, and it gives him two assistants, where he had none before, with salaries of $4,000 each. Is not that a fact?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHIELDS. Is it not a fact that this law gives him those two assistants to aid him in discharging these new duties?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But he had assistance before, and very substantial assistance.

Mr. SHIELDS. Still, that is no answer to my question.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will ask the Senator to finish his question, then.

Mr. SHIELDS. Is he not given two new assistants to assist him in discharging the new duties?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Wait a moment. He is given two assistants to assist him in discharging the duties that will be placed upon him. He now has assistants in discharging the duties at present placed upon him. His present duties are vastly less. In my judgment, they do not amount to one-tenth of the duties incident to this new responsibility that will attach to and be administered in the Treasury Department.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I now yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think he has a force now of some 25 or 30 persons.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. And I think one of his assistants now gets a salary of $4,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. They are not assistants. They are just clerks.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, one of his clerks gets $4,000, and is his assistant. He has handled with wonderful success the marine insurance business, but that marine insurance business is not comparable in size to the life insurance business we are putting on here, and the life insurance business is even more a new line of business, to be built up and created under the supervision of whoever has charge of this bureau. I do not know who is to have it. I do not know that this representative of the Government at the head of the marine insurance is to have it at all. I have never heard suggested the name of the person who was to have the place. I am dealing with it solely from the standpoint and from the view that a man who fills such a place is receiving a very small salary when you fix it at $6,000.

The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] asked the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] if he could not name a number of men from his State who would take the position for $5,000. I could not name a man from my State who could fill it, and who is prepared to fill it, who would take it for $5,000. I do not know a really successful life-insurance man in Georgia who would take it for $5,000. The heads of the successful life-insurance organizations in the State make several times that, and the same is also true with reference to fire insurance. I do think that the man who takes that place and comes here to carry these vast responsibilities ought to have enough to nearly pay his expenses, and $500 a month will not give him any liberal living in Washington—not any extravagant living. I just feel that for us to decline to allow these very reasonable salaries asked by the Secretary of the Treasury is to economize in a little sum which may lessen the efficiency of an enormous undertaking.

Mr. SIMMONS. And it only adds $3,000 to the entire expense of the administration.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It only adds $3,000 to the entire expense of administration of a bill that will distribute millions and millions and millions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not want the Senate to remain under the impression that it possibly might remain under in consequence of what was said by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] a moment ago.

As the bill reads, the bureau and its divisions are to have "such deputies, assistants, actuaries, clerks, and other employees as may be from time to time provided by Congress." Then, later on, this language occurs after one more intervening sentence:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to establish an advisory board consisting of three members skilled in the practice of insurance against death or disability for the purpose of assisting—

And so forth.

Compensation for the persons so appointed to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, but not to exceed $20 a day each while actually employed.

So that there is not "an unlimited number of people" to be appointed. In the first place, they are limited by the $20,000 appropriation. They are limited further by the language of the bill. The people who get not to exceed $20 a day are the specially skilled men mentioned in the last sentence of that section—only three, not an unlimited number.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that that is exactly what I said. The three members are limited to $20 a day each.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That was what the Senator undoubtedly intended to say; but I think the impression left upon the mind of the Senate, that I wish to dissipate, is that they thought the bureau might select any number of people whose salaries would not exceed $20 a day each. It is only three.

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, well, Mr. President, under the language of the bill, as to the actuaries and the assistants and the deputies, there is no limit at all placed upon them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Except $20,000 with which to pay them.

Mr. SMOOT. There is not any $20,000 limitation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And he could not select many at $20 a day without spending the $20,000.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no $20,000 appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is $20,000 appropriated for the expenses of administration.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, I want to say a few other things about the matter.

As a member of the subcommittee I voted for this raise in salary, raising five thousand to six, and four thousand to five.

The matter was pretty fully discussed in the subcommittee and in the committee. The majority of the committee disagreed with the report of the subcommittee. The subcommittee itself reported in favor of $6,000 and $5,000. The committee reduce it to $5,000 and $4,000. I thought then, and I think now, that the salaries of $6,000 and $5,000 are more nearly commensurate with the duties of these two places.

As to who shall fill the place I do not know, but undoubtedly if the present head of marine insurance is kept there as the head of that division his salary will be reduced from what it is now, $5,000, to $4,000, unless this amendment prevails. If they appoint a new man as the director and keep the present head of marine insurance in the first position, he is now getting $5,000 and he will then receive $4,000, and that will be a reduction of his salary. If he is made head of the entire business and made director, he will get what he is getting now, and then each of the chiefs of these two divisions will get $4,000. That is what the chief clerk is getting now, and they would not get a cent more than the chief clerk, who is the assistant now to the Director of Marine Insurance—an anomaly and a thing inadvisable.

It was agreed in committee that upon this question each member was to vote as he chose. I shall vote the opinion which I have entertained all the time, because of that fact; but as to other matters, being in charge of the bill I consider myself as being in honor bound to vote to sustain the committee. However, where we agreed to disagree on the floor of the Senate, as in this case, I am at liberty to vote my own original opinion.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I should like to say just a word upon this amendment. I feel that the man who occupies this position ought to have a salary of more than $5,000, but there are many other officials of the Government who are occupying positions just as responsible who are not getting over $5,000 a year.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the Senator permit me? Is it not also true that there are a number of officials occupying positions of no higher dignity or greater responsibility who are getting $6,000?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. That is quite true; and some of those officials, heads of bureaus, who are getting $6,000 a year are under the supervision of assistant secretaries who are getting only $5,000 a year.

When the salaries of the various assistant secretaries was fixed at $5,000 a year Members of Congress were getting only $5,000 a year, but the salaries of Members of Congress have been raised to $7,500, and the salaries of these officials have not been put upon the same basis. As far as their pay is concerned they have not had their salaries increased.

I do not propose to vote to put the salary of an official of an important bureau beyond $5,000 a year until we can raise these other salaries. I say, the salary of the official who occupies this position ought to be greater than $5,000 a year; I doubt if $6,000 is enough for the position; but with all the assistant secretaries of the various departments getting only $5,000 a year, I do not believe in singling out a position of this kind and giving a salary beyond $5,000 a year. Not only the assistant secretaries but the Commissioner of Pensions, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and various other heads of responsible and important bureaus are not getting over $5,000 a year.

I want to say now that I am going to vote against putting this salary beyond $5,000, and at the next session of Congress I am going to do all I can to raise the salary of this official to $6,000 as well as the salary of a lot of others. The salaries of assistant secretaries ought to be $7,500 a year. The Assistant Attorneys General of the Government have had their salaries increased to $7,500, and there is no reason why the assistant secretaries of the other departments should not receive $7,500 a year. I will join with the Senator from North Carolina next winter to raise the salary of this director along with the salaries of some of the others to the sum they ought to be. But until we can do that I am opposed to putting this salary beyond $5,000.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. President, the position to be occupied by the director to be named under this act is one of very great importance, and in order to have the law administered properly it will be necessary that we shall receive the services of the very best man possible for us to procure.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. BRADY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to ask the Senator to point out in the bill what duties will be imposed upon this director which are beyond the ordinary administrative duties of the various departments?

Mr. WILLIAMS. He is to organize a brand new branch of service.

Mr. BRADY. I will be very glad to point out the duties of the director, but before doing so may I state that my position in this matter is just the reverse of that of the Senator from New Mexico? I fully concur with him in his statement that the salaries of the assistant secretaries are not sufficient and that they should be raised, and on every occasion when the subject has been presented to this body I have voted for increasing their salaries. I remember an instance where we brought in a recommendation from the committee to increase the salary of the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture from $5,000 to $6,000. It was voted down. We lost that assistant secretary, and when we did so we lost a $10,000 man simply because we would not give him the reasonable increase of $1,000 a year.

The Senator from New Mexico asks me why is this a more important position than that of an assistant secretary. I answer because it is a business position. This man will have the same duties to perform, the same responsibilities, that the manager of one of the great life insurance companies has if he performs his duties properly and is capable of properly performing them.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. BRADY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to suggest a few things in which the responsibility of the position will not be so great as that of the president of an insurance company.

Mr. BRADY. I should be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Take a great life insurance company like the New York Life or the Equitable. They have some four or five hundred million dollars of assets to invest from year to year. This director will have no such investment to make. The president of one of those life insurance companies also has to keep track of the mortality of men, to know where they are going to provide the money with which to pay the policies when they become due. They must have charge of the reserves, to estimate from year to year the amount of reserves which must be kept. All those things are fixed in this bill. The amount of insurance which will be carried upon the risk of any life is to be governed by the judgment of the president of the life insurance company, but in the bill everything which the director has got to do is specifically pointed out, and it is nothing but an administrative position, and a position which any man of administrative ability can fill. There is no reason on earth why he should have any knowledge of life insurance.

Mr. BRADY. I can not agree with the Senator in that statement at all. I believe if we put a man at the head of this bureau who does not understand life insurance, who does not understand business methods, who does not understand the making of computations and things of that character, he may lose more in a single day than his salary will amount to in a year. What are the duties this man will have to perform? The president of a life insurance company has by his side the chairman of the board to assist him, and back of that 12 to 15 directors, the very best business men in America. Those men name a general manager of the life insurance company and pay him from $25,000 to $100,000 a year. If this bureau is properly administered it will require the same splendid talent that is required in the case of a life insurance company. The Senator from New Mexico asks me what are the duties to be performed under this act. They are very great, indeed. It says in section 13:

> That the director, subject to the general direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall administer, execute, and enforce the provisions of this act, and for that purpose have full power and authority to make all rules and regulations—

He will have charge of the whole system of insurance of these millions and millions of dollars we have been speaking of to-day. As the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has said, it is liable to amount to $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 a year, and is not a man making those rules and regulations and administering this important law entitled to the paltry sum of $6,000 a year? Further than that, he is to make all rules and regulations—> not inconsistent with the provisions of this law, necessary or appropriate to carry out its purposes, and shall decide all questions arising under the act.

This is a great responsibility and will require the services of a competent and high-class man. Before the war is ended he will deal with 2,000,000 claimants, making every rule and regulation and deciding all questions. Do you not believe that it is worth $6,000? The Senator from New Mexico believes it, but he will not vote for it because others will not vote as he wants them to vote on another question and as I want them to vote on that other question.

I have had some experience in business, and have watched the course of business men, and through the pathway of life you will see the man who has to hire the chiefs of a department, the heads of a bureau, will pay them sufficient salaries to properly support themselves and their families. They are the business men who succeed. Just so it is with governmental affairs. If we pay these men salaries that are commensurate to the work then you will get men worth while.

It is my wish to see this bill a success. I want to see these soldiers and their widows protected. We have made amendments to the bill which make it one of the best measures, as I said yesterday, that shall have been passed by this Congress.

We have taken the right away from the man himself to say that he shall receive his insurance in a lump sum and we have said that it shall be paid to his dependents in installments, under rules and regulations of the director, and that it shall be paid to his children and his dependent wife in certain stated amounts. This director will decide those questions. We want them decided right, and they are not going to be decided right by merely a good man, no matter how good, or by merely an economical man or a well-trained man, no matter how good his intentions are, unless he has the ability to perform his duties properly.

Let us reason for a moment relative to the position of the Senator from New Mexico, for whom I have the highest regard. He says that the director is entitled to a salary of $6,000 a year, that his position is worth $6,000 a year, but that he will not vote for giving him $6,000 a year until we pass a law raising the salaries of the Assistant Secretaries of the different departments to $6,000 a year.

On the other hand, my position is that I believe that the services of this director is worth $6,000 a year, and I am going to vote to give him $6,000 a year, and at the same time I am ready and willing to vote with the Senator from New Mexico to raise the salaries of the assistant secretaries to the point where we can get good men who are capable of serving the Government efficiently.

For that reason, Mr. President, I believe that we are doing ourselves an injustice and an injustice to the men who are going to handle the affairs to be administered by this director if we do not place a man in this position who is worth while and competent, and I do not believe that that can be done for less than $6,000 a year.

This is more than the assistant secretaries of a department receive, but they have certain allotted duties to perform. The Commissioner of Pensions has routine work to do. Many of the other men are in the same position. But here is an actual business transaction. The director will handle at least from three hundred to five hundred million dollars a year with the fate and happiness and comfort of the wives and children of our soldiers depending upon his good judgment and management. Let us be fair and liberal with him as we wish him to be to our soldiers and dependents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

Mr. SMOOT. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], which I transfer to the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and vote "nay."

So the amendment of Mr. SIMMONS was rejected.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to a committee amendment, which was agreed to yesterday, on page 20. This language was inserted in the bill by that amendment:

But no compensation shall be paid if the injury or disease has been caused by his own willful misconduct.

I want to ask the Senator from Mississippi if he would object to an amendment as follows: On line 11, page 20, before the word "willful," to insert the word "serious," so that it will read:

But no compensation shall be paid if the injury or disease has been caused by his own serious willful misconduct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I can not accept that amendment. That language is in the House bill, and the subcommittee of the Finance Committee took it out. The committee discussed the matter very fully, and they thought it ought to be left out, because there is no definite meaning of the word "serious." "Willful misconduct" in matters of military discipline is pretty well understood, and we thought it was better to leave it as it is.

Mr. ROBINSON. Then, Mr. President, I offer the following amendment: On page 20, line 5, I move to strike out the words "in the line of duty"; and I want to be heard on the amendment for just a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, line 5, it is proposed to strike out the words "in the line of duty"; so that, if amended, it will read:

That for death or disability resulting from personal injury suffered or disease contracted by any commissioned officer—

And so forth.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in line 7, on page 20, it is provided "when employed in the active service under the War Department or Navy Department," and so forth.

In line 10 is the provision which I read a moment ago, when I asked the Senator from Mississippi to consent to the insertion of the word "serious." Three or four different departments of the Government have construed differently the words "in the line of duty," and it will impose the duty of making investigations; it will deprive the dependents of a soldier who may be injured or killed while on a furlough or on a leave of absence of the right of compensation if the construction is placed upon this language which has been placed upon it by some of the departments.

I realize, Mr. President, that the time for debate has almost expired, and that, under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into on yesterday, we shall proceed in a few minutes to vote upon the bill and all amendments pending and that may be offered without further debate; and I know that there are some Senators who have amendments pending that have not been even considered by the committee, which they want to discuss.

In connection with this amendment I want also to point out one or two other objections to amendments which were agreed to yesterday without debate and without specific consideration by the Senate; and I desire to express the hope that these mistakes may be rectified in the committee of conference. Under the parliamentary situation it will not be practicable to secure a reconsideration of these several amendments.

On page 32, line 25, and on page 33, line 1, the Senate committee inserted the word "dependent" before the word "brother" and before the word "sister." I maintain, Mr. President, that that language is very ambiguous, and that this amendment will needlessly embarrass administration. It will be impossible for the persons who are charged with the duty of construing and applying this language to determine when the state of dependency must exist in order to entitle the soldier's dependents to the relief provided in the bill. It is very confusing.

The language of the bill does not say whether the brother or sister must be dependent at the time the insurance is taken out, or whether he or she must be dependent at the time of the payment of the policy or during the course of the maturity of the policy.

In addition to that, it will impose upon the department enforcing this provision an enormous amount of work, and will probably involve many of the soldiers or their dependents in litigation in the courts. I think that the Senator from Mississippi ought to consent to the elimination of that amendment, or that the conferees should reject it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Arkansas is speaking of a number of amendments which were adopted without debate; and I should like to inquire of him if he has considered the amendment of the committee on page 22, line 14, where it says that—

The word "widow" as used in this section shall include only one who shall have married the deceased within 10 years after the time of injury.

I should like to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to that amendment. It may be that there is sufficient reason for that limitation of the meaning of the word "widow," but I do not understand it. Where you provide for the payment of compensation to the widow of a soldier who is killed or who dies from the result of his injuries, you have in the bill a provision that it can not be paid to anybody except a woman who married him after the injury, which would be after his death, if he is killed, as I understand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; the Senator, I think, is under a misapprehension, and when we reach that I will try to explain it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in reply to the inquiry of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], I did not have in mind the amendment to which he has referred, but I stated that there were several amendments which I thought ought to be modified or eliminated from this bill. I have offered an amendment to strike out the words "in the line of duty," and I have given some of the reasons why I think they should be stricken out.

I desire now to refer to the amendment which denies the field clerks the benefits of this bill. Field clerks, under the pension laws, are construed to be entitled to relief, and I am utterly unable to comprehend why the committee seeks to deny them the benefits of the bill.

I ask the Senator from Mississippi concerning the amendment now pending, striking out the words "in the line of duty," if he does not feel that the insertion of the committee amendment which was referred to awhile ago, providing that no compensation shall be paid if the injury or death results from the willful misconduct of the soldier, is a sufficient limitation and that the words "in the line of duty" might appropriately be eliminated?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in reply to the question I answer that I think not. The phrase "in the line of duty" is well known; it has been frequently construed, and is used in the pension laws of the country. There might be cases where a soldier was injured or killed and the injury or death be not at all connected with his service as a soldier, and yet the death not brought on by his own willful misconduct. I will say to the Senator frankly that our main reason for putting the words in was the fact that they had been used in soldiers' bills almost from time immemorial, and we thought they had been construed and had their proper meaning, and that it was well to carry the phrase here.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will state to the Senator——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator will notice that the House put in the words "in the course of the service in the line of duty." We thought that narrowed it too much, and that perhaps a question might arise as to whether or not a man on a furlough was in the course of his service. So we struck that out and left in the phrase "in the line of duty."

Mr. ROBINSON. I will state to the Senator from Mississippi that it is true that the words "in the line of duty" have been construed, but that is the difficulty about putting the words in this bill, for they have been construed differently by four different branches of the Government—by the Judge Advocate General's office, by the Pension Bureau, by the Attorney General, and by the courts—and the constructions placed upon the meaning of those words are not in any sense harmonious, but are conflicting.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, Judge Mack, who drew up this bill, presented the very arguments that my friend from Arkansas is now presenting. He was very persistent about it. The subcommittee and the committee considered them thoroughly, and I do not feel that I am at liberty to strike out the words; in fact, I disagreed with him then, and I disagree with him now.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator that if those words are stricken out, then an officer or an enlisted man might go anywhere, get into trouble, and be injured in any way—he might even get drunk and go off and engage in a brawl——

Mr. ROBINSON. No.

Mr. SMOOT. Or he might commit some other improper act outside of "the line of duty," and yet receive the benefits of this act. What the United States wants is to compensate the soldier for any injuries he may receive on account of being a soldier. The words "in the line of duty," Mr. President, are used in pension acts; they are well understood; they have been construed by the Pension Department now for nearly three or four years, and no question has arisen as to what they really mean.

I will say further to the Senator, that that is why so many private pension bills come to Congress seeking special pensions, where the injury was occasioned outside of the line of duty. If time permitted I might call the attention of the Senator to many such cases that have been acted upon by the Senate itself. I repeat that if those words go out I think we shall have more trouble, more contention, and more wrong done in the way of paying unjust compensation or claims than could possibly come from any construction that might be put upon the words by the Auditor of the Treasury Department.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Utah, I am satisfied that I can convince him that his argument is erroneous in this particular: He assumes the case of a soldier who becomes drunk, provokes a brawl, and is injured, and the Senator said that if the words "in the line of duty" went out of the bill such soldier, under those conditions, could recover compensation. That is not the case, Mr. President, because that would be willful misconduct, which would bar the soldier from recovering under the amendment that has already been agreed to. If the words "in the line of duty" go out of the bill, it will simply say that while a soldier is in the service of the Army of the United States, whether he is at the battle front or on furlough or on leave of absence, so long as he is conducting himself properly, if he suffers disability or is killed, then his dependents are entitled to compensation.

The language which has already been agreed to narrows it so that no soldier and no dependent of a soldier who is guilty of willful misconduct which brings about his death or injury can receive any of the benefits of this bill; and to strike out the words "in the line of duty" will simply obviate the necessity for placing a construction upon that language which, as I have said, has already been construed in different ways by various departments of the Government. I am unable to tell how this new bureau will construe it. The elimination of the words will prevent confusion and will tend toward simplicity; such action will give any man who wears the uniform of the United States in the service of his country the right to compensation so long as he is not guilty of willful misconduct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the chairman of the committee. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a new section of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, at the end of the bill, a new section, as follows:

SEC. 406. That section 8 of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, shall be held and construed to authorize the President, in accordance with the provisions of said act, and for the period of the existing emergency only, to appoint as generals the Chief of Staff and the commander of the United States forces in France, and as lieutenant general each commander of an Army or Army corps organized as authorized by existing law: Provided, That the pay of the grades of general and lieutenant general shall be $10,000 and $9,000 a year, respectively, with allowances appropriate to said grades, as determined by the Secretary of War: And provided, That brigadier generals of the Army shall hereafter rank relatively with rear admirals of the lower half of the grade; and hereafter the chief of any existing staff corps, department, bureau, except as is otherwise provided for the Chief of Staff, shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of major general.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I desire to say to the chairman of the committee that this amendment has been drafted by the Secretary of War in the form of a bill as his recommendation to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Secretary appeared before the committee and made the following recommendations, to which the committee has unanimously agreed:

In the first place, Gen. Pershing, now in command in France, is outranked by field marshals, by generals, and by lieutenant generals; and a situation has arisen which involves considerable embarrassment in having the commander of the United States forces so outranked.

In the second place, the Secretary said it was inadvisable to have the Chief of Staff in Washington issuing orders to a general unless he had the same rank; so he recommends that the Chief of Staff here, with large responsibilities, who issues orders under the instructions of the Secretary of War, but in his own name, should also have that rank.

Then he calls attention to the fact that the commanders of divisions of the American Army in France should have the rank of lieutenant general in order to correspond with the rank of commanders of corps in the French army.

Then he calls attention to the fact that in the War Department the staff corps, as at present organized, consists of three major generals—that is, the Quartermaster General, the Surgeon General, and the Chief of Coast Artillery. All the other heads of bureaus having equally important duties are brigadier generals, including, for instance, the Chief of Ordnance, The Adjutant General, the Judge Advocate General—who has just finished such a tremendous work in superintending the carrying into effect of the law under which our Army has been organized—the Inspector General, the Chief of Engineers, the Chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, and the Chief of the Signal Corps.

The Secretary therefore has recommended to the committee, and the committee has unanimously incorporated in this bill, a provision that the President shall be empowered to raise these other chiefs of bureaus to the same rank as those already held.

I ask the chairman of the committee whether the provisions of this bill can be accepted as an amendment, as otherwise it will be impossible to act upon this measure at this session.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, believing that this does fall naturally within the class of war-emergency measures, and knowing the condition at the other end of the Capitol, rendering it impossible to get the measure through as separate legislation at this session of Congress, I am perfectly willing to make no opposition to its going in the bill as the last section of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether the lack of mere social precedence that is designed to be met by this amendment in any way interferes with the authority of Gen. Pershing, or his effectiveness in carrying out the duties which are imposed upon him under the laws of war?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if I thought this involved nothing but social duties or the embarrassments of social life, of course I should not stand for it three minutes by the watch, or three seconds, either, for that matter; but it involves a question of rank as between nations. Now, here are the men. They are at the front. Here is our chief commander, inferior in every way to their commander. The embarrassment will be a military embarrassment, a disciplinary embarrassment. I do not think it is obnoxious to the objection made by the Senator. If it were, of course I would not consent to vote for it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think it may be said that in the eyes of every true American Gen. Pershing ranks considerably ahead of the Kaiser, and ought to be so ranked; but at the same time I do not think we ought to be legislating in this bill in order to secure certain social rankings between American officers and any aristocratic rule of precedence that may be adopted by foreign countries. As long as Gen. Pershing and our American soldiers and officers are over there for the one and single purpose of achieving victory in this war, I think we might well stop there, and deal with this matter of social precedence in other legislation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think it is proper to reply to the Senator's question, because it is practically the same question that I put to the Secretary of War myself. I asked whether this was a mere matter of social precedence, or whether it had a military value. He replied emphatically that it had a military value; that when Gen. Pershing was seated about the council table with these other officers he would be compelled, under the international practice, to take the lowest rank. I want to call the Senator's attention, furthermore, to the fact that these provisions are to last only during the war; that the bill is drawn in such a way that these promotions last only during the war.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, does the Senator mean to tell the Senate that Gen. Pershing at any table can not express the views and sentiments of the American people and this administration in the conduct of this war?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not any desire to discuss the question.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask the Senator as a fair question to be answered whether or not, by reason of the lack of this precedence, which is purely social, Gen. Pershing can not at any and all times present the demands and the requirements and the position of this country?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not any doubt but that Gen. Pershing will be able to take care of himself, Mr. President; and I, for one, would not stand here supporting anything that had for its basis a mere social precedence. But I believe it is of substantial importance that this country should endow its commanding general on the other side with sufficient rank to put him on a level with those with whom he comes in contact.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. VARDAMAN. The Secretary of War asks that this be done, as I understand. Is that the case?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is. He makes a very urgent recommendation to that effect.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I do not see, then, how there can be any hesitancy about complying with his request.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. NEW. If the Senator from Nebraska will permit me, by way of further answer to that question, is it not true that the advice and recommendation of a lieutenant general carries with it more weight, and would have greater consideration at a council made up of generals of all the nations, than the recommendations of a mere major general, as Pershing is now?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In answer to the Senator from Indiana I will say that I think none of us are free from the impression which comes with rank, particularly when it is given to a man in a great emergency by a great country.

Mr. NEW. Furthermore, it might be said that this is not intended for Gen. Pershing as an individual. It is for the general in command of the American Army in France, whoever that general may be.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I stated when the last amendment was voted down, as to the Director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, that I would offer an amendment to increase the salaries of the two commissioners. Those salaries are fixed in the bill at $4,000. These are not old offices; they are new offices; so that some of the objections made to the increase in the salary of the director would not obtain as to the amount of salary allowed to these new officials.

I do not wish to argue the question, but I shall be glad if Senators will give me their attention while I read again and call their attention to the part of the Secretary's telegram in which he emphasizes this phase of the matter. He says:

> I urge most earnestly that salaries of the director and two commissioners under insurance bill be placed at six and five thousand dollars, respectively. It is a great mistake to put the salaries of the commissioners, particularly, at $4,000, as it will make it impossible to command the kind of ability we shall need for these important positions.

Evidently the Secretary thinks it is very much more important that the salaries of these two commissioners shall be fixed at more than $4,000 than that the salary of the director shall be raised to $6,000. I am not going to move that the salaries of the commissioners be fixed as high as the salary of the director, but I do intend to move that the salaries of the two commissioners be fixed at $4,500 each. I am not going to discuss the matter, but I should like to have a vote of the Senate upon it.

I move, Mr. President, to strike out "$4,000," in line 11, page 2, and to insert in lieu thereof "$4,500."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 11, before the words "per annum," it is proposed to strike out "$4,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$4,500."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not want to take any of the time of the Senate to make an argument upon this question. The same principle is involved in this amendment that was involved in the amendment dealing with the salary of the director, only it could be emphasized to a greater degree in this case than it could be emphasized in the case of the director.

I hope the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Utah I desire to say that I do not think the same principle is involved. We are creating new offices to administer a great service under the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury tells us that he can not secure competent men for these positions at $4,000 a year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina. [Putting the question.] By the sound, the "noes" seem to have it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BANKHEAD (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] to the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] and vote "yea."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). Repeating the announcement as before as to the transfer of my pair, I vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as before, I vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I make the same announcement as on the last vote, as to the transfer of my pair, and vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). Transferring my pair as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] to the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. KIRBY] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as before as to the exchange of pair between the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] and myself, I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Announcing my pair as on the last roll call, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as before, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). Noticing that the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] has entered the Chamber, I transfer my pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote, observing that my pair, the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], is not present.

Mr. HARDING (after having voted in the negative). On account of the presence of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], I desire to withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 32, as follows:

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 5 o'clock p. m.). All discussion has now ceased under the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On page 22, line 14, after the word "shall" and before the word "include," I move to insert the word "not"; and in line 15, after the word "include," to strike out "only"; and in the same line, after the word "deceased," to strike out "within" and insert "later than," so that as amended it will read:

The word "widow," as used in this section, shall not include one who shall have married the deceased later than 10 years after the time of injury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee has already been agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move a reconsideration of the amendment of the committee.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment so as to read:

The word "widow," as used in this section, shall not include one who shall have married the deceased later than 10 years after the time of injury.

Mr. SMOOT. That is very much better wording.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert the following:

SEC. 316. That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension for a widow of an officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who served in the Civil War, the War with Spain, or the Philippine insurrection, now on the pension roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll, and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided, shall be $25 per month; and nothing herein shall be construed to affect the additional allowance provided by existing pension laws on account of a helpless child or child under 16 years of age: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall be administered, executed, and enforced by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. SMOOT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STONE. Is the amendment open to debate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not. Under the unanimous-consent agreement no further debate is allowed.

Mr. STONE. I wanted to say something about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been requested.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I make the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as before, and vote "nay."

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] to the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and vote "yea."

Mr. ROBINSON (when his name was called). Announcing my pair and transfer as on the previous vote, I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). Announcing my pair as heretofore with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). Making the same announcement of my pair and its transfer as before, I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MYERS. I make the same announcement of the transfer of my pair as on the last vote and vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER], and to state that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the negative). I ask if the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. OVERMAN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and let my vote stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to withdraw my vote. I observe that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a pair, has not voted.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer the following amendment to be a new section.

The SECRETARY. Insert in the bill a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension for widows, minor children under the age of 16 years, and helpless minors as defined by existing laws, of an officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States, who served in the Civil War, the War with Spain, or Philippine Insurrection, now on the roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll because of the death of the husband or father as the result of wound or injury received or disease contracted in the service and line of duty and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided shall be as follows:

(a) For widow alone, $25.
(b) For a widow and one child, $35.
(c) For a widow and two children, $47.50, with $5 for each additional child up to two.
(d) If there be no widow, then for one child, $20.
(e) For two children, $30.
(f) For three children, $40, and $5 for each additional child up to two.

And the rate of pension for a dependent mother of a soldier, sailor, or marine who served in the Civil War, the War with Spain, or Philippine Insurrection, now on the roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided, shall be $20 per month: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall be administered, executed, and enforced by the Commissioner of Pensions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

SEC. 400. That in order to give to every commissioned officer and enlisted man and to every member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and of the Navy Nurse Corps (female) when employed in active service under the War Department or Navy Department greater protection for themselves and their dependents than is provided in Article III, the United States shall grant, without medical examination, to all such persons fully paid up indemnity in the amount of $2,000, payable in the event of death or total and permanent disability occurring during the period of the war or within two years thereafter. All such persons shall forfeit such indemnity in the event of dishonorable discharge.

SEC. 404. That in the event of disagreement as to a claim under the contract of insurance between the bureau and any beneficiary or beneficiaries thereunder, an action on the claim may be brought against the United States in the district court of the United States in and for the district in which such beneficiaries or any one of them resides. The court, as part of its judgment, shall determine and allow such reasonable attorney's fees, not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount recovered, to be paid by the claimant on behalf of whom such proceedings are instituted to his attorney; and it shall be unlawful for the attorney or for any other person, acting as claim agent or otherwise, to ask for or receive any other compensation because of such action: And provided further, That no other compensation or fee shall be charged or received by any person except such as may be authorized by the commissioner in regulations to be promulgated by him. The premium rates shall not exceed the net premium rates based upon the American Experience Table of Mortality, and 3½ per cent per annum, but the United States shall reimburse such companies for the excess mortality experience under such policies. So Mr. SMOOT's amendment was rejected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, when the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah was agreed to a while ago I neglected to preserve the right to ask for a separate vote on that amendment in the Senate. I make that reservation now.

Mr. McCUMBER. On page 11, after line 13, under the head of "Definitions," I offer the amendment which I sent to the desk concerning the definition of "dependency."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 11, after line 13, it is proposed to insert the following:

(13) The term "dependent" means (a) any child under 16 years of age; (b) a person who, by reason of the care of minor children or other members of his or her immediate family, or by reason of physical or mental infirmity, is incapacitated from earning a support.

Any person who has an income, or property from which an income can be derived, sufficient for his or her support shall not be regarded as a dependent under the provisions of this act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I reserve the right to call for a separate vote in the Senate on the amendment in line 17, on page 10, where the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the words "an Army field clerk, and a field clerk, Quartermaster Corps."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Two amendments have been reserved for a separate vote in the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desired to reserve an amendment myself, but, of course, if the bill is in the Senate it is too late.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments that have not been reserved.

The amendments not reserved were concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment reserved on the request of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES].

The SECRETARY. On page 10, lines 17 and 18, the Committee on Finance proposes an amendment, which was agreed to by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, to strike out the words "an Army field clerk, and a field clerk, Quartermaster Corps."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was concurred in.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the remaining amendment reserved. The Chair thinks it is well known to the Senate what it is. It is the amendment of the Senator from Utah placing soldiers and sailors of the Civil War——

Mr. JAMES. That is not the amendment, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is not that the amendment?

Mr. JAMES. It is the amendment relating to the widows of soldiers and sailors, as I understand. The other amendment was defeated.

Mr. SMOOT. It is the amendment offered by me to come in on page 31, after line 3, and to read as follows:

SEC. 316. That from and after the passage of this act the rate of pension for a widow of an officer or enlisted man of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States who served in the Civil War, the War with Spain, or the Philippine Insurrection now on the pension roll or hereafter to be placed on the pension roll, and entitled to receive a less rate than hereinafter provided, shall be $25 per month; and nothing herein shall be construed to affect the additional allowance provided by existing pension laws on account of a helpless child or child under 16 years of age: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to reduce any pension under any act, public or private: And provided further, That the provisions of this section shall be administered, executed, and enforced by the Commissioner of Pensions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendment just read by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon that I should like to have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I transfer my pair as before and vote "nay."

THE "GARABED" INVENTION.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, from the Committee on Patents I report back favorably, with an amendment, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 116) for the purpose of promoting efficiency, for the utilization of the resources and industries of the United States, for lessening the expenses of the war, and restoring the loss caused by the war by providing for the employment of a discovery or invention called the "Garabed," claiming to make possible the utilization of free energy. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Let it be stated first.

Mr. JAMES. The amendment is to strike out the words "within the boundaries of the United States." I have it marked.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the joint resolution be read.

Mr. JAMES. I have no objection. Certainly I want it read.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 116) was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to accept, as trustee for the United States Government, from Garabed T. K. Giragossian, an assignment of the right to utilize for the Government's own use a discovery or invention to be known as the "Garabed."

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to perform any and all acts, and to make such rules and regulations, and enter into such contracts as may be necessary to carry this resolution into effect: Provided, however, That the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian shall demonstrate the practicability of his discovery or invention to a commission of five eminent scientists, who shall be appointed by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian and be approved by the Secretary of the Interior. The United States Government shall be under no expense in connection with the demonstration of the "Garabed."

SEC. 3. That if such demonstration shall in the opinion of the said scientists prove the practicability of said discovery or invention, the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian shall be recognized by the United States Government as the original discoverer, inventor, and legal owner of the invention or discovery and of any improvements pertaining thereto that may be made by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian. The certificate of said commission of scientists to the effect that said discovery or invention is practicable shall constitute the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian the legal owner of and entitle him to all the rights and benefits of said discovery or invention for a period of 17 years. The right is reserved to the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian, his heirs, and assigns to take out patents for his aforesaid discovery, invention, or for any improvement or device pertaining thereto.

SEC. 4. That the United States Government shall not issue to anyone else any patent for any kind of free-energy generator, regardless of its form or shape, or for any device, improvement, process, equipment, or apparatus based upon the system or correlative principle of the said discovery or invention, or for any improvement or change developed in the use of the said "Garabed," and shall prevent the construction, importation, use, or exploitation thereof, in whole or in part, in the United States, and shall protect the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian, his heirs and assigns, in the rights and interests in the "Garabed" in the above respect for a period of 17 years in the United States and in foreign countries where such protection is afforded by treaty obligation, international law, or diplomatic representation.

SEC. 5. That any essential improvement or contrivance by any person or persons other than Garabed T. K. Giragossian relating to the "Garabed," or its principle, which shall prove valuable and essential thereto in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior during the period of the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian's special protection shall be bought by the United States Government for its own use in conjunction with its use of the said "Garabed," with adequate compensation to the inventor or contriver thereof. If, however, the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian wishes to utilize any such invention or contrivance so acquired by the United States Government, he or his assigns, and no other person or corporation, shall be entitled thereto upon the payment of a fair, just, and reasonable royalty therefor. In consideration of this right the United States Government shall have, without expense, the right to use for its own purpose any new improvement or device made by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian.

SEC. 6. That after the successful demonstration of the "Garabed," if the United States Government wishes to purchase the right and title for the exclusive use of said discovery or invention within the boundaries of the United States, the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian will comply with the request of the United States Government: Provided, That he shall be remunerated to the extent commensurate with the value of his discovery or invention, which shall be appraised and determined by a joint committee selected by the Secretary of the Interior and by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian.

If the United States Congress in session at the time of the demonstration, or at the latest during the following session, does not decide to avail itself of this privilege, the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian's legal rights and powers shall continue unimpaired as prescribed and set forth in this resolution.

SEC. 7. That any sale, or attempted sale, by the said Garabed T. K. Giragossian, or by his representatives or assigns, of any interest in or any title to said discovery or invention, or any part thereof, prior to the approval of the same by said commission of scientists, shall be illegal, invalid, and void.

SEC. 8. That the United States Government will have the right to exercise the aforesaid right to utilize said discovery or invention for its own use simultaneously with the beginning of the public and general use of the said "Garabed" system.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I wish to state that the Committee on Patents of the House of Representatives gave very thorough consideration to this joint resolution and unanimously reported it. The Rules Committee of the House unanimously provided a rule to take this matter up and consider it in the House. It was passed through the House by a vote of 243 to 14.

Mr. Giragossian claims that he has discovered some energy producer that will not need the use of fuel of any sort, that will transport ships and aeroplanes and will virtually end the war. I do not know whether there is any merit in it or not, but the other branch of Congress thinks there is. Many Senators here think so.

The amendment reported by the committee is to give to the United States Government the right, in case the experts or scientists to whom Mr. Giragossian is to submit this discovery conclude that it is worthy and that it is a real, genuine invention of great value. The Government of the United States, under the joint resolution as passed by the House, would have the right to take it over only for use in the United States. Our committee struck out the words "within the boundaries of the United States," so that if we take it over we can use it anywhere throughout the whole world.

Mr. PENROSE. How does the inventor get compensated?

Mr. JAMES. He is to be compensated. The scientists to whom he is to submit the invention or discovery are to pass on it, and if they say it is genuine then a commission to be named, three by Mr. Giragossian and three by the Secretary of the Interior, are to agree upon the compensation, and that is submitted to Congress and Congress appropriates for it if they think it is worthy. The Government does not pay out a cent, unless, after thorough investigation and upon recommendation of the scientists, they find it is valuable.

This man comes, like other discoverers who have come, and says, "I have a great invention." Of course people laugh at it. They laughed at all the other inventors of the world in the past. They laughed at Langley, but the aeroplane flies unhindered through the sky. They laughed at Marconi, but the wireless links the world in instant communication, and so they have laughed at all the world's great inventors and discoverers. This man may have something worthy or he may have something that really may end the war, as he believes and as many people believe. So we are just giving him a chance to make good. It does not cost anybody anything if he does not make good, and if he does make good he has done a wonderful service. I think it worthy of a trial.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator if the decision of these scientists is to be final?

Mr. JAMES. No; of course the Senator from Nebraska knows that the decision as to the payment of money could only rest with Congress.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. As I heard the joint resolution read it sounded to me as though this inventor was to select the scientists.

Mr. JAMES. No; he selects the scientists subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That I do not think is a wise provision.

Mr. JAMES. I do not see any objection to it. That same fight was made in the House. Certainly if the scientists he selects are not worthy and not the most eminent men in the United States the Secretary of the Interior of course would not approve his selection.

Then there is this further thought. Suppose he did select unworthy men. Suppose he selected men who were not expert and they concluded it was a real genuine invention of great value, he would not get anything from Congress by it. He is interested in having the most eminent men and capable men in the United States act as this commission, men of course who will treat this invention as confidential and that is his reason for bringing it here.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Why should not the Secretary of the Interior make the selection?

Mr. JAMES. I see no objection even to the Secretary of the Interior making it, but that question was fought out in the House and it was concluded that if he suggested them and the Secretary of the Interior had to approve them it virtually was the Secretary of the Interior making the selection.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The question who is a scientist is such a vague matter, I think it a very dangerous thing to permit this unknown man to select men whom he designates as scientists to make the success of an invention binding upon the Government.

Mr. JAMES. The Secretary of the Interior, of course, could veto any selection.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. JAMES. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. Being a member of the Committee on Patents, I am interested in the answer to the question of the Senator from Nebraska. The reason why the inventor insisted that he should name the scientists, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, was this: This is a secret and, as he regards it, a most important invention. He does not care to impart his secret to anyone else's choice except himself, because we may not take this invention, we may not avail ourselves of the privilege under the joint resolution, and therefore the secret is only lodged in the breast of the men whom he trusts, the Government being protected by the Secretary having the right to approve them. Of course, it is unthinkable in a matter of this sort that may amount to nothing and may amount to a great deal that the Secretary of the Interior would approve scientists who were not well known and were not worthy of the great trust that would be imposed on them by such a measure.

Mr. JAMES. Certainly. That is the reason, I suppose, of Mr. Giragossian.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky a question.

Mr. JAMES. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. Who appoints the scientists who are to assess the value?

Mr. JAMES. Three are to be appointed by Mr. Giragossian and three are to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to this provision. I suppose the importance of the invention is the only thing that induced the committee to accept this part of the joint resolution. It provides that the Government of the United States "shall prevent the construction, importation, use, or exploitation thereof, in whole or in part, in the United States, and shall protect the said Giragossian, his heirs and assigns, in the rights and interests in the 'Garabed' in the above respect for a period of 17 years in the United States and in foreign countries where such protection is afforded by treaty obligation, international law, or diplomatic representation."

Mr. JAMES. Certainly; that is usual as to all patents. When a man gets a patent in this country, that patent is protected in all foreign countries, as far as the Government of the United States can do so. We are only guaranteeing to give to him the same right that is given to everybody else, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. SMOOT. The Government of the United States does not guarantee a patent taken out in a foreign country.

Mr. JAMES. But the question as to whether or not this discovery is patentable is a very doubtful one, and whether you can patent a process by which to draw power from the air has never been decided. I doubt seriously whether or not this is patentable, because, of course, it is a mixture of both a discovery and an invention.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. JAMES. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. I dislike to take up a moment's time, but I should like to say that three or four weeks ago two men whom I never saw before and I have never seen since, one named Casey and the other Perigord or Perigaud, came from Kansas City and showed in a hotel here in Washington a device of their creation which covered exactly the same ground that is described here by that of Mr. Giragossian. The claim that they made was exactly the claim that is made for this invention.

Mr. JAMES. I will say to the Senator, if he will permit me in regard to that, that Mr. Giragossian probably two years ago, in company with Senator GORE, came to the Committee on Patents and had this same thing in mind and suggested it. He states that he has been working on it for 20 years. He has perfected it in the last two years. So Mr. Giragossian's claim, to my certain knowledge, relates back two years.

Mr. NEW. This man proceeded to tell me how an accident to his automobile several years ago resulted in his discovering in a most accidental way the principle of the invention which he claims. He asked me to request of Congress the same privilege that is now asked for Mr. Giragossian. I afterwards talked on the street one day with Gen. Squier, Chief of the Signal Corps, and he expressed a desire to see the invention. I wrote out to Kansas City to Mr. Casey, telling him what Gen. Squier said. I have heard nothing from him since, beyond a mere acknowledgment of the letter and a statement that he would be here in Washington within a short time and would press his own claim. I do not know him. I do not know anything about it, except just what I have stated here.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. JAMES. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana if I correctly understand him that persons have called upon him, claiming that they are the original inventors of the very matter here it is proposed that we shall investigate?

Mr. NEW. The invention is of exactly the same character, and they gave me a demonstration of what their device would do. There was a little electric light and a little motor with it.

Mr. JAMES. This invention has no connection with electric lights or motors of any sort. This invention is without the use of any sort of fuel.

Mr. NEW. I understand the power generated by this man's device was what produced the electric light and run the motor. He was simply showing what it was good for. He said he could drive an airplane 150 miles an hour easily enough with a machine that would weigh 60 pounds, or something like that. He said that with one of very little more weight he could drive the biggest locomotive that pulled a train into the city of Washington. He made all sorts of claims of that kind for it. That is all I know. I am not interested in it in any manner.

Mr. KNOX. If the Senator from Kentucky will permit me, because this was in reply to a question I asked, I do not think, in view of the fact that the joint resolution has not been printed and laid on the desks of Senators and none of us except those who are members of the Committee on Patents have had an opportunity to look at it, that the Senate ought to pass it without attention being called to this fact, and this is why I asked the Senator from Indiana if there were any other claimants. The third section of the joint resolution distinctly provides "that if such demonstration shall, in the opinion of the said scientists, prove the practicability of said discovery or invention," then the discoverer "shall be recognized by the United States Government as the original discoverer, inventor, and legal owner of the invention." It is very unusual legislation we are enacting without any regard to the right or claims of anybody else, that this invention by this man shall be regarded in law as the true and original inventor, and then a subsequent provision of the joint resolution prohibits the granting of a patent to anybody else covering the same thing. So we ought to be well satisfied, I think, that this inventor has entered an absolutely new field, and that there are no other rights that we might be legislating out of existence.

I feel that I would not acquit myself of my full responsibility to the Senate if I did not call attention to that provision of the joint resolution.

Mr. JAMES. That same point was made in the House. It was argued there.

Mr. KNOX. That is the reason why I make it here, so that we can discuss it.

Mr. JAMES. The same question was brought up for consideration in the House and before the Committee on Patents and the Rules Committee, but they thought that this was so important, this man having been for years urging this matter, he should be given an opportunity to present it. I take it if Congress were to pass the joint resolution and it should become a law and the invention was really a wonderful one, and it should be afterwards discovered that he had secured it from some one or that some other one had invented it before he did and he got this information from some other source, Congress would not pay him anything for it, and therefore certainly he would not profit by it.

As to the statement of my friend the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] that some gentleman told him that he had some sort of invention and that he has heard no more about it. This is a very important thing; a great many people in the country believe that it will go a long way toward ending the war. Of course, I know nothing about it. The other branch of Congress believed that and they acted, and I think we ought to act.

Mr. NEW. If the Senator will permit me, I did not say that Mr. Casey told me he had invented it. I said he showed me what he had in the way of an invention and gave me a demonstration of some things that it would do.

Mr. JAMES. I understand. I have talked with several about various inventions, but this man has been pressing this matter with great confidence and earnestness for a long time, and I feel he should be given a chance. Mr. President, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 6, page 4, line 11, strike out the words "within the boundaries of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT DURANT, OKLA.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 6094) amending the act to increase the limit of the cost of certain public buildings, and so forth. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public buildings act, approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes" (Public No. 432), and all other authorizations and appropriations passed in pursuance thereof for the construction of a post office at Durant, Okla., be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to authorize and appropriate the use of funds apportioned to Durant, Okla., for the construction and equipment of a United States post office and other Government offices at Durant, Okla.

Mr. SWANSON. I will say that authorization has been granted for the construction of a building for a post office at this place. The Government desires additional rooms in the building for the accommodation of other governmental activities, but under the law that can not be done unless authority is given. It involves no increase of appropriation, but merely authorizes the Supervising Architect, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, to construct a building for other purposes in addition to post-office purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the bill refer to the building for the Treasury?

Mr. SWANSON. No. I will repeat that there has been an authorization for a building in Durant, Okla. The law merely provided for the construction of a post office. The Government now desires in the same building rooms for other governmental activities. Under the law that can not be done unless authorization is given and the law changed. This bill simply authorizes the construction of a building for post-office and other Federal purposes. As I have said, it involves no increase in the appropriation. The bill, of course, has passed the House.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent to present, as in executive session, a report from the Committee on Interstate Commerce regarding the appointments on the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to the Senator that we are about to have an executive session.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is possible that that may not be ordered, and I ask unanimous consent to present the report at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The report has been sent to the desk for action.

ARKANSAS RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 2937) granting the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River between the cities of Little Rock and Argenta, and I submit a report (No. 149) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, for the reason that it is an emergency measure. I will state the reason why it is so regarded if any Senator desires.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, and it was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted for the county of Pulaski, in the State of Arkansas, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Arkansas River at the city of Little Rock on the site now occupied by the free highway bridge constructed by said county in the years 1896 and 1897, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain correspondence between the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], the chairman of the War Board on Transportation, and others, with reference to the adequacy of the transportation facilities of the country.

Mr. SMOOT. Correspondence with whom?

Mr. NEWLANDS. With the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], which correspondence was communicated to the president of the War Board on Transportation, and to which he replied. It is of great public interest and I should like to have it inserted in the RECORD without reading. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 24, 1917.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
Chairman Committee on Interstate Commerce,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR NEWLANDS: I am inclosing herein letter received from Ardis & Co. (Ltd.), and Foster & Glassell Co. (Ltd.), two of the largest wholesale houses in Shreveport, La., in regard to having the Government construct railroad equipment, and hope that you will give their views very careful consideration.

Thanking you, with kindest regards and best wishes,

Very sincerely, yours,

JOS. E. RANSDELL.

SHREVEPORT, LA., August 13, 1917.

Senator JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. RANSDELL: We note the interest the Government is taking in ocean transportation, and we appreciate the importance of it. However, we have not seen any reports where the improvements are suggested for the railroad transportation.

You know railroad transportation is absolutely necessary to supply ocean transportation and the heavy demand on the railroads this season will require more equipment and better equipment.

We would like to know if you can't do something that would bring about improvement in the railroad equipment.

Yours, truly,

FOSTER & GLASSELL CO. (LTD.),
By W. E. GLASSELL, President.

SHREVEPORT, LA., August 13, 1917.

Senator JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The Government seems to be making extraordinary efforts in the matter of shipbuilding and ocean transportation, all of which we fully appreciate and realize the grave necessity of, but in our opinion the matter of the railroad transportation should receive the same due attention.

It appears to us that some quick and vigorous legislation should be done in regard to the railroad facilities of the United States, and unless something is done commercial and industrial enterprises are going to suffer to the extent of being almost stifled or stagnated.

We think that the Government is going to need its own railroad cars just as badly as it will its own ships. We think that the Government ought to own and build immediately no less than twenty-five to thirty thousand freight cars, both boxes and refrigerators. We think that the Government should see that all motive power of all railroads is immediately put in proper condition to render prompt and effective service.

We sincerely hope that our representatives in the Senate and the House from Louisiana will exercise their most vigorous efforts and influence in the direction of having the proper legislation quickly started to get the railroad facilities in condition to prevent the blockading and stagnating of the commerce of the country.

Hoping you will view this matter in the light that we do, we remain,

Very truly, yours,

ARDIS & CO. (LTD.),
W. C. MARSHALL,
Vice President.

AUGUST, 27, 1917.

Hon. JOSEPH E. RANSDELL,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of your letter of August 24, with inclosures with reference to increase of railway equipment. I am sending your letter and the inclosures to the chairman of the railway war board, Mr. Fairfax Harrison, and making inquiry with reference to the adequacy of the railroad equipment.

As you know, there are two proposals regarding this matter. One, the suggestion of Senator SMITH of Georgia, that $100,000,000 should be expended by the General Government in the purchase of cars. Another is the effort being made now by the railway war board to meet the shortage in railway equipment by diminishing delays in the repair shops, increasing the load of each car, and by speeding up the time.

An estimate has been made that by these methods the existing equipment will be able to do between one-third and one-fourth more work than has hitherto been accomplished.

I shall, however, make your communication the basis of securing from the war board full information upon this subject.

Very sincerely, yours,

FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

AUGUST 27, 1917.

FAIRFAX HARRISON, Esq.,
Chairman Special Committee on National Defense,
American Railway Association,
719 Thirteenth Street, Washington.

MY DEAR SIR: I inclose you herewith letter from Senator RANSDELL, of Louisiana, with inclosures.

I will be very glad if you will return them with information regarding the adequacy of the present equipment, the measures that are being taken to increase its efficiency, and the measures that are being taken to increase the number of cars.

In this connection I would like to know definitely whether in the various traffic districts the increase in the volume of transportation has been sufficient to relieve the apprehension of the railroads that the considerable increase in operating expenses would hamper them in the maintenance and development of the necessary facilities for the service of the public.

Very sincerely, yours, FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS.

THE AMERICAN RAILWAY ASSOCIATION,
SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON NATIONAL DEFENSE,
Washington, D. C., September 13, 1917.

Hon. FRANCIS G. NEWLANDS,
Chairman Committee on Interstate Commerce,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of August 27 transmitting letter from the Hon. JOSEPH E. RANSDELL, with letters from Ardis & Co. (Ltd.) and Foster & Glassell Co. (Ltd.), of Shreveport, La., attached, all of which I return herewith as requested. I have delayed reply until our definite and statistical reports of operations and financial results for June, 1917, were available.

Replying on behalf of this committee to your specific inquiries:

Data collected by direction of this committee indicates that on April 1 there were approximately 102,000 new freight cars under order for American railroads. Recently, in response to inquiries, it was ascertained that there were approximately 3,015 new locomotives under order. Some progress has been made in completing and delivering these cars and engines to the railroads, but progress has been slow, and will doubtless continue so, while few new orders will be placed by the railroads under the existing pressure for raw materials and the delay in securing steel and other manufactured parts. Thus the capacity of all the plate mills in the United States is 1,850,000 tons. We are advised that the Government's program for the coming year will require about 1,600,000 tons of such plates. The needs of the railroads in plates merely for repairs to locomotives and cars during the coming year will be 275,000 tons. Orders for new locomotives, rail, and other railroad equipment for use abroad by the United States and the allies, which have been given preference to the needs of our railroads at home, are also delaying our deliveries. This presents one of our most serious problems in the outlook for the next 12 months.

Through the efforts of this committee and the active cooperation of the railroads of the country, and, in large measure, of regulating authority, National and State, as well as the shipping interests of the country, much has been accomplished to increase the efficiency of the existing equipment.

This committee publishes monthly efficiency statistics showing the performance of the American railroads, and I inclose herewith statement for the month of June, 1917, as compared to June, 1916, which, while not complete as to all important lines, is sufficiently comprehensive to indicate the general improvement in transportation output and efficiency throughout the country. In June, 1917, the railroads handled 23.2 per cent more revenue-ton miles than the same month a year ago, with but 10 per cent increase in freight-train miles. There was an increase of 491 freight locomotives, or 1.8 per cent, and of 64,502 freight cars, or 3.2 per cent, in service. The number of freight locomotives in shop awaiting repairs decreased by an average of 430, or 10.2 per cent; freight cars awaiting repairs or in shop decreased by 8,919, or 6.8 per cent.

Increased efficiency is further shown by the average increase in tons per train-mile from 642 in June, 1916, to 715 in June, 1917, or 11.4 per cent; also in an increase in average carload from 25.2 tons to 27.9 tons, or 10.7 per cent.

Early in the life of this committee a new set of car-distribution rules was established, under which the box-car equipment of the country is practically pooled under the direction of the Commission on Car Service, subordinate to this committee. By virtue of this method the Commission on Car Service has been and is moving empty cars from one portion of the country to another to relieve strain upon transportation facilities, and I am persuaded, as evidenced by reports reaching us, that the business of the country has been moved without substantial delay. Between May 1 and September 8, 117,027 empty freight cars have been transferred from one part of the country to another under this plan of meeting the traffic needs of the country.

It is impossible to make definite reply to your inquiry as to the adequacy of the present equipment, for the reason that we are without definite information as to the volume of additional transportation which the requirements of the Government and our allies may still add to the commercial traffic of the country. We have viewed with much concern the reduction in available coastwise tonnage, which formerly handled large amounts of traffic by water from one part of the country to another. As a result the volume of rail transportation has in certain districts of the country been unusually increased, and if more coastwise ocean tonnage is taken by the Government an acute condition may result, particularly in the movement of coal and cotton to New England.

The continued increase of the efficiency of the railroads depends largely upon the delivery of the cars and locomotives now on order to replace those worn out or destroyed from time to time and the regular receipt of rail and steel products for repair purposes.

These conditions are vital to the continued upkeep and necessary expansion of the carriers, and without adequate attention to them it is inevitable that the railroad machine of the country will in time halt and in some degree fail to meet the requirements imposed upon it. This committee has from time to time since its formation given expression to its concern on this subject, and, in view of your inquiries, I do not hesitate to direct your attention to the necessities of the railroads in these particulars.

I have not mentioned other important activities of the railroads which have resulted in increased efficiency, such as cooperation with shippers of bituminous and anthracite coal, whereby lake and tidewater coal has been largely pooled. This has resulted in a substantial decrease in the delay to cars, and, in that manner, increase of available equipment for handling coal. We have several subcommittees of railroad officers, the chief of which is the commission on car service, before mentioned, all of which committees have under our direction been actively cooperating with different departments of the Government and representatives of the allies in the expedition of the movement of troops and supplies, materials for the building of cantonments, etc., and foodstuffs for export for foreign use. The results so obtained have, in like manner, been accomplished through more intensive and effective use by the railroads and shippers alike of the existing transportation plant.

You further inquire whether "the increase in volume of transportation has been sufficient to relieve the apprehension of the railroads that the considerable increase in operating expenses would hamper them in the maintenance and development of the necessary facilities for the service of the public." It is difficult within the reasonable limits of a letter adequately to reply to this inquiry, but public reports of results of operation show that the tendency of heavy and continuing increase in operating expenses on many important lines is exceeding the increase in gross revenues through increased traffic.

Preliminary returns from 175 railroads, covering the United States as a whole, for June, 1917, show net revenue of $110,321,241, as compared with $99,901,760 in June, 1916. For the six months ended June, 1917, net revenues from railway operations were $528,233,173, as compared with $530,362,415 for the corresponding period in 1916. For the eastern district net revenues from railway operations for the six months ended June, 1917, were $197,630,024, as compared with $230,731,415 for the same period in 1916. In the southern and western districts the six months' figures, as well as those for the month of June, 1917, still show increases in net revenues, but reports of later operations in July and August on some important lines in the West indicate a decline in net revenues.

This constitutes no present bar to the efficient operations of the railroads, but if the prospects are, as railroad managers believe them to be, that this tendency may increase, then, to the extent that it does, it will increasingly limit the ability of the railroads out of income to maintain and develop their facilities for transportation service. This current tendency to establish expenses on a higher level than ever before is what gives railroad managers their gravest concern at the moment. The present large volume of revenues may not always obtain; when it drops the ability to curtail expenses proportionately is limited by conditions over which the railroad manager has no longer any vestige of economic control. Furthermore, these special conditions, taken in connection with the general conditions affecting the money markets of the country, with which you are familiar, have made it to-day difficult, if not impossible, for even the most favored railroads to raise new capital; the sale of long-term bonds is apparently out of the question excepting at heavier discount than prudence will permit, and the issue of new stock upon any reasonable terms is not within the power of any company. Short-term financing is apparently the only recourse for new capital; under present conditions this method requires the payment of high rates of interest and involves early refinancing, which under the present outlook is an unsatisfactory and, in some respects, a dangerous method of supplying the capital needs of the railroads.

If I have not fully covered your inquiries, I shall be glad to write you again upon advice from you as to any further points upon which you would like information.

Faithfully, yours, FAIRFAX HARRISON.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 102) authorizing the payment of October salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment of the present session.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5949) to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, October 4, 1917.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee for all the blessings Thou hast bestowed upon us as a Nation, and most fervently pray that Thou wilt continue to bless, guide, and protect us in all that makes for righteousness, that we may continue the furtherance of Thy kingdom in all the earth. Let Thy spirit come mightily upon us and unite us as a people, that we may stand behind our soldiers and sailors who are going forth to struggle with an insidious foe who would check the wheels of progress and turn back the tide of civilization, that they may be equipped and encouraged to do their work bravely and nobly, that a world-wide peace may be established for the good of humanity, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. PARK. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 153 (H. Rept. No. 188).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House, to Myra Collins, daughter of Lewis Lepreux, late a policeman on the roll of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months of his compensation as such policeman and an additional amount, not exceeding $250, to defray funeral expenses of said Lewis Lepreux.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. PARK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. McLEMORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein a telegram which I have received from the local exemption board at Laredo, Tex., replying to the charge of the Mexican consul general at New York that Mexicans have been illegally conscripted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by making some observations in reply to some parts of an address delivered by ex-Justice Hughes before the American Bar Association.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman intend to confine his remarks to constitutional questions?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the revenue bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ALLOTMENT OF ARMY PAY.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2883) making further provision for the allotment of pay of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees of the Army, and for other purposes, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 16 of the act of Congress approved March 2, 1899, entitled "An act for increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of March 2, 1901, be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

"The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to permit, under such regulations as he may prescribe, any officer or enlisted man on the active list of the Army, any retired officer or enlisted man of the Army on active duty, and any permanent civilian employee under the jurisdiction of the War Department on duty outside of the continental limits of the United States, to make allotments of his pay for the support of his wife, children, or dependent relatives, or for such other purposes as the Secretary of War may deem proper. All allotments of pay of officers, enlisted men, and civilian employees that have been or shall be paid to designated allottees previous to the receipt by disbursing officer of notice of discontinuance of the same from the officer required by regulations to furnish such notice shall pass to the credit of the disbursing officer who has made or shall make such payments; and, if erroneous payment is made because of the failure of an officer to report, in the manner prescribed by the Secretary of War, the death of the grantor, or any fact which renders the allotment not payable, then the amount of such erroneous payment shall be collected by the Quartermaster General from the officer who fails to make such report, if such collection is practicable. Nothing herein shall be construed to invalidate allotments now in force."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I believe this bill extends the present practice by authorizing the War Department to allot portions of the pay before the salary of the officer or the enlisted man is due and payable.

Mr. DENT. No; the gentleman is mistaken about that. Under the present law the allotment can not be made until 30 days after the pay of the enlisted man has accrued. In other words, the Government has 30 days of grace, and this repeals those 30 days of grace.

Mr. STAFFORD. And allows the allotment to be made when his pay is due?

Mr. DENT. As soon as it is earned.

Mr. STAFFORD. Wherein does this supplement the allotments in the soldiers' insurance bill?

Mr. DENT. It does not supplement them at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the soldiers' insurance bill we provide for allotments of pay of the enlisted men but not of officers. This bill provides for the allotments of pay of officers and enlisted men?

Mr. DENT. I confess to the gentleman that I have not compared the difference, but here is the whole proposition involved. I do not know whether the soldiers' bill is going to be passed or not, but under the present law an enlisted man serving in France can allot a portion of his pay to his wife and children now. An officer can not do that, nor can a civilian employee. This bill extends the privilege to the officer and the civilian employee. If there is anything in the soldiers' insurance bill upon the same subject, it certainly can not do any harm to pass this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. There is not anything in the soldiers' insurance bill that authorizes an officer to allot his pay.

Mr. DENT. No; and this bill extends the privilege of allotment to the officers and to permanent civilian employees outside of continental United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask a question. Does this provide that anything in addition to what is allotted from the officers' or civilians' salary shall be paid to the family of the officer or civilian?

Mr. DENT. Not at all. It does not increase the pay of anyone. It simply enables the officer to let the Quartermaster's Department here pay the wife and children without buying exchange over there and going through the uncertainty of their getting it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. To make a unanimous-consent request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that on to-morrow, after such matters as may be before the House have been disposed of, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] asks unanimous consent that to-morrow, after cleaning up the business on the Speaker's table, he shall have not to exceed 30 minutes to address the House, of course barring conference reports and things of that sort—privileged matters. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on what subject does the gentleman desire to address the House?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, the subject of my remarks will be the support given by the Republicans to the administration in the conduct of the war.

Mr. ADAMSON. We admit that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I would ask unanimous consent to follow the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] for not exceeding 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to follow the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I shall object for the present, until we see what the condition of public business will be to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE LITTLE KANAWHA RIVER.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2774, Senator SUTHERLAND'S bill, and it will only take a minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2774) granting the consent of Congress to the Gilmer-Pittsburgh Coal Co. to construct a bridge across the Little Kanawha River.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, who is to build this bridge?

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, some enterprising gentlemen in the development of West Virginia's resources desire to construct a bridge and I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin will not object. It is desirable that these gentlemen go ahead with their development.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. But the gentleman from West Virginia knows that if this is not a navigable stream the United States has nothing to do with it.

Mr. ADAMSON. I would say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that Senator SUTHERLAND is deeply interested in the bill and he says it is all right and we believe him. It is a stream over which the War Department has jurisdiction.

Mr. REED. But it is not at present navigable except in a limited way. It is in my district and I would like very much to get the bill passed.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There seems to be a conflict of testimony. The gentleman from West Virginia says that it is not navigable and the gentleman from Georgia says that Congress has jurisdiction over it.

The SPEAKER. Half the navigable streams in the United States are not navigable. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. REED. This stream is in that class, especially that part of it near its source where this bridge is to be located.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, the navigability of a good many navigable streams has been destroyed by the bridges that have been built across them. That is what is the matter with some of the navigable streams in my State, bridges across them being so low that boats can not pass under.

Mr. ADAMSON. We will guarantee any boat that wants to pass under this shall go under it.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, this stream is improved by locks and dams for several miles from the point where it joins the Ohio, but this location is near its source, where it becomes rather a small stream which practically takes it out of the navigable class.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I arose, Mr. Speaker, because of the fact that when a private corporation asks Congress to permit it to build a bridge over a stream the presumption is that the stream is navigable. If the stream be not navigable the corporation need not ask Congress for permission to build the bridge.

Mr. ADAMSON. They have jurisdiction over it, I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin, and we hope to have commerce running up, down, and across, and both ways.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman if this bill provides that the bridge shall be built at a point suitable to the interests of navigation?

Mr. ADAMSON. I think it does; but I will read it again. We always put it in if it is not in.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not know. I remember on several occasions when it was necessary to have that amendment inserted on the floor here, when they seemed to have forgotten it.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is in, "at a point suitable to the interest of navigation."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask to have the whole bill read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Glimer-Pittsburgh Coal Co., or its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Little Kanawha River at a point suitable to the interest of navigation, at or near Gilmer Station on the Coal & Coke Railway, in the county of Gilmer, in the State of West Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

URGENT DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 5949, the urgent deficiency bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The statement was read.

On Nos. 4 and 5, relating to the State Department: Strikes out the limitation, proposed by the Senate, upon the employment of two persons at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum, and inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, removing the limitation of 50 cents per day for keeping and feeding prisoners in China.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the food and fuel situation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the food and fuel situation. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

URGENT DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this is a complete report on the urgent deficiency bill. As it passed the House the appropriations aggregated $4,827,293,113.79; as it passed the Senate, $5,607,416,827.89. The Senate added $780,123,714.10 in cash. The Senate receded from $250,758,310.96 and the House from $529,365,403.14. So that the bill as agreed upon carries $5,356,666,016.93. A very considerable portion of the additions made by the Senate were of items that had been informally presented to the House, but as the formal estimates had not been transmitted to Congress, action was deferred until the estimates were transmitted. They did not reach the Congress until after the bill had passed the House, but were considered in the Senate and added there.

As it passed the House the bill also authorized the various executive departments to obligate the Government in the sum of $2,314,908,393.50. Practically all these authorizations were for material and supplies required to be contracted for at this time for the armed forces the country is now raising. The Senate added $70,550,000 of contract obligations. The total contract obligations authorized is $2,401,458,393.50. The total of the bill, including contract obligations and cash appropriations, is $7,758,124,410.43.

The deficiency act of June 15, 1917, aggregates in cash and undischarged contract obligations the sum of $3,297,644,541.60. Therefore the total of these two deficiency appropriation bills is $11,055,768,952.03.

Mr. Speaker, numerous inquiries are made from time to time as to the sums appropriated by Congress on account of the war. In presenting the deficiency bill to the House, I résuméd in a somewhat comprehensive manner what had been done and placed a table in the RECORD showing the various sums appropriated and then pending in the various acts. At that time, as this bill had not been acted upon in its final stages in either House, some of the figures were approximations. I have prepared a table which I shall insert in the RECORD so that the figures will be available to Members from time to time as they may need them.

Total contracts or authorizations	92,295,532.00	2,419,258,393.50	2,511,553,925.50
Grand total appropriations and authorizations	2,069,505,732.05	19,321,225,208.41	21,390,730,940.46

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the largest appropriations made in any fiscal year of the Government were for the fiscal year which ended June 30 last, when the appropriations totaled $1,625,484,995.53. In the brief time since Congress convened in April, it has placed at the disposal of the administration, to enable the country to properly conduct the operations resulting in the acknowledgement of the state of war which existed between Germany and the United States, including the $7,000,000,000 to be loaned to our allies, the very extraordinary sum of $17,001,966,814.91, and in addition to this amount has authorized contracts to be entered into or obligations to be incurred subject to future appropriations aggregating $2,419,258,393.50, making a total of appropriations and authorizations of $19,421,225,208.41. And then from time to time complaints have been made by thoughtless people, those who do not give any consideration whatever to the problems involved, to the supposed carelessness, or neglect, or indifference, or delay by Congress in the work connected with this war. It has been apparent to everyone who is at all familiar with the situation that the Congress of the United States, in a patriotic and effective manner, has done as extraordinary an amount of work as it was possible for men to do in the very brief time in which the work has been done. It was not possible, Mr. Speaker, without considerable time, care, industry, and patience to make the necessary inquiries and investigations and to have the intelligent discussion that is essential in a representative government, to agree upon the legislation necessary and to arrive at a conclusion as to the funds that should be supplied to the administration at that time. And speaking from a very intimate knowledge of what has been accomplished, I know that Congress deserves the commendation of the country for the very effective manner in which it has performed its part in the great task now before the country.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Would the gentleman be prepared to state or make an estimate of the probable appropriations in the next session of Congress for war expenditures?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can not do that, because I have not yet had the privilege of examining the estimates that are yet to be prepared by the various departments of the Government, and until the various departments, after study of the needs, submit their recommendations to the Congress it is practically impossible for anyone in the Congress to express any opinion. It will depend to a very considerable extent upon the number of men in the military forces of the United States. The expenses that necessarily will be incurred will increase proportionately with the number of men called to the colors. It would be a rash man who would undertake at this time to forecast whether it will be necessary to call an additional 500,000 or a million or 2,000,000 men, or whether the number of men already called will be sufficient. All that can be said is that in the appropriations carried in this bill and the act of June 15, 1917, provision has been made to anticipate the possible necessity of additional men being called. And the various governmental departments charged with the responsibility of equipping troops that may be called into the service and to furnish equipment of a character that will take considerable time to obtain have been provided with the authority and the money to obtain such equipment and supplies in advance of the authority to call the men who would utilize such supplies. To some extent the needs of the future have been anticipated here. I do not believe that anyone can at all even estimate what our expenditures next year will be.

A very large problem will be the policy of our Government toward the further financing of our allies.

If such advances are to be limited to the $7,000,000,000 already authorized, it will make a very considerable difference as to the amount the Government will be compelled to expend. If, as the war continues, it will be necessary for the United States to continue proportionate advances to the allies, then our expenditures correspondingly will be increased.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not intend in my question to the gentleman to include advances to the allies as war expenses.

The only reason I asked the question was that I understand that a definite prediction was made in another body by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations as to the amount that might be necessary to appropriate in the next session for war purposes, and I did not know whether the gentleman had formed any opinion as to whether that amount was overestimated or not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have not seen the statement. I did not know what it was. But I do not believe that anyone possesses the basic information at this time upon which it is possible to predicate a judgment. For instance, when the Congress last June, in response to the recommendations of our military advisers, placed at the disposal of the administration authority and money aggregating more than $3,200,000,000, no one then contemplated or had even suggested that in three months Congress would be providing an additional $5,356,000,000, and what may be the situation between now and December, when the Congress will convene for the regular session, so as to necessitate probable additional sums for the present or current year, nobody can anticipate. This much is known: That the studies which are being made by our forces which have already gone abroad and the requests that they have submitted as the result of the information obtained by them have completely revolutionized the plans originally adopted and have resulted in very extraordinary increases in the sums desired.

Mr. NORTON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Dakota rise?

Mr. NORTON. I would like to make an inquiry regarding Senate amendment No. 72. Is it the purpose of this appropriation to do a little wild-catting or exploring for oil on some private land?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not sufficiently expert in oil explorations to be familiar with the character of explorations that would properly be characterized as "wild-cat" explorations, so that I am unable to give the gentleman the information he seeks.

Mr. NORTON. Is it the purpose to have that appropriation used for sinking test wells where oil is not known to be?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I can state to the gentleman the purpose. It is——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New York will permit me, I would state to him that wildcatters would not get very far with $25,000.

Mr. NORTON. It would help a lot, though.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Government armor plant has been located at Charleston, W. Va.

Mr. NORTON. I so understand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In the vicinity of the proposed location of the plant there are 26,000 acres of natural-gas lands, about 14 miles from the plant. These lands were offered to the Government for $1,200,000. It was estimated that about $200,000 more would be required to pipe the land. It was believed by the Navy Department that this was a very exceptional opportunity to acquire the necessary fuel supply for the armor plant, and the Navy Department requested that $1,500,000 be appropriated to permit the acquisition of these lands if, after investigation by the Geological Survey, it was shown that they possessed the estimated supply of gas and oil.

Mr. NORTON. Then the purpose of this appropriation is to use it to test out these unknown oil fields?

Mr. FITZGERALD. This particular tract. The object is to have the Geological Survey make the necessary investigation, and if the report of the Geological Survey is of such character as to justify the purchase an option is to be obtained upon the lands at a nominal figure so as to reserve them until the Congress can act.

Mr. NORTON. May I ask the gentleman if the Geological Survey has other available funds than this appropriation which it may use in sinking wells on this land to make the investigation authorized here?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They may have funds that could have been used for this purpose, but I never knew the Geological Survey willingly to undertake an investigation of a character like this and utilize the force and funds that it has rather than do the work that it has itself determined upon.

Now, it is stated by the Secretary of the Navy, from the information that the Navy Department had acquired, that if oil and gas can be obtained at this place the gas could be delivered at the plant at 6 cents per thousand cubic feet, which would be equivalent to coal at 50 cents a ton, and it was estimated that the supply of gas on these lands would supply the plant for a period of 20 years; and as it is essential to provide some method of supplying fuel to an armor plant——

Mr. NORTON. Has gas been found on these lands?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand so.

Mr. NORTON. The gentleman does not know so that he can inform the House accurately.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. This is to investigate it.

Mr. WOODYARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. WOODYARD. I would say to the gentleman that this is in the heart of a great oil and gas field over there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There are several considerable wells now on this property.

Mr. NORTON. Are they producing gas, or are they dry holes?

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are producing such quantities as to prompt the belief that the property will produce enough gas for 20 years to run this plant. But before the department decides to purchase it, it desires the Geological Survey to make such a survey as may be proper in order to check up that estimate.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman know whether it is the intention of the department to get an option on this land before they make the investigation, or to discover the gas first and then get an option later?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the department has any sense, if there is any intelligence possessed by those in charge of it, they will certainly get the option before the investigation, because the information would be useless unless an option was had on the property.

Mr. NORTON. I hope the Navy Department authorities are not trying to establish the precedent of going over the country wildcatting.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not proposed to do anything of the kind. If the gentleman knows of any other place where the Government of the United States proposes to establish an armor plant and where it is desired to procure fuel of this character, he might perhaps with propriety call this "wildcatting," but inasmuch as this is the only armor plant that the Government has, on which it proposes to spend $11,000,000, it would not be the most businesslike method of conducting affairs to establish the plant first and then begin to seek a fuel supply. The proper plan is to find out if there is an available fuel supply in the vicinity before the plant is constructed. If the fuel can not be had at economical rates, the location of the plant should be changed.

Mr. NORTON. I understand the plant is already located there.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman and I may not agree as to what is meant by "location." I understand it has been determined to put the plant there. There is no plant there yet, and I do not know whether the work has actually been commenced.

Mr. NORTON. Does the gentleman now give the House the information that the plant is not already established there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not established there, if the gentleman means a complete plant.

Mr. NORTON. Located.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is located in the sense that it has been determined to place it there.

Mr. NORTON. That is making the examination for this oil and gas in a way the gentleman said it should not be made—after the plant has been located.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I said it would be ridiculous for the Government——

Mr. NORTON. It seems to me——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me finish this. It would be ridiculous for the Government to have the Geological Survey make an investigation and ascertain that there was this supply, from the character of the investigation it could make, and then commence to negotiate for the option. It ought to take this option first and then make its investigation; and I do not think there is anything very extraordinary in proposing to expend $25,000 for the options and investigations to secure a fuel supply for a plant that will cost more than $11,000,000.

Mr. NORTON. Of course, $25,000 is not a great deal. What I wanted to know was whether there was more available.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. From a reading of the paragraph it does not seem to me that the department would be justified in doing any drilling or "wildcatting," as the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. NORTON] suggests, with this appropriation. It is evidently only for an investigation, such investigation, for instance, as the Geological Survey would make in order to determine the wisdom of securing options. The necessity for appropriations for the drilling would come later if the options were secured.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is my understanding that it is the intention to secure the options and then make the investigations. The department wanted the money to purchase, and we gave them the money to obtain the options and make the investigation. Then upon the report the Congress itself will be in a position to determine whether an appropriation to purchase should be made.

Mr. MONDELL. Another question. This is for the purpose of providing a fuel supply for a Government armor plant. If we can not get gas, I suppose we shall have to use coal. Ought not the Government to provide a coal supply for this armor plant also? If it is wise to provide for one kind of fuel, why not provide for other kinds of fuel?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It may be desirable eventually for the Government to acquire a coal mine, but we are not facing that proposition now.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield for one or two questions?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. KING. I want to direct the gentleman's attention to page 30, to the provision in regard to the Military Establishment, registration and selection, and to the amendment of the Senate thereto.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That amendment was eliminated.

Mr. KING. Yes; I understand it was eliminated. I wanted to get a little information from the gentleman. Did it develop in the committee that there is any truth in the statement made twice in the newspapers by a distinguished gentleman recently that men are drilling with broomsticks in these camps and without sufficient clothing, and without blankets?

Mr. FITZGERALD. How can I tell whether there is any justification for the statements made by more or less distinguished or obscure gentlemen who are perambulating about the country?

Mr. KING. Was there anything developed in the committee to throw any light on that subject?

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will take the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations on this bill, which passed the House some weeks ago, he will find a very careful and accurate statement of the number of rifles now in the possession of the Government, the contracts that have been made for the obtaining of rifles, the capacity of the Government plant, when rifles are to be delivered and in what quantities, and complete information about the ability of the Government to supply and equip men along every line. Now, I do not think it is necessary for me at this time to go over all the matters that were discussed when the bill was under consideration.

Mr. KING. I will waive that question.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman has any doubt, or if there be any perambulating orator who he thinks lacks information, I suggest that the gentleman send him a copy of the hearings before the Committee on Appropriations, and that he read them before he makes any further speeches.

Mr. KING. Is it the purpose of the military department, as indicated by the hearings before your committee, to call out the 7,000,000 men who were not called out for examination? That is the information I should like.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The law fixes the number of men who can be called. Now, the gentleman is as familiar with the act to raise the Army as I am, and he can draw his own conclusions as to what the authority is. I am not enough of a military expert nor am I sufficiently familiar with the intentions of the War Department to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. KING. I thank the gentleman for his information. [Laughter.]

Mr. NORTON. I wish to ask if the House conferees agreed to amendment 66, under the head of "National homes for disabled soldiers"?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It did, with a very slight amendment. That is, it excluded future wars and made it apply to past wars or this present war, but modified it so that it would not apply to some other war of which we do not at present know.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I should like five minutes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT].

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I may wish to print in the RECORD a statement of the expenditures and legislation enacted during this Congress. I am not sure whether I shall do so, but I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, a conference is generally a contest between the Senate conferees and the House conferees, and I suppose the Members of the House generally judge of the success of their conferees by the statement of the results of the conference.

By that ordinary test the House conferees have certainly suffered a signal defeat, because we have agreed to more than $500,000,000 which the Senate added to our bill. But, as suggested by the chairman of the committee, that amount was largely based on the estimates which were sent to the Senate after the House had reported the bill.

That simply illustrates the condition which the Appropriations Committee has been in during the whole formation of this enormous bill. Five hundred million dollars which the Senate has added, and which we have agreed to, is more than any whole deficiency bill ever amounted to before this Congress, and yet that was sent in by the departments after the House finished the bill, and all the while that the House committee was framing this bill, from July until we reported it, there were constantly, daily, coming in from departments estimates of millions and hundreds of millions.

We reported the bill, not because we had before us all that the departments wanted, but because the departments were so constantly overburdened by new demands that they had to send them in to us.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I yield.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Who made the new demands on the departments?

Mr. GILLETT. I was speaking of the demands of the departments of the committee, but these demands were mostly by the War Department.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What information had the War Department that led them to make these estimates?

Mr. GILLETT. They kept finding that they needed a hundred million dollars more here and there, perhaps for field ammunition, or for field artillery, or similar purposes. The officers of the department were constantly finding that the war was making greater demands than they had anticipated. I am not criticizing them at all; I do not think they are at all blamable that they could not at the beginning of the war foresee what the needs would be at the end of the summer. I do not criticize the War Department, I do not criticize the Senate, but it simply illustrates how the expenses of the war have constantly been far beyond what anybody anticipated.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I will.

Mr. FOSS. How much more have we appropriated at this session than we have provided to take care of in the revenue bill?

Mr. GILLETT. The revenue bill provided for about four billions, and we must have appropriated at this session over seven billions alone. I do not carry it accurately in my head without figuring a little.

Mr. FOSS. I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] to say the other day that in the present bill we would have appropriated something like $2,600,000,000 more than we have provided for in the revenue bill.

Mr. GILLETT. That would be about what I should place it.

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman from Massachusetts practically agrees with the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILLETT. I would think that that was about right.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I will.

Mr. PLATT. What is the necessity of the two additional Secretaries of the Treasury, and what have they charge of?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, that raises a question which I do not know whether it is wise for me to discuss or not, but, inasmuch as the gentleman has brought it up, I believe I will. I have refrained, and this whole side has refrained, from criticizing legislation and administration which we thought unwise. I have endeavored, and I know that almost everyone here has endeavored, not to criticize, because we do not wish to weaken the administration, and even when we thought partisanship was shown by the administration or by the majority here we were disposed to let it go unnoticed.

I will say that personally I was opposed to the addition of the two Secretaries. I am not without suspicion that it was largely to make a couple of pieces of handsome patronage. The Secretary of the Treasury is the political manager of this administration. Of course, the Treasury Department has grown tremendously, as we all recognize, but they already have three Assistant Secretaries. Most of the Departments have only one Assistant Secretary. The Treasury, besides its three Assistant Secretaries, has already a great number of highly-paid officials, and I did not think and I do not think it was necessary that these two Assistant Secretaries should be given. But the Senate put it on and the House conferees acquiesced. The Senate demanded more for the Treasury Department. The Senate demanded in the department of Mr. Roper, now Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that his salary should be increased and that the salaries of a number of his subordinates should be increased. We all remember Mr. Roper when he was clerk of the Ways and Means Committee, a very clever, efficient, able, agreeable man. You remember that he went into the Post Office Department to administer the nonpartisan appointment of postmasters. He resigned that to be manager of the political campaign in New York during the last campaign. Having finished that, and thereby doubtless added to his nonpartisanship, he was made a member of the nonpartisan tariff commission. Now, when the internal revenue is going to be elaborated, and when they are going to have this whole army of new appointments, largely outside of the civil service, by Democratic legislation, he is going to have the organization of this magnificent army of patronage, and so is taken out of the nonpartisan tariff commission.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That does not mean that the employees named in the bill are taken out of the classified service.

Mr. GILLETT. Every deputy collector is outside of the classified service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No deputy collectors are provided here of any account.

Mr. GILLETT. These two secretaries of the Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury are outside of the civil service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The deputy clerks and all other employees are in the classified service.

Mr. GILLETT. The deputy collectors are not in the classified service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They have always been out.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman is mistaken about that. You passed a law four years ago taking them out. The request was made that the salary of the Internal Revenue Commissioner be increased, and also that some of the salaries of his employees should be increased, to more efficiently carry on this nonpartisan service.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from New York to yield me two minutes more.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, as I say, the House conferees did not yield, I am happy to say, on this.

Mr. PLATT. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Treasury Department indicated what the particular duties of these gentlemen would be. For instance, we have one Assistant Secretary who has charge of public buildings, and another who has charge of customs, and so on.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes; the Secretary told the Senate committee what their duties were to be, although I do not now remember what they are. Of course, I recognize that the work of the Treasury Department has enormously increased, but then so has the work of the War Department, very much more proportionately than the Treasury Department, and yet there is only one Assistant Secretary there. Therefore, I did not think this was a justifiable increase; but, as I say, I did not intend to discuss this.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman please give the facts of the increase, how great it is? What is the exact increase?

Mr. GILLETT. What the gentleman asked about was two new Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury at $5,000 each.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I thought the gentleman spoke of an increase in the salary of Mr. Roper.

Mr. GILLETT. That was asked, and the Senate gave that, and they asked that it be increased from $6,500 to $7,500. The House conferees resisted that and the Senate yielded.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, there was no request to increase that salary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was no request to increase his salary.

Mr. GILLETT. I thought there was.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; they asked for a $3,000 man under him.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They asked to increase the pay of three deputy collectors, two from $4,000 to $4,500 and three from $3,600 to $4,500. They were not agreed to. There was no request to increase Mr. Roper's salary. Mr. Roper asked that the chief clerk of the Internal-Revenue Bureau be increased to $3,000, but that was not passed. That is the only request he made.

Mr. GILLETT. I may be mistaken on that. I thought there was a request made by the Secretary of the Treasury that Mr. Roper's salary be increased.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There was none that came to my knowledge.

Mr. GILLETT. I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. SHERLEY. As a matter of fact, he is getting less salary now than he did in the office he resigned.

Mr. GILLETT. Exactly; and, as I say, I thought the increase was asked to make it the same. I may be mistaken about that. As I say, Mr. Speaker, I have abstained during this Congress from making any partisan criticisms, and yet I do not think it is unfair to point out that the patronage is being tremendously increased with these vast sums of money that we are appropriating, and I do not believe that any nonpartisanship has been exhibited at any time by the administration in appointing this large force of employees.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, Daniel C. Roper was a clerk in the Census Office under a Republican administration—an expert statistician, if I recall correctly. When the Democrats obtained control of the House, although from the State of South Carolina, he was taken by Mr. UNDERWOOD and made chief clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means because of his very well-known qualifications. After the election of President Wilson, Mr. Burleson, who was made Postmaster General, and who as Members of the House had learned to know of the very great equipment of Mr. Roper, made him an Assistant Postmaster General. He is a Democrat, and he was interested in the election of President Wilson. He resigned as Assistant Postmaster General after the last Democratic national convention to assist in the Democratic campaign. There were illustrious precedents in previous Republican administrations for such action, the most notable being that of Mr. George B. Cortelyou, who was taken from one very important position and made chairman of the Republican national committee and subsequently promoted to different places until he became Secretary of the Treasury. After the campaign was ended, Mr. Roper, because of his admitted qualifications, was appointed on the Tariff Commission. No one questioned his fitness for that position. When it became necessary to make a change in the office of the Collector of Internal Revenue, at the request of officials of this Democratic administration, he resigned a $7,500 position in order to take the head of that office at $6,500 a year. I do not believe that a man with that record deserves to be condemned or held up for any reason to ridicule.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I have not a word of criticism to make of Mr. Roper. I expressed myself as admiring him; I thought that he was extremely energetic and competent.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Who can be criticized?

Mr. GILLETT. I was suggesting the nonpartisanship being shown in appointments of the administration.

Mr. FITZGERALD. As to that, I can demonstrate that there is no justification for Republicans to complain. I requested the Secretary of War a short time ago to appoint a man in the Judge Advocate General's office. He informed me that there were over 3,000 applicants, and about 50 appointments to be made, and if in any way I could suggest a scheme by which the most competent men could be selected, and by which he could satisfy the country that he was selecting men because of their merit, he would be glad to consider the recommendation.

I said, "Appoint the man I have suggested and you may create an impression in some few quarters that perhaps the appointments in your office are made in a nonpartisan manner. This man is a Democrat, his father is a distinguished Democrat, his grandfather was a very distinguished Democrat, and his great-grandfather was a very well-known Democrat." [Applause.] I said, "The appointment of such a man with such a political lineage will create the impression that your appointments are nonpartisan. So far there have been appointed 20 men in the Judge Advocate General's office, and so far as I have been able to ascertain, every one of them is a Republican who opposed the election of Woodrow Wilson." [Applause on the Democratic side.] A short time ago a gentleman asked me to help him obtain a position in the War Department. He said, "You are very well acquainted with the man who is in charge of this work, and I know if you would speak a word to him he would be glad to help out." I asked, "Who is he?" He said, "Maj. Herbert Parsons, who is in the War College and has charge of this matter." Maj. Herbert Parsons is a former Member of this House and a former chairman of the Republican county committee in the State of New York, a gentleman for whom I entertain the kindest feelings, but from whom I should not be compelled to seek help to accomplish anything under a Democratic administration. I undertake to say that 90 per cent of the men called to the assistance of this Democratic administration to aid in the conduct of this war, both by appointment in the Officers' Reserve Corps and by designation or selection, either in the advisory commission or its subsidiary committees are Republicans who tried their utmost to defeat Woodrow Wilson in the last election. It ill becomes any man on the Republican side of this House to criticize this administration as acting in a partisan manner when the President has shown his broadness and patriotism in taking men so vicious in denunciation in the campaign because when convinced they could be of some service. I believe that President Woodrow Wilson in his administration has shown a patriotism, an unselfishness, and disinterestedness that perhaps if I were in his place I could not do. Only men of loftiest ideals and most intense devotion to duty would have selected such vicious partisan opponents, most of whom were associated in the campaign in criticisms of the administration which were unfounded and were based upon idle imaginings, and put them in positions of power and trust and permit them to serve the country after the people had said they should not conduct their affairs.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentlemen of the advisory commission to whom the gentleman refers serve for a dollar a year, do they not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Some of them do.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Most of them.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But many such men serve in important positions where compensation is paid them. But it is not compensation which men seek chiefly. It is power. These men desire the power to conduct and control the country's affairs. We have intrusted them with this power after they had demonstrated by their talk and by their conduct their offensive partisanship. But the President had more confidence in the patriotism and integrity of the American people, regardless of politics, when the country's affairs are at stake, than I believe it would be possible for any Republican to have shown under similar circumstances. I have been 18 years in this House, and most of that time under Republican administrations. I undertake to say that if Woodrow Wilson had not succeeded in the last campaign and his distinguished opponent had, that the most powerful telescope or microscope that had ever been built would not have disclosed a single Democrat that he would have intrusted with the most negligible or insignificant portion of the affairs of the Government in this great crisis. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Republicans, instead of finding fault and criticizing and pretending that this administration has been conducting its affairs in a partisan manner, with a view of aiding the Democratic Party, ought to be big enough and broad enough and strong enough and honest enough to give to the President the full credit to which he is entitled by reason of his patriotic, unselfish, and disinterested conduct of the public service. I hope it will not be necessary to repeat this speech again. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask that the time be extended.

The SPEAKER. How much?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] has called our attention to the fact that a certain distinguished Democrat was appointed under a Republican administration to a high civil office, found in that office by the Democrats and advanced, and very properly. I am thinking that when the happy day comes when the Republican Party shall again return to power and seek to find some good, straight Republican in the public service to advance they will have to get a very fine toothed comb to find such a one appointed under this administration to a civil office. I should like to have the gentleman from New York, who has just given us such an eloquent statement relative to the nonpartisan appointments of this administration, place in the RECORD a list of the Republicans, real Republicans, who have been appointed to civil office under the administration.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. He will not take up very much of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with that list. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman define, so that we can understand, just that type of Republican? There seems to be some difference on that side.

Mr. MONDELL. A Republican is one who believes in Republican policies and has voted for a Republican candidate to carry them out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman say a man must vote for the Republican nominee in the direct primary, or after participating in the primary, can he vote for a man who has been unsuccessful, because that is the situation I have to face at home at present? It is very difficult to say whether a man, a Republican, who participated in a primary and is nominated in the primary and the public repudiates, the head of the ticket in the primary, is a good Republican or not. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MONDELL. One who has never had anything to do with the peculiarities of New York politics is——

Mr. FITZGERALD. New York is Republican in politics.

Mr. MONDELL (continuing). Not in a position to instruct anyone from that city.

Now, I again suggest to my friend—in fact, I invite him to put in the RECORD a list of the Republicans who proved themselves to be Republicans by voting for the last Republican nominee for the Presidency—a list of such men appointed to responsible office under this administration.

Of course, when it came to fighting men, when it came to men who were willing to offer their services for a dollar a year—services absolutely essential to the conduct of the war—why, the administration could not help calling in and accepting the services of Republicans. [Applause on the Republican side.] And so among the fighting men we find many Republicans, and among the men who are really directing affairs to-day in a patriotic, helpful, and splendid way, to the neglect of their own affairs—on a stipend of a dollar a year—it is true, there are many Republicans. But as far as the fellows that are feeding at the crib in civil positions and at a juicy salary, are concerned, there are no Republicans that I have heard of. If there are, I am anxious to have the gentleman put their names in the RECORD.

But I did not rise to discuss that particular matter. I rose to emphasize this fact: I think it important that it should be emphasized that in passing a great appropriation bill like this we can not possibly know—we do not know—as to the necessity for many of the items contained in this bill. We take the estimates very largely on faith.

In my opinion the estimates must of necessity be to a considerable extent a mere guess, for the men who are responsible for the success of our cause, carrying on the Government and its operations in these times, do not want to fall into the error of making their estimates too low. Neither can the Congress take the responsibility of refusing any sums that are asked, no matter how great they may be, backed with a declaration on the part of those who are responsible that, in their opinion, the sums will be needed. We are properly resolving all the doubts we have, in favor of arming the administration with all of the money that may be needed for any and every purpose. And I will conclude by expressing the hope that in these conditions under which it is not always possible to spend money economically—expend vast sums with the same assurance and certainty of economy that lesser sums could be expended in times of peace, when such vast sums are given under conditions rendering the expenditure of them difficult in an economical way—the administration will at least exercise great care in their expenditure. I am hopeful that when we shall make up the record of the expenditure of these great sums it can not be truthfully said that a large portion of the money has been recklessly or extravagantly spent. We are doing our duty in giving the administration all the money it asks for for any and all purposes, and I cherish the hope that the administration will endeavor to be wise, careful, and economical in the expenditure of these vast sums.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, as the chairman has already stated, there will have been appropriated about $13,000,000,000 for the prosecution of this war and the expenses of the fiscal year 1918, when this bill now receiving its final action at the hands of the legislative branch shall have been signed by the President and become a law.

In placing that amount of money at the disposal of the administration, Congress has done all that it could do in a money way to make this war a successful one. The conduct of the war in the next year will largely be judged by the wisdom and the speed with which this money is expended and converted into those things that are necessary for the Army and the Navy. This country confronted a peculiar situation when the war broke out, a situation that, looking back now, with the wisdom that comes from experience, seems to many to have been unwarranted; and yet a situation which can not be shouldered upon any class, political or otherwise.

The American people for many years have been unwilling to make that provision for war that those whose business it was to understand and practice the art of war declared was necessary. And it did not matter what party was in power, it did not matter who was President, it did not matter how large a majority was in Congress, the broad, general purpose of the American people not to expend large sums upon the Navy, and particularly upon the Army, was followed and observed by those servants of the people. And the legislative history of America, without regard to administrations, will bear out the accuracy of that statement. That we have erred in the sense that we are now in a very much less condition of preparedness than we would like the country to be in is unquestioned. As to whether that policy, balanced with the good and evil that flowed from it, has been one of error, men will differ, and the future alone can tell. But to-day we are faced with a situation that no man, no matter what his vision, believed possible three or four years ago, and it is up to America and all of America to meet it with all the energy, and all the power, and all the resources of the country. Congress has met that situation by voting moneys undreamed of before. Never, in all the history of time, has a legislative body in one bill appropriated a sum even approximating that which is carried in this bill now.

I repeat that in the months to follow it will devolve upon the administrative officers of the Government to show by their action that this money is wisely and efficiently and speedily expended, because time is of the essence of all things that we do to-day.

Now I want very briefly to reply to an inquiry made by my friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]. He asked whether anyone could prophesy as to the expense of the war for the following years, and what Congress might be called upon to appropriate. Manifestly no one can, and yet there are certain broad basic things that ought to be stated which I think have a bearing upon what the expense will be in the future. The moneys that we are expending—a total of thirteen and odd billions—make provision for several large items that ought not to occur again, to the extent at least that they exist now. For instance, $2,000,000,000 represents the shipping program, either in the way of cash appropriations or of authorizations that have been counted in these totals. Considerably more than $2,000,000,000 represents moneys that have been appropriated for the purpose of equipping with field artillery and the ammunition therefor an army of 2,000,000 men; not only equipping 2,000,000 men, but equipping them with a 25 per cent reserve at the bases abroad and a 25 per cent reserve here in America, so that we are practically providing for 150 per cent of supplies in field artillery for 2,000,000 men.

And so in regard to cantonment expenditures and in regard to many expenditures in connection with the building program of the Navy, there is no reason to anticipate that the next year will make demands anything like as extensive as these demands that have been made this year. Manifestly other things will come that are not now thought of, because none of us are wise enough to see the tremendous magnitude of the war. Every day men are compelled to readjust their view and practically to start with a fresh mind in grappling with the problems that have arisen over night, and, manifestly, when our troops are actually in large numbers in the field abroad, there will be many expenses connected with them that are not now being borne. But the provision that we have made here is a provision very much more extensive than would be indicated by saying that we were providing merely for expenditures for the fiscal year 1917–18. In other words, we started with an Army under 100,000 men, and not only an Army of that size in men, but an Army pretty nearly of that size in equipment. There were some things wherein the equipment was larger than that, but in most of the things we simply had equipment for that number. The expansion of the Army to 2,000,000, with supplies for them in regard to such expensive items as field artillery, means much more than provision for a year of the war. It means provision for an expansion very much greater than any that will be made in any subsequent year of the war, even if it should last for several years afterwards.

So that I do not think that this country is going to be called upon to make appropriations, as has been suggested in a passing statement in the Senate, of $50,000,000,000. What our responsibility may be, what requirements may be imposed upon this country touching the financing of our allies, none of us are able to prophesy. How long the war may last is a matter about which men have many opinions. But this we have done, and this I believe the American people propose to do: We have started out with preparation for a war of length, and we propose to continue to supply men and money, no matter at what cost, until that war is ended in honor and in justice to the United States and the permanent peace of the world. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

OCTOBER SALARIES, SENATE AND HOUSE EMPLOYEES.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 102.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House Senate joint resolution 102, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 102) authorizing the payment of October salaries to officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the day of adjournment of the present session.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and the House of Representatives, including the Capitol police and pages, borne upon the annual and session rolls, their respective salaries and per diem for the month of October, 1917, on the day of adjournment; and the Clerk of the House is authorized to pay on said day to Members, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners their allowances for clerk hire for said month of October: Provided, That the session employees of the Senate and House of Representatives shall be paid hereunder for the entire month of October, and a sufficient sum is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, if I am not mistaken, is not this resolution one which invariably originates in the House of Representatives?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That has been the practice. I think the Senate originated a similar resolution once before.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course, I do not wish to object to the passage of this resolution, and yet I would like to call attention to the fact, as it seems to me it might well be done, that this is a resolution which invariably comes from the House. By long precedent and practice it really has become a House resolution, just as appropriations and revenue bills originate in the House. I do not like to be fussy or seem to be unreasonably jealous of the prerogatives and power of the House, and yet I have occasionally experienced in the other House feelings and actions of that kind. For instance, in the meeting of conferences, whenever a conferee on the part of the House suggests that a conference committee should meet at the House side of the Capitol, as has been done occasionally for special reasons, the idea of the Senate conferees breaking precedent and coming over to the House side has horrified the Senate conferees.

I do not object, and I think nobody will object, to this resolution, but it seems to me it ought to be pointed out that by long practice and precedent the House has the duty of originating resolutions of this kind. Undoubtedly the House in due time would have originated it now, and I think it would conduce to friendly and pleasant relations between the two bodies if the Senate would follow the customs and precedents of the past and assume that the House would do its duty and allow us in due time to undertake it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this is the second time this has happened and caused this criticism. If it happens again, I shall not call it up unless it is a House resolution. I hope the Senate will take notice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

EXPLOSIVES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following resolution of the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
October 1, 1917.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 3932) "to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes," with accompanying conference papers.

Attest:

JAMES M. BAKER, Secretary.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, as I observed the reading of the resolution, it seems to me that is an unusual form of resolution coming from the Senate.

The conference report on this bill was agreed to by the Senate on September 28. The House agreed to it on September 29. A motion was made to reconsider, and to lay that motion on the table, which was agreed to in the House, and the Clerk of the House reported to the Senate that the House had agreed to the conference report, when it was supposed that that was the end of the matter, and that the bill would be enrolled and presented to the President. The orderly proceeding between the House and the Senate, it seems to me, ought to be such that when a conference report has been agreed to, where no mistake has been made, except such as was remedied by a concurrent resolution here, that ought to be the end of it.

Such a question has never before been presented to the House or to the Congress of the United States to my knowledge in this way, except where a mistake has been made. It requires unanimous consent to set aside the proceedings of the House, in order that this bill may go back to the Senate and be sent over here as originally agreed to by the Senate with amendments, as this bill has. I do not believe that under those circumstances it is any discourtesy to the Senate that the House should not return these papers, and I think that for the future the Senate ought not to expect the House to return the papers in a case like this.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSTER. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman recall a case where a request of this kind has been made heretofore?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not. I recall a case where there were some mistakes made and this procedure was taken.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Before the report was acted on.

Mr. FOSTER. There was one case where it was unanimously agreed to between the House and the Senate, where it was found that the bill could not be enrolled with the intelligence that it ought to be, and where it was agreed by unanimous consent that the action should be set aside; but I understand there is no case on record like this, where the conference report has been agreed to by both bodies, and then they have asked that the report be returned to the other body.

Mr. GILLETT. What is the real, vital trouble here? Or does not the gentleman care to state?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not mind stating it to the gentleman from Massachusetts. There was a concurrent resolution sent over here asking that the House should agree, in the enrollment of the bill, to restore to a Senate amendment certain language that was stricken out in conference. I am not opposed to that amendment.

Mr. MONDELL. Was not that stricken out by the House committee?

Mr. FOSTER. No; the gentleman is wrong. This was a bill that originated in the House. It went to the Senate and there certain amendments were made, several of them, and this particular language was in the Senate amendment; and the House conferees and Senate conferees agreed to strike out certain language, and it was done. The conference report was agreed to first in the Senate and then came to the House and was agreed to here, and the concurrent resolution was to restore certain language to a Senate amendment, which language was stricken out in conference; that is, the conferees agreed to the Senate amendment with an amendment striking out this language.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The two Houses proceeded in the usual and orderly way, did they not?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. The matter was disposed of in the usual and orderly way?

Mr. FOSTER. It was.

Mr. MONDELL. And then a Senator, as I understand, asked to have these changes made.

Mr. FOSTER. There was a concurrent resolution which came over, asking that this language might be restored to the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. That was sent over at the instance of a Member of the other body.

Mr. FOSTER. At the request of a Senator who introduced it, the resolution went through the Senate unanimously, I think, practically without debate.

Mr. GARNER. Was that concurrent resolution agreed to by the House?

Mr. FOSTER. It was not. It was objected to, and, of course, it required unanimous consent to consider it, and I would like to have the House consider it.

Mr. GARNER. Then the controversy, as I understand, is to have this language restored to the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. That is it.

Mr. GARNER. And if the House does not care to restore this language, it need not pass the resolution agreeing to return the papers.

The SPEAKER. What action does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] suggest?

Mr. FOSTER. I think the matter ought to remain as it is at this time, and that the papers ought not to be returned, and I think the resolution of the Senate ought to lie on the table for the present. I think this action should be taken without any discourtesy to the Senator who introdueed it or to the Senate.

Mr. WINGO. Have we before us a request of the Senate, or is it not simply a request of the Secretary?

Mr. FOSTER. The resolution asks that the Secretary of the Senate make the request.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move that the resolution lie on the table.

Mr. WINGO. The Senate has not requested it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the Senate wish to make a request of the House, they ought to do so, and not direct their Secretary to do so.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the resolution lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the highest privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I desire to offer a resolution in regard to some statements that have been made that, in my judgment, reflect on the honor, dignity, and integrity of Members of this body and of the House itself. It is my purpose, if I am permitted to do so, to offer a resolution——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send up his resolution, so that the Chair can see whether it presents a question of privilege.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. GARNER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. I desire to call the Speaker's attention to the special rule passed yesterday, to be found on page 8448, providing for the consideration of the soldiers' and sailors' civil rights bill, which reads:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall proceed to the consideration under the general rules of the House of H. R. 6361, entitled "A bill to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war," and it shall be considered from day to day until disposed of, subject to consideration of conference reports.

I would like for the Speaker to construe that rule as to what other business is in order except conference reports.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker is not under the necessity of construing that rule, because a question of privilege can take anybody off the floor and even stop the reading of the Journal. Nothing comes ahead of a question of privilege, except the motion to adjourn. Since this squabble began several days ago the Chair has investigated the whole subject, and it has been so settled by long practice. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 165.

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized and empowered to appoint a select committee of five Members of the House who shall make inquiry into the allegations and charges made by J. THOMAS HEFLIN, a Member of Congress from the fifth district of Alabama, on the floor of the House on September 21, 1917, which is in part as follows:

"I do not know what Members of Congress, if any, have been influenced by this mysterious German organization. If I were permitted to express my opinion, I could name 13 or 14 men in the two bodies who, in my judgment, have acted in a suspicious manner. If Members have acted in a suspicious manner by the introduction of resolutions or bills or by speeches in the Congress or out of it that leads to the conviction that they are not loyal to this Government in the hour of its peril, they ought to be investigated, and if found guilty, they ought to be expelled from the House and the Senate of the United States."

Also into allegations and charges made in an interview or statement alleged to have been furnished by the said J. THOMAS HEFLIN and printed in the Washington Post of September 27, 1917, as follows:

"I have heard a story that there is a gambling room in Washington where pro-German and peace-at-any-price Members of Congress get their pay by being extraordinarily lucky at cards. I demand that this matter be investigated and that the guilty Members be expelled from Congress in disgrace. I believe that some of this money has reached some Members of Congress; I know I could name 13 or 14 Members of the House and Senate who have acted in a very suspicious manner."

Said committee shall report to the House before the adjournment of this session of Congress the result of its inquiry and its recommendation as to the action which should be taken by the House touching any person or persons involved in or affected by or making these statements and charges.

Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, these are very serious charges. They have been discussed at some length in the House. I feel that the time has come for action by the House. I do not feel that the matter should be discussed any more at this time, and therefore I move the previous question.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can not do it after the previous question has been demanded. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, is it in order for me to rise to a question of privilege and make a statement?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has a question of privilege, let him state it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Is it in order for me to ask for the appointment of more than five Members of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to have more members on the committee. I would like to have a larger committee, if it is going into the matter.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered and the resolution has been agreed to, and that ends it.

The SPEAKER appointed as the committee the following Members: Mr. WEBB, Mr. HULL of Tennessee, Mr. BARNHART, Mr. CANNON and Mr. GILLETT.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say a word?

The SPEAKER. Not a single word.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be relieved from serving on that committee. This bill will probably take to-day and perhaps to-morrow. This resolution requires a report before we adjourn. I can not, of course, serve in two capacities.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks to be excused from the committee, and the Chair appoints Mr. VENABLE, of Mississippi.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is my duty to be here on the floor of the House for the last two days of the session, at any rate, and I should like to be excused.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks to be excused, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. LONGWORTH.

Mr. HEFLIN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Am I to be denied the privilege of summoning witnesses to appear before that committee?

The SPEAKER. No.

Mr. HEFLIN. I desire to summon a great many of them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can summon as many as he chooses; it is a matter for the committee to dispose of.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, private matters will probably require my departure from the city in a few hours, and I am a little bit indisposed, and I will ask to be excused from serving on the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks to be excused, and the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. REAVIS.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Nebraska is out of the city.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will, then, appoint the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. WALSH.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to ask to be excused from serving upon this special committee for the reason that I have some engagements that I do not see how I can possibly abandon. The matter has come up unexpectedly, and I feel that I shall have to be excused from service on that account.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks to be excused from serving on the investigating committee, and the Chair appoints the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DEWALT]. The Clerk will report the committee as now finally constituted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BARNHART, Mr. VENABLE, Mr. DEWALT, Mr. LONGWORTH, and Mr. WALSH.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS] to-morrow, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that to-morrow after the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAMS], he may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

Mr. GARNER. On what subject?

Mr. ROGERS. On the proposed gift of a statue of Abraham Lincoln to Great Britain.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I presume the gentleman from Massachusetts was not in the Hall this morning when a Member had his request refused because the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] said that he preferred to wait until to-morrow and see what the condition of the public business would be.

Mr. ROGERS. I am frank to say that if there is the slightest objection at the time on the part of any Member of this House, I shall be glad to give up the special order.

Mr. WINGO. I know that there is a disposition on the part of some gentlemen here to wait until to-morrow before these requests are granted.

Mr. ROGERS. If any man asks me, even privately, to give up the special order, I shall be happy to do so.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the work of the extra session of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I call up now the bill (H. R. 6361), to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina calls up the soldiers' and sailors' civil-rights bill, and under the agreement entered into, general debate is to continue for one hour, 30 minutes of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WEBB], and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD].

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, before making the few remarks I propose to submit, I want to say that I am very anxious, and I think the House is anxious, to have this bill passed this afternoon. If that is done, I am authorized by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] to say to the House that immediately thereafter a resolution will be offered that the Congress adjourn either to-morrow afternoon, late, or early Saturday morning. I hope, notwithstanding the fact that an investigation committee has just been appointed, that that program may still be carried out. [Applause.]

I desire to say further that the Senate is not expected to pass this bill at this session. We have the bill reported. We have gone over it carefully, and it is our duty, in my opinion, to pass the bill now, so that the Senate may take it up among the first things that it considers early next December. That, as I understand it, is the agreement in the Senate with reference to this bill. We all agree that a bill of this sort is absolutely necessary, either as a national measure or as a measure passed by each of the 48 States and by the Territories and possessions of the United States. We realize, further, that many of the legislatures of the various States will not be in session, some of them for two years, some for three, and some even for four years. Therefore it would be impossible to have anything like a general stay law passed by the legislatures which have heretofore undertaken this sort of legislation. This bill is a departure from other stay laws in two material respects. First, it is a national law, proposed to be passed by the Congress of the United States. Heretofore during wars the various States have undertaken to pass the private stay laws for the benefit of the soldiers who are in the service of their country. If you will read the various laws of this kind which the committee has set out in its report, you will see what contrariety of such laws have been passed during recent years and during the various wars. The next material difference between this law and the various State laws is this, and in this I think you will find the chief excellence of the bill which we propose: Instead of the bill we are now considering being arbitrary, inelastic, inflexible, the discretion as to dealing out even-handed justice between the creditor and the soldier, taking into consideration the fact that the soldier has been called to his country's cause, rests largely, and in some cases entirely, in the breast of the judge who tries the case.

Manifestly, if this Congress should undertake to pass an arbitrary stay law providing that no creditor should ever sue or bring proceedings against any soldier while in the military service of his country, that would upset business very largely in many parts of the country. In the next place, it would be unfair to the creditor as well as to the soldier. It would disturb the soldier's credit probably in many cases and would deny the right of the creditor to his just debts from a person who was amply able to pay and whose military service did not in the least impair his ability to meet the obligation. I say again that you gentlemen who have been interested enough to read the bill and the report will find that the chief excellence of the bill is in those things that I have enumerated.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I yield for a question, as I have only 10 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman going to permit any discussion under the five-minute rule?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Some things should be drawn to the gentleman's attention when we reach that point; but while the gentleman is on this subject, will he explain why a court not of record is included among the courts that shall have jurisdiction?

Mr. WEBB. We have not disturbed the respective jurisdictions of the several courts, from a justice of the peace to a United States Federal court. City courts and magistrates' courts are usually not courts of record, but they have jurisdiction against individuals sometimes up to $200 or $500.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. There may be stays in certain matters affecting liens, matters of superior importance, over which the ordinary magistrate's court would not have jurisdiction.

Mr. WEBB. It does not confer any jurisdiction on the magistrate. The jurisdiction is taken by the court which has jurisdiction under the State laws over the subject matter.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Exactly; but the term "court," page 4, is defined as meaning a "court of competent jurisdiction of the United States or of any State, whether or not a court of record."

Mr. WEBB. Of course, if it is a matter of $10, the magistrate's court would have jurisdiction, and in using the word "court" we would designate a magistrate's court as being bound by this law.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I now desire to ask this question: Does the passage of this law, defining "court" as it is on page 4, in any way increase the power of a justice of the peace or magistrate of the various States?

Mr. WEBB. Not at all. All these actions can be brought in the respective jurisdictions in the various States and United States courts, and it does not undertake to change any jurisdiction at all.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield in that connection?

Mr. WEBB. I do.

Mr. TOWNER. Some of the courts that are not of record have jurisdiction up to $500, and proceedings for dispossession and forcible entry and detainer are in the first instance not in a court of record, the very thing where the soldier needs the greatest protection.

Mr. WEBB. We are bound to include that, of course——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will yield, I understand him to say this does not give increased power to a court of competent jurisdiction?

Mr. WEBB. Not at all. Mr. Speaker, I shall not go into the details of this bill, because those who have read the report, which I had the honor to present to the House from the Committee on the Judiciary, will find a very detailed explanation, as we understand it, of each section of the bill, and I will not weary and burden the House by going over it again, but will ask permission to insert part of that report in the RECORD in order that it may be explained to the country as the committee understands it.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. WEBB. I will.

Mr. FESS. I can imagine where a creditor might be a soldier as well as a debtor might be a soldier.

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Is there any provision in the bill to take care of a situation like that?

Mr. WEBB. Nothing, except the statute of limitations will not run against him, neither the creditor nor the debtor. We suspend entirely during his service.

Mr. SIEGEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will, for a question.

Mr. SIEGEL. Section 200 says the plaintiff shall file a bond for appearance in the court, but it does not state the amount.

Mr. WEBB. The amount has to be approved by the court.

Mr. SIEGEL. But no approval of the bond itself.

Mr. WEBB. I do not suppose the court would approve a dollar bond when $500 worth of property is involved.

Mr. SIEGEL. It seems to me that a certain amount should be specified.

Mr. WEBB. No; we leave that to the discretion of the court. Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SIEGEL. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the language there.

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend that the court will have power to require such a bond as in his judgment he thinks ought to be provided.

Mr. SIEGEL. The language here says "that the plaintiff file a bond approved by the court conditioned to indemnify the defendant," and so forth.

Mr. WEBB. Exactly; the court would approve the amount, when it is payable, when default should be made, and all that.

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to say under the statutes of the State of New York where a bond is required it is required that the amount be fixed and I think it should be fixed here.

Mr. WEBB. I suspect, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen could raise certain technical objections to the bill ad infinitum, but I know they will not do that.

Mr. SIEGEL. That is not technical.

Mr. WEBB. I believe the gentleman has offered his suggestion in good faith and if any amendments are offered in good faith which this House ought to accept, it will accept them. We had associated with us Maj. John H. Wigmore, the distinguished author of a work on evidence, the most excellent lawyer, Mansfield Ferry, another splendid lawyer, Mr. Rosenbaum, and another, Maj. Brinton, and others as well, and we sat around the table of the Committee on the Judiciary in full committee for nine days from 10 o'clock in the morning until 5 and 6 in the afternoon considering this bill. We have given it most careful and patient consideration. We do not contend it is a perfect measure, but we do believe it is about as good a stay law or a semimoratorium provision as has ever been presented to either Congress or any State, and we believe the unanimous vote which this House will give it will show that situation.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. WEBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. It has been reported in opposition to this bill, and I think the gentleman can clear it up in a minute, that the owner of a small house occupied by a soldier might be put to very great disadvantage by the terms of this law, in that the soldier or his family could remain there indefinitely without paying rent?

Mr. WEBB. That is a mistaken idea. If it has been published in the newspapers it is untrue. The provision of the bill is this: Wherever a soldier leaves a wife and dependents or children in a little home where the rent does not exceed $50 per month, then before his dependents can be ousted from that home, action must be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction. Then the court takes into consideration the relative financial conditions of both the owner of the home and the occupants of the home, and he may issue a stay if, in his judgment, the military service of the soldier has materially lessened his ability to pay the rent. Ouster proceedings may be stayed for three months. He may stay it for a week or two weeks or two months and in the meantime the court has power to order an application of a portion of the soldier's salary, or wages, to be applied to the rent.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The stay is limited to three months?

Mr. WEBB. Absolutely.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The limit of possible loss to the landlord is the three months?

Mr. WEBB. The absolute limit. It only applies to a soldier whose rent does not exceed $50 a month.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is there a possibility of recovery through the court for that three months during which the soldier's family may remain on the premises?

Mr. WEBB. Not at all. If the court finds the soldier is not able to pay it by reason of his service in the Army——

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Then it is lost?

Mr. WEBB. Then it is lost; yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Not beyond three months?

Mr. WEBB. No.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In other words, the owner has remedy in court at the expiration of three months.

Mr. WEBB. He has remedy before that. I can imagine a circumstance where a woman who is absolutely dependent on the rent of a little home and who might be facing starvation unless she got the rent, and where the court would say, "We will take it out of the soldier's salary." I wanted to point out that provision and the other excellent provisions of the bill, which leave it to the court, who knows the plaintiff and the defendant, to do justice between the two.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And they will have the right to go to court any time?

Mr. WEBB. Absolutely.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And have counsel assigned them if they are too poor to pay?

Mr. WEBB. My friend has the idea exactly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak for an hour on this bill, but in deference to my colleagues on the committee, who have been so patient and efficient in preparing this bill, I want to give them some time for general debate. Therefore I will yield to my friend from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] to use some of his time.

The report referred to above is as follows:

The present bill is the result of the continued session of the committee for 10 days in discussing H. R. 6110, a bill with a similar purpose, introduced by Mr. WEBB on September 18, 1917, at the urgent request of the Secretaries of War and of the Navy, as a measure strongly indorsed by the administration for an early enactment by Congress.

That bill (H. R. 6110) had been drafted by the office of the Judge Advocate General under the immediate supervision of Maj. John H. Wigmore, well known as the author of the authoritative work on evidence, who is a member of that office. The preparation of the original bill occupied Maj. Wigmore and his assistants for several weeks. This bill the Committee on the Judiciary considered section by section and line by line, without interruption, during both morning and afternoon sessions. As a result of these 10 days' close scrutiny and searching debate, in which all members of the committee took part, it was found desirable to make so many changes, some in substance but many more in form, that an entirely new bill was prepared which is the subject of the present report. This bill is not the work of one man but is the product of the suggestive criticism of almost every member of the Judiciary Committee. Throughout its meetings the committee has also had the benefit of the presence of the draftsmen of the original bill, and they have cooperated with the committee in every way. Many others have been heard by the committee, particularly representatives of both the old line and fraternal life insurance companies. To all who have appeared before us we believe the bill in its present form is satisfactory.

The committee has felt keenly its duty and responsibility, not only to the soldiers and sailors but to the commerce of the country, which in many ways already bears heavy war burdens. It has not failed to appreciate that a large view of the exigencies of the war requires that any relief that is given to a soldier shall not be at the expense of industry. The committee fully realizes the truth of the statement that the war is being fought in this country as well as on the battle fields of France, and that any drastic measure which even tended to cripple manufacturing and trade would be prejudicial to the country's best interest. For this reason we have been particularly fortunate in having the bill under the fire of the representatives of numerous business activities which are affected by this bill.

We can not point out too soon, or too emphatically, that the bill is not an inflexible stay of all claims against persons in military service. On the contrary, the bill nowhere prevents a creditor from enforcing the normal collection of any claim which should be paid by a soldier. Not the slightest hindrance is placed upon the service of summons or other process.

Instead of a rigid suspension of all actions against a soldier, a restriction upon suits is placed only where a court is satisfied that the absence of the defendant in military service has materially impaired his ability to meet that particular obligation. Most of the actions sought to be brought against soldiers will be for small amounts and will thus be in a local court where the judge, if he does not already know, will be in a favorable position to learn whether or not the defendant who seeks the benefit of the statute has really been prejudiced by his military service. Though not in military service, he may have property from which the income continues to come in irrespective of his presence; perhaps he may be some ne'er-do-well who only seeks to hide under the brown of his khaki; or the action may be for necessaries bought by his family since the departure of the soldier. In such cases the court would grant no stay of any kind. But if on the other hand the court is shown and finds in the words of the statute "that the ability of the defendant to comply with the terms of the obligation has been materially impaired by reason of his military service," the court will, at any stage of the action, grant a stay of proceedings. This stay, except in the case of such proceedings as eviction (where three months is the limit of stay) is limited to a maximum of six months after the end of the war. If the soldier is discharged before that time the stay is automatically shortened. In the committee's judgment the general provisions, as well as those which apply to the particular contracts, such as rent, installment contracts, and insurance, are all free from legitimate objection. The provisions in regard to life insurance, perhaps the most important of the special contracts treated, have been approved both by the fraternal and old-line insurance company.

The lesson of the stay laws of the Civil War teaches that an arbitrary and rigid protection against suits is as much a mistaken kindness to the soldier as it is unnecessary. A total suspension for the period of the war of all rights against a soldier defeats its own purpose. In time of war credit is of even more importance than in time of peace, and if there were a total prohibition upon enforcing obligations against one in military service, the credit of a soldier and his family would be utterly cut off. No one could be found who would extend them credit.

But in any case a rigid stay of all actions against the soldier is too broad. There are many men now in the Army who can and should pay their obligations in full.

On the other hand, there are already tens of thousands of men in military service who will be utterly ruined and their families made destitute if creditors are allowed unrestrictedly to push their claims; and yet these same soldiers, if given time and opportunity, can, in most cases, meet their obligations dollar for dollar. The country is asking 2,000,000 of its young men to risk their lives and, if need be, to give up their lives for their country. Before long even more will be asked to make the same sacrifice. Is it more than naked justice to give to the savings of these same men such just measure of protection as is possible?

The Shylock, to whom his pound of flesh is dearer than patriotism, is not the only man against whom the soldier must be given relief. Much more numerous are the cases where, between the soldier and his creditor, there is an honest difference of opinion as to the proper division of the burden which the war brings to all in a greater or less degree. The letters which have come to the committee (a few of which are appended hereto in Appendix D) show that this is a real menace and can not be left to care for itself. The need for this protection is urgent. It is immediate. Already tens of thousands of men are abroad and hundreds of thousands are in cantonments. More are soon to be called. These men should know now what is to be done for them. It needs no argument to show that freedom from harassing debts will make them better and more effective, more eager soldiers, than if their loyalty and zeal is tempered with the knowledge that their country, which demands the supreme sacrifice from them, grudges a small measure of protection to their families and their homes.

We do not need to look to France and to England in this war to learn the necessity for some sort of a suspended right of action. In our own Civil War almost every State, both North and South, passed some law to give protection against suit to men in military service. Even now in the present war States have passed stay laws of one kind or another. State statutes granting exemption to men in the National Guard are almost universal. The variety of these laws now and in the Civil War is as wide as the laws are numerous. Such laws should be uniform throughout the Nation. The country asks the same service and should give the same protection to a soldier, whether he comes from Massachusetts or California, from Maine or Louisiana. The law should be a general Federal law.

In the Civil War the States were driven from pillar to post until their invention was exhausted in trying to find a law that would pass the constitutional muster.

The power to impair the obligation of contracts was the obstacle in the way of the States; as this prohibition does not apply to Congress, the road is open to the Federal Government.

But in addition the Federal Government has a plenary power that is denied to the States. In the war power it has been given a power upon which, in the words of the Supreme Court of the United States in Miller v. United States (reported in 11 Wall., 268) "no restrictions are imposed. The power to declare war involves the power to prosecute by all means and in any manner in which war may be legitimately prosecuted by the law of nations." It was admitted by counsel for both sides in arguing the case, and both by the majority and minority of a divided court, that this power is supreme, and that the fifth amendment, which in time of peace prohibits the depriving a person of property without due process of law, has no application in time of war to acts of the Federal Government germane to the war. With this decision before us it is not surprising that we should find similar expressions from such an eminent jurist as Mr. Justice Hughes and from such an authority as Eugene Wambaugh, professor of constitutional law in the Harvard Law School, and now major on the staff of the Judge Advocate General of the Army.

A full discussion of the wide scope and plenary application of the war powers will be found in Appendix A. Here we shall add only that the appropriateness of stay laws to times of war is shown by the examples of England and France and our own States. Since the benefits of the bill extend only to those whose ability to pay has been impaired by reason of their military service in the forces of the United States, it is clearly within the scope of the war power. Can it be denied that, as Secretary Baker has said:

"The Army in France will be a more spirited and happy body of men, they will be healthier, they will be more effective as soldiers, they will be better citizens in every way if when they are thus forcibly separated from their homes Congress says that no additional disadvantage shall come to them by reason of any oppressive action on the part of creditors."

It would be an unworthy reflection upon our Constitution that under it the Federal Government may send a man perhaps to his death in the trenches, but under that same Constitution is without power to hold his savings intact for him until his return.

Let us consider some of the provisions of the bill.

SYNOPSIS OF BILL.

The first section has been carefully drawn and includes all forces now in the military or naval services; any possible omissions and any future additions are cared for by the blanket provisions on page 3, lines 3 to 5. Field clerks are of two classes: Those in military service and those who are not in military service. As the bill is intended to apply only to persons in military service, its benefits have been restricted to field clerks of this kind.

In subsection 2 provision has been made so that the advantages of the act shall not perchance run indefinitely in favor of a soldier who remains in the Regular Army after the termination of the war. The definition "military service" avoids the mistake of making a definition inconsistent with the fact.

Section 102 avoids discriminating against any persons from Hawaii, Porto Rico, the Philippines, and other similar possessions who may be in military service.

Section 200: The spirit of moderation which runs through the bill is clearly shown by this section. It does not cast a cloud on all default judgments, as any law would do which declared all judgments void against a person in military service or gave some similar arbitrary provision.

It has been estimated that in only about 15 per cent of all actions commenced are judgments entered by default of appearance. Absences on military service probably will increase the defaults in appearance to some extent. Since no one appears for the defendant, the first necessity of the case is to learn whether or not he happens to be a person in military service, so that, if not, judgment may be entered without delay. This is simply accomplished by requiring the plaintiff, if he wants judgment entered forthwith, to file an affidavit stating definite facts showing that the defendant is not in military service. If the plaintiff can not do this, he must apply to the court to have an attorney appointed to protect the defendant.

The same policy of moderation and flexibility is carried out in allowing the defendant to reopen the judgment only if his military service has prejudiced his defense.

To prevent this remedy from being made entirely empty the court, by subsection (3), is given power to require a bond from the plaintiff in addition to the affidavit he has already filed. This will avoid injury to a defendant who is entitled to reopen the judgment which might otherwise be accomplished by an assignment of the creditor's right of action to an irresponsible plaintiff.

Since the attorney appointed by the court is not of defendant's own choosing and since, even if accomplished, communication between attorney and client may be uncertain and unsatisfactory, the acts of the attorney appointed by the court should not bind the defendant; the attorney's services nevertheless obviously may be of great value to the defendant. The court, whose officer he is, may well be relied upon to see that any such attorney gets proper remuneration.

Section 201 illustrates how the committee has avoided an arbitrary, a rigid bill. The clause "unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of the defendant to comply with the judgment or order sought is not materially affected by reason of his military service," is the key to the whole scheme of the bill. This mere fact of being in military service is not enough; military service must be the reason for the defendant not meeting his obligations. If any real help is to be given, the period of stay must go enough beyond the period of military service. When he gets back from the war the soldier must be given some time to get his head above water.

Section 202: In some cases, particularly in the case of building and loan associations, by special act of the legislature a heavy fine or penalty is levied when a payment is not made on time. This fine may be so large as after several delayed payments to eat up all the soldier's equity. As in certain cases we have extended the period within which such payments may be made, logically in like cases we can do no less than relieve him against any penalty from such deferred payment.

Section 202. Again avoiding a rule of thumb, the court can stay an execution against a soldier, or vacate an attachment against a soldier, when it is his military service which is responsible for his plight.

Section 203 makes it perfectly clear to the court that, once having found the case meritorious, its discretion is again called upon to decide the terms of the stay. Payment of a judgment by installments has long been practiced in England, and something of the same nature is familiar in this country, where a continuing execution is allowed against a salary or other income.

Section 204 provides the usual stay of the statute of limitation.

Section 300 is the first of a series of sections which deal with particular obligations. Attention should first be directed to the fact that, even in a worthy case, evictions can be stayed at the most for only three months, and that there is nothing anywhere in the whole bill which compels a landlord to allow the dependents of a soldier to remain in possession for longer than that period. If the case is not one where the trouble comes from military service, eviction takes place as usual.

Next, it is important to note that the landlord may secure an allotment of the soldier's pay, which may be in addition to, or carved out of, the allotment proposed in the war-risk insurance bill.

This section applies only to dwelling houses occupied by a soldier's family, where the rent is not more than $50 per month. This limit has been selected to make sure of covering the high rentals of large cities and the period of three months because it is estimated that in this class of dwelling the rent for that period in most cases represents the profit of the landlord. Thus its deferred payment will not interfere with the landlord's ability in his turn to meet his taxes, insurance, and interest.

In some bills such as the war-risk insurance bill it is necessary to define the word "dependents" because money is to be paid out in amounts that vary with the degree of consanguinity. That is not the case here, and experience has shown the danger of defining such a word.

Section 301: Many of those drafted have bought houses or furniture on the installment plan, under a contract which makes it unnecessary for their creditors, who wish to foreclose, to go to court. Under the contract the creditor may take back the property whenever a payment is not made and consider all previous payments as rent. The purpose of this section is to force such a creditor into court, where the court will give him such relief as is equitable in view of the military service of the defendant. This relief, the bill suggests, may include a return of the property to the seller. As the property in all probability is in the possession of the soldier's family, they will at once have notice of anything the creditor tries to do, and they can apply to the court for relief.

Section 302. Again we see the discretion of the court, if the dependent's military service has put him in trouble. If he is an investor, his military service doubtless will not have interfered with his ability to pay his mortgage interest and the mortgage will be foreclosed. The section will principally protect mortgaged homes. It should be noted that the language shuts out property which has been transferred by or to a soldier since the date of approval of the act. The section does not place the slightest hindrance or delay on a sale, even of a soldier's property, except in a meritorious case.

Some mortgages by their terms give a summary power of sale. These are put upon the same basis, and like the contracts for the purchase of property with an analogous clause, the creditor, if he wants to foreclose must first go to court.

Section 400: This and the following sections provide a scheme for the Government to carry the premiums on not more than $5,000 of life insurance of a man in military service who is unable to pay this premium.

It applies to both fraternal and old-line companies, and is acceptable to both of them.

The premiums are to be met by a monthly deposit of Government bonds, to be held as security by the respective companies and kept in their possession, until the final settlement between the Government and the insurer, which is made at the end of the war. Any premiums so secured by Government bonds are paid as a loan on the policy. The Government to secure reimbursement is given a first lien on the value of the policy or its proceeds.

The insurance provisions of this bill cover an entirely separate field from the insurance provisions of the war-risk insurance bill. That bill gives new insurance to soldiers and sailors as a boon from the Government; this section protects rights in insurance previously bought by the soldier or sailor with his own money and already in force.

This change in the original contract of insurance is agreed to by requiring the soldier who wishes to take advantage of the bill to make an application, signed by the beneficiary when legally necessary. When the application is filed by the company, it also accepts the change in the contract.

To insure the benefit of this provision of the bill not being taken advantage of by persons not in military service, the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, to which duplicate applications are sent by the applicant, is given the duty of certifying to the insurer that the applicant is within the terms of the act both as to his identity and the amount of insurance for which he asks. This latter provision makes it impossible for a soldier with policies in several companies to obtain the Government guaranty upon an aggregate of more than $5,000 of insurance. If such an attempt is made the bureau rejects all but $5,000 of the application and notifies the insurer of this rejection.

The advantages of this part of the bill are given only to persons who took out insurance or joined fraternal benefit orders before September 1, 1917, and had paid at least one premium on their policy. Any soldier who wishes to take out new insurance is sufficiently protected by the comprehensive provisions of the war-risk insurance bill, under which he may take out as much as $10,000 of term insurance at the very trifling expense of about $8 a year for the period of the war, the balance of the cost of the insurance being borne by the Government. After the war and without physical examination, this can be converted into the usual form of life insurance.

The necessary account between the insurer and the United States is provided by sections 406 and 412; the first providing for the monthly account on which is based the amount of bonds to be delivered by the Government, and the last providing for the final settlement a year after the end of the war, a period which gives full opportunity to get information as to the fate of the soldiers reported missing or prisoners.

The guaranty continues as to all premiums on accepted policies until a year after the war, when, unless the insured reimburses the Government for the premium it has paid, the policy lapses; it is convenient to have this date coincide with the date of final settlement.

Since the benefits of the bill are for men in military service, its advantages do not extend to insurance policies under which the entrance of the holder into military service affects either the amount of recovery or the amount of premium to be paid. In such a case, also, it will be better for the insured to get the surrender value of his policy, if it is an old one, or let it go entirely if it is a new one, rather than to continue paying a premium which does not protect him against the very risk of war where he needs protection most.

If the soldier comes out of the war unharmed he can then secure new insurance and can afford to pay the higher rate of his increased age out of the proceeds of his old policy. The war-risk insurance bill grants him protection during the war, and if he wishes it, afterwards as well.

Since the fraternal benefit associations have no legal reserve but depend upon their yearly dues to pay the death losses of each year, it is palpable that the increased deaths due to the war will make it difficult for them to meet their losses unless they adopt a plan for the collection of additional dues from all their members and not merely from those who are in military service. Policies or memberships in the benefit associations which have done this are included in the bill; policies in others are not, for to include them would be to no purpose.

The committee has learned from insurance men that $2,000 is the average size of an insurance policy. The average rate of premiums for men in the draft age is about $30 per thousand. Thus a limit of $5,000 to the insurance covered by this bill is in accordance with its scheme to limit its benefits to persons not in the class of investors, and obligations not in the nature of investments.

It is felt that a person carrying a larger policy will have some independent source of income from which to meet his premiums and that a higher limit would unjustifiably increase the financial burden placed upon the Government.

Just what the Government's financial burden will be can be little more than a guess, but it is plain that it will not be large.

In the first place the Government only guarantees the payment of the premiums. If the soldier dies the insurance company will get its premiums out of the policy and the Government's guaranty will not be called upon. If the soldier comes back from the war he will repay the premiums if he continues the policy, and if he lets the policy lapse the Government will be subrogated to his rights.

In how many policies will the Government ultimately have to pay and how much will this right of subrogation be worth?

Of the 10,000,000 men within the draft age all are not insured; the present draft patently takes only about 14 per cent of those between the ages of 21 and 31. But it is common knowledge that married men are more apt to carry insurance than single men, and conversely married men as a rule, on account of their dependent families, are less liable to be taken in the draft. There are also large reductions to be made from the number of policies outstanding on the lives of men in the draft age. On account of their age a large proportion of those insured have probably taken out their policies in the last few years. Policies written since the beginning of the European war in 1914 contain almost without exception the "war clause," and thus do not come within the provision of this bill. (Sec. 414.) To this class should be added practically all fraternal organizations, since they do not as a rule insure against war risk, and in many cases are prohibited by law from so doing. Consider also that in all probability, according to insurance actuaries, a policy in the old-line companies which is more than four years old will carry a reserve behind it sufficiently large to be security for the premiums during the period of war. After taking all these factors into consideration we find that the Government's ultimate liability will be only on policies which are between three and four years old, and that only a small proportion of the outstanding aggregate of even these policies comes within the provisions of this bill. In the nature of things it is impossible to say what the amount of this liability will be. But it is plain that it will be very small, especially when we remember that the guaranty does not apply to more than $5,000 of insurance on any one life.

Section 500 provides simple machinery for the family of a person in military service to secure a postponement of payment of taxes. On filing a notice with the collector of taxes any sale of property for taxes is held up and the matter is brought into court, which then, as in other cases, passes upon whether the soldier's delinquency is due to his being in military service; if it is, the sale may be stayed until six months after the war.

But to provide for the many cases where property of a soldier, who is entitled to relief, may nevertheless be sold, a right to redeem is also given. This does not expire until six months after the war.

Section 501 serves as a guidepost to statutes, which have already been passed by this Congress, relating to the rights of homestead and desert and mining entrymen, who have gone into military service. As this bill is otherwise comprehensive, it seems convenient to include reference to these statutes.

Section 600 makes it useless for ingenious debtors to seek to obtain the benefits of this bill by colorable assignment or transfers to persons in military service.

Section 601 suggests a practicable way to secure information as to a man's military service and as to certain facts necessary to establish his identity. The various officers named already have at hand in the form of a card catalogue the information required in the certificate, and the provision making the certificate prima facie evidence does away with the often troublesome legal requirement of proof of authority.

Subsection (2) is similar to a provision in the English law. It is necessary to protect the rights of a soldier who is reported missing, and who, later on turning up alive, might find that all his rights under this bill had been foreclosed.

Section 602 thus recognizes the fact that a soldier's ability to meet his obligations may change during his military service.

In concluding this synopsis it should be added that a number of subjects were considered for inclusion in this bill, but were rejected for various reasons. In the cases of partnership and bankruptcy it was at first thought desirable to prohibit proceedings adverse to the soldier or sailor looking to dissolution or bankruptcy; it was, however, decided to be unwise to make any absolute prohibitions on legal proceedings. The discretion granted in the act to stay proceedings was considered sufficiently broad to cover all special cases.

The subjects of probate proceedings and trusts were likewise omitted. Those bodies of law can hardly be dealt with for soldiers and sailors without interfering with the adjustment of rights of all decedents' estates whatsoever.

Personal service and delivery contracts were omitted, as no relief could be given in respect to them without assistance from the Treasury, and it would be impracticable to require reinstatement in statu quo after the war.

Civilian relief, such as has been enacted in England to meet difficulties directly attributable to war conditions, was considered to be beyond the scope of this bill.

Because of the most careful consideration the bill has received at our hands both as to its form and purpose, we unanimously report this bill not only with the recommendation that the bill do pass but that it receive the early attention of the House. It is the most important measure now before Congress for the benefit of soldiers and sailors.

CONSTITUTIONALITY.

At the outset it is well to state that this committee believes that the authority for all legislation, whether or not in the nature of war emergency legislation, must be found within the powers granted by the Constitution to Congress. In the words of the Supreme Court in the much discussed case of Ex parte Milligan (4 Wall., 2), "the Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men, at all times, and under all circumstances."

The committee, however, is satisfied that "the Government, within the Constitution, has all the powers granted to it which are necessary to preserve its existence."

These views were expressed by the highest tribunal of our land in 1857. A striking expression 50 years later of the same doctrine is found in the words of a distinguished and living member of the same tribunal, ex-Justice Hughes, in his recent address to the American Bar Association on the subject of the war powers.

"While we are at war, we are not in revolution. We are making war as a Nation organized under the Constitution, from which the established national authorities derive all their powers either in war or in peace. The Constitution is as effective to-day as it ever was, and the oath to support it is just as binding. But the framers of the Constitution did not contrive an imposing spectacle of impotency. Self-preservation is the first law of national life, and the Constitution itself provides the necessary powers in order to defend and preserve the United States."

In the judgment of the committee the provisions of this bill are well within these "necessary powers."

The scope of this report forbids elaborate discussion. The committee will be content with submitting a brief summary of the reasoning and of the authorities which has guided it to the conclusion that the bill as now drafted will meet the constitutional test. The subject may be summarized under the four headings: (1) General definition of war powers; (2) Application of powers to facts of this bill; (3) suggested constitutional limitations; (4) Federal authority under war power.

1. GENERAL DEFINITION OF WAR POWERS.

Constitutional support for this bill is to be found in the granting to Congress of power "to declare war, to raise and support armies; to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers."

Turning first to the words of the framers of the Constitution, we find the necessity for this broad power thus expressed by its most powerful spokesman, Alexander Hamilton:

"The authorities essential to the common defense are these: To raise armies; to build and equip fleets; to prescribe rules for the government of both; to direct their operations; to provide for their support.

These powers ought to exist without limitation, because it is impossible to foresee or define the extent and variety of national exigencies, or the correspondent extent and variety of the means which may be necessary to satisfy them. The circumstances that endanger the safety of nations are infinite, and for this reason no constitutional shackles can wisely be imposed on the power to which the care of it is committed. This power ought to be coextensive with all the possible combinations of such circumstances, and ought to be under the direction of the same councils which are appointed to preside over the common defense."

This power must be interpreted, like all other powers under the Constitution, in the light of the classical principle of construction laid down in the opinion of Chief Justice Marshall (McCullough v. Maryland, 4 Wheat., 416) that Congress is to be allowed that discretion in relation to the powers conferred upon it which will enable it to perform its duties "in the manner most beneficial to the people." and that the end being legitimate and within the scope of the Constitution, "all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, and which are not prohibited but consistent with the letter and spirit of the Constitution are constitutional."

Without burdening this report with citations, a single quotation from a well-considered decision of the Supreme Court in Stewart v. Kahn (11 Wall., 493, 1870) is of value not only as of general application, but as bearing directly upon the provisions of this bill.

In that case there was presented to the Supreme Court the question of the constitutionality of the Civil War limitation act of 1864, which provided that whenever, after an action should have accrued, the defendant could not, by reason of the interruption of the ordinary course of judicial proceedings, be arrested or served with process, "the time during which such persons shall be beyond the reach of legal process shall not be deemed or taken as any part of the time limited by law for the commencement of such action." The language of the Supreme Court in rejecting this contention is a direct application to the problem before us.

"Congress is authorized to make all laws necessary and proper to carry into effect the granted powers. The measures to be taken in carrying on war and to suppress insurrection are not defined. The decision of all such questions rests wholly in the discretion of those to whom the substantial powers involved are confided by the Constitution.

"In the latter case the power is not limited to victories in the field and the dispersion of the insurgent forces. It carries with it inherently the power to guard against the immediate renewal of the conflict and to remedy the evils which have arisen from its rise and progress. This act falls within the latter category. The power to pass it is necessarily implied from the powers to make war and suppress insurrections. It is a beneficent exercise of this authority. It only applies coercively the principle of law of nations, which ought to work the same results in the courts of all the rebellious States without the intervention of this enactment. It promotes justice and honesty, and has nothing penal or in the nature of confiscation in its character."

This law, it is to be noted, was held to apply not only to the Federal but to the State courts. As thus construed the decision was affirmed in 1884, in Mayfield v. Richards (115 U. S., 137, p. 142), where the court said:

"The question thus raised was expressly decided by this court in the case of Stewart v. Kahn (11 Wall., 493), where it was held that the act applied to cases in the courts of the State as well as those of the United States, and that thus construed the act was constitutional. We are satisfied with the judgment of the court in that case and are unwilling to question or reexamine it."

The question before us, therefore, is, Is the proposed act "appropriate" or "plainly adapted" to the great end of the conduct of war and the support of an army? Does it or does it not present a direct effort "to remedy the evils which have arisen" and will continue to arise from its progress? If so, and no prohibition of the act can be found, it must be sustained. The question, therefore, very largely lies in a consideration of the purpose and scope of the law itself.

2. WAR POWER AS APPLIED TO THIS ACT.

As has already been stated, the scope of the act is to protect the members of the military forces of the United States during the period of the war by providing a general system not of exemption from suit or judgment, but of conferring discretion upon the courts to grant stays of actions or of execution in just cases, and generally, by providing that the rights of the soldier absent in the service of his country shall be represented and protected in the courts.

For the purpose of the present inquiry it is a significant fact that this act presents no new and unfamiliar field of war legislation. On the contrary, the subject is one which has been a fertile subject for legislative action in times of war both in this country and abroad.

During the War of 1812 Louisiana, on December 18, 1814, passed an act "suspending all proceedings in civil cases until the 1st of May" following.

During the Civil War "stay laws" were prevalent among the States. Many of the States suspended the running of the statutes of limitations, at least in so far as they affected soldiers and sailors. A considerable number of States went further and attempted, either by an exemption from process, a stay of proceedings, a stay of or an exemption from levy and execution, or a suspension of the courts themselves, effectively to bar the road against any creditor who desired to push his remedy against a defendant in military service. Other States provided for a reopening of the judgment.

There is an irreconcilable conflict of the decisions of the State courts upon the constitutionality of these various statutes. In some cases they were held to be void as in violation of the contract clause of the Federal Constitution, which forbids to the States alone the passage of laws impairing the obligation of contracts. In other cases, as in Pennsylvania, it was held that the Constitution was not violated if the suspension was reasonable and for a definite term. (Breitenbach v. Bush, 44 Pa., 313 (1863); Clark v. Martin, 3 Grant (Pa.), 393 (1863).)

As stated, however, we are not concerned with the question of the constitutionality of these various measures, arising, as it did, under a prohibition upon the States which is inapplicable to the proposed law, but rather with the fact that the passage of such laws was considered necessary and proper by a large number of States in the national emergency of war. As Appendix A to this report, there are herewith submitted extracts from the various State laws of the civil law exhibiting the extent and variety of these statutes.

An analogous field of legislation is exhibited in the laws of the various States granting certain exemptions to members of the State National Guard in the matter of civil processes, a summary of which is also appended as Appendix C of this report.

A still more vital expression of the belief that such legislation is imperative for the protection of our military forces is found in the acts which patriotic States have already undertaken on their own behalf during the present war. These acts have also been collected and are presented in Appendix B hereof. The wide variety of their provisions, giving varying degrees of protection to soldiers bearing the same burden in the same war, as well as the large number of States not included in the list, is a sufficiently eloquent argument for the necessity of that uniformity and completeness of protection, which can be secured only by Federal legislation. When we add to this the fact that the States are admittedly without war powers, and that their legislation, as shown by the varying vicissitudes of the Civil War stay laws, is subject to very severe and frequently fatal limitation under the prohibition of the Federal Constitution against the impairment of contracts, we find in the history of our own legislation not merely a demonstration that legislation of this chartcter is adapted, and has been considered necessary, to the conduct of a war, but that if an adequate remedy is to be secured for the soldier in the service of his country it must be by the Federal Congress under whose direction he has been called to arms.

The experience of Great Britain in the present war furnishes a last and equally persuasive argument that legislation of this character is "plainly adapted" to the support of the war. One of the earliest acts passed by the British Parliament at the opening of the present war was the courts (emergency powers) act, 1914, enacted August 31, 1914, and under which the broadest discretion was conferred upon the courts to defer executions in all cases where the court was of opinion that the person liable to make payment, whether in the military service or not, was "by reason of circumstances attributable, directly or indirectly, to the present war" unable to make such payment.

As already noted, the method of this English statute has been departed from in the bill now presented, as it seemed wiser to your committee to avoid so far as possible a scheme which might tend to throw doubt and uncertainty upon the validity of all judgments. The principle, however, underlying all of the acts to which we have had reference, including the English statute, is identical.

In the light of the practical experience above summarized, it is believed that it is unnecessary to proceed further along this line to demonstrate that legislation of this character has been considered, and is both appropriate and necessary to the maintenance of an army suddenly drawn from civil life—and as such is within the power to raise and support an army. It remains only to consider how far, if at all, this bill, in whole or in any part, may be subject to attack as doing violence to some express constitutional prohibition.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LIMITATIONS.

Three constitutional limitations have been suggested in connection with this measure, as follows:

1. Article I, section 10. "No State shall * * * pass any * * * law impairing the obligation of contracts";

2. (Amendments, Article V.) "Nor shall any person * * * be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law";

3. (Amendments, Article V.) "Nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation."

The committee is unable to escape the conclusions that under the plain reading of the language of these sections, as they have been interpreted by the courts of our land, the only clause which might have application to the subject matter of this bill is the first of the three prohibitions above given. This clause, as it is unnecessary to remind Congress, is expressly limited to the States. (Sinking Fund cases (99 U. S., 718).) It has no effect whatever upon the powers of the Federal Government which the framers of the Constitution saw fit to hold free from any such limitations.

As we have already indicated, the stay laws of the several States passed during the Civil War were almost without exception attacked as involving an impairment of the obligation of contracts. A score of cases arose, turning upon this single clause, with results differing widely in the various States. It is the one clause in the Constitution which, without a hopeless straining of the English language, can be called into question in connection with the provisions of such a bill as here presented, dealing with the carrying out of private obligations and in various ways suspending proceedings for their enforcement. While the fifth amendment to the Constitution was not adopted until after the Civil War, the constitutions of most of the States contain provisions substantially similar to it, but in no decision has the suggestion been made that the stay laws in question were invalid under these provisions of the State constitutions. In every case the statute has been attacked under the contract clause of the Federal Constitution.

The complete freedom of Congress from the limitations of this clause were well stated in the Legal Tender cases (12 Wall., 457, p. 549), holding the legal tender acts to be constitutional both as to contracts made before their passage and as to those made thereafter. The language of the court upon this point is conclusive of the question:

"Nor can it be truly asserted that Congress may not, by its action, indirectly impair the obligation of contracts, if by the expression be meant rendering contracts fruitless, or partially fruitless. Directly it may, confessedly, by passing a bankrupt act, embracing past as well as future transactions. This is obliterating contracts entirely. So it may relieve parties from their apparent obligations indirectly in a multitude of ways. It may declare war, or even in peace, pass nonintercourse acts, or direct an embargo. All such measures may, and must, operate seriously upon existing contracts, and may not merely hinder but relieve the parties to such contracts entirely from performance. It is, then, clear that the powers of Congress may be exerted, though the effect of such exertion may be in one case to annul and in other cases to impair the obligation of contracts. And it is no sufficient answer to this to say it is true only when the powers exerted were expressly granted. There is no ground for any such distinction. It has no warrant in the Constitution or in any of the decisions of this court. We are accustomed to speak for mere convenience of the express and implied powers conferred upon Congress. But in fact the auxiliary powers, those necessary and appropriate to the execution of other powers singly described are as expressly given as is the power to declare war, or to establish uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcy."

In the judgment of the committee, in so far, if at all, as any of the provisions of this act may be assailed as an impairment of the obligation of private contract, their enactment is a matter solely in the discretion and wisdom of Congress, guided by the necessities of the case. So tested, the committee has no hesitation in submitting that the slight burden hereby placed upon those who have contracted with soldiers, in the way of suspending remedies or rendering their enforcement subject to equitable limitations is, to say the most, a reasonable and just distribution of the general burden of the war.

As to the remaining clauses, to wit, due process and compensation, the committee submits that under the cases neither of these Constitutional limitations can possibly be held to apply to any of the situations contemplated in this bill. As is evident from the language of the same leading authority just cited, each of these clauses relates to a direct taking or deprivation of private property, and has no reference to an indirect injury resulting from the exercise of a lawful congressional power. In no case throughout the present act is there provision for any such taking of private property. At the most the remedy for the securing of property which has already been transferred is temporarily suspended, and a slight variance in the terms of the original contract is exacted, but in no instance is any change in the possession of the property brought about, nor is a taking of private property permitted by process other than that known to the law of the land. The creditor's hand is temporarily stayed against the soldier whose body has been taken, but the property remains the creditor's, and his remedy is but postponed.

The langauge of the court in the legal tender cases appears to the committee to be a conclusive answer to the objection thus urged:

"Closely allied to the objection we have just been considering is the argument pressed upon us that the legal tender acts were prohibited by the spirit of the fifth amendment, which forbids taking private property for public use without just compensation or due process of law. That provision has always been understood as referring only to a direct appropriation, and not to consequential injuries resulting from the exercise of lawful power. It has never been supposed to have any bearing upon or to inhibit laws that indirectly work harm and loss to individuals. A new tariff, an embargo, a draft, or a war may inevitably bring upon individuals great losses; may, indeed, render valuable property almost valueless. They may destroy the worth of contracts. But whoever supposed that, because of this, a tariff could not be changed or a nonintercourse act, or an embargo be enacted, or a war be declared?"

It is unnecessary to remind Congress of the many cases in which this doctrine has been followed and in which the rights of private contracts have invariably been held subordinate to the right of the Government to destroy the value of those contracts in the pursuance of its other legitimate powers. Familiar instances of this power will be found summarized in the case of Louisville Railroad Co. v. Mottley (219 U. S., 467).

4. FEDERAL AUTHORITY UNDER WAR POWERS.

In the foregoing the committee has proceeded upon the assumption that the provisions of the fifth amendment are of equal application in war and peace.

In Miller v. United States (11 Wall., 268), a case decided in 1870, involving the constitutionality of the Federal confiscation acts as applied to enemy property found in a loyal State, the court, in answer to the suggestion that the power was unconstitutional, used the following language:

"But if the assumption of the plaintiff in error is not well made, if the statutes were not enacted under the municipal power of Congress to legislate for the punishment of crimes against the sovereignty of the United States, if, on the contrary, they are in exercise of the war powers of the Government, it is clear they are not affected by the restrictions imposed by the fifth and sixth amendments. This we understand to have been conceded in the argument. The question, therefore, is, whether the action of Congress was a legitimate exercise of the war power. The Constitution confers upon Congress expressly power to declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules respecting captures on land and water. Upon the exercise of these powers no restrictions are imposed. Of course, the power to declare war involves the power to prosecute it by all means and in any manner in which war may be legitimately prosecuted. (11 Wall., 304.)"

So far both majority and minority agreed.

This thought is reflected in the address of ex-Justice Hughes, already referred to:

"Clearly these amendments, normally and perfectly adapted to conditions of peace, do not have the same complete and universal application in time of war. Thus the fifth amendment normally gives its protection to 'any person.' But in war this must yield to the undoubted national power to capture and confiscate the property of enemies."

The committee, however, does not find it necessary to rely upon the language of the court above cited as to the application of these amendments to the war power, for, as stated, neither of the clauses by their terms or by their construction, either in letter or in spirit, cover the case of the various measures of relief embodied in this bill.

Finally, the committee beg to remind the Congress that the due-process clause has never been held to deprive the State of the power of protecting the welfare of its citizens, even at the expense of restricting and destroying life, liberty, and property. A hundred instances will readily suggest themselves. And it has been well said:

"If a State may thus, notwithstanding a due-process limitation, interfere with life, liberty, and property for the sake of health, morals, quiet, and the like, it follows, a fortiori, that notwithstanding a due-process restriction the United States may interfere with life, liberty, and property for the sake of protecting the very existence of the Government itself."

If this may be done by the State without impairment of the constitutional prohibition, surely the Federal Congress, in the prosecution of the war, may not only conscript the life of the citizen but may, under the guarded discretion of the judges of the land as proposed in this measure, interfere with the property of the individual to the extent that such interference has been countenanced in this act for a purpose directly relating to the conduct of the war and the preservation of the morale and the self-respect and the peace of mind of the citizen-soldier whose body has been conscripted and taken from the peaceful walks of business life.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FERRIS). The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] is entitled to 30 minutes.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to express my appreciation to the ranking Republican member of the committee [Mr. VOLSTEAD] for granting me five minutes to speak at this time, before he has presented his views. As the chairman of the committee has stated, the Judiciary Committee has given very careful and extended consideration to the provisions of this bill.

The nations of the world during the past three years have advanced materially, not only in the methods of conducting warfare on the battlefields but in supplying their armies and in providing for the men who enter the armies and navies that do the fighting. This Congress, indeed, has taken action which is greatly in advance of anything heretofore undertaken in matters relating to our sailors' and soldiers' welfare. We have passed through this body what is known as the soldiers' and sailor's insurance measure, which had many provisions in it for the welfare not only of the soldiers and sailors but of their families and dependents. And in this measure we are indicating not only to the people who constitute our Army and Navy but to those of their dependents, their families, their friends, and to the people of the United States—yes, even to the world—that we intend to be wholly just and generous.

In this measure there are some provisions which may give rise to some doubt as to whether or not we stretch the Constitution to a point hitherto unknown, but if there has been error in that respect it has been in granting to the beneficiaries under the bill the benefit of any doubt and being lenient and not withholding any benefits or privileges from them because of a doubt as to possible uconstitutionality. The members of the committee and those who were instrumental in drafting the legislation felt that such doubt ought not to constitute an obstacle to the passage of this measure. The manner in which these rights have been preserved through stay and court procedure has been brought about in what may be termed a unique way. We have made them elastic, so to speak, and we have not absolutely wiped out the jurisdiction of any judicial tribunal. The man who leaves his home or his dependents is to have his rights safeguarded through judicial process, and no advantage can be taken by reason of his absence in any case, because the court has the authority to appoint an attorney to look out for his interests.

If perchance the enlisted man is carrying some insurance, provision is made in this bill up to the amount of $5,000; whether it be in a single policy, in a single company, or in more than one policy or in more than one company, that insurance will be taken care of by the Government. Also, no property of the soldier or sailor, used as a dwelling or for business purposes, can be sold, or taken, or levied upon for taxes. That is taken care of by providing, as I recall it, that the tax bill, the charge for taxes, shall continue for a period not exceeding three months after his military service, or the termination of the war, and that the charge or assessment shall carry interest not exceeding 6 per cent. Those men who go into the service and who may have interest in public lands, or homesteads, or mining claims, or any other matters, have their rights also protected. I trust the bill may have the support of the membership of the House. It will be a happy message to send forth to our country's fighting men and their families and dependents.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, this bill (H. R. 6361) is known as the soldiers' and sailors' civil-rights bill. I am glad to advocate its passage, and I shall vote for it with genuine pleasure. I claim the credit of being the first Member of either House of Congress to introduce a bill to protect the civil rights of our soldiers and sailors. On the 7th of August, 1917, I introduced in the House H. R. 5715, which in principle and in purpose is the same as the bill now before us. The bill we now have before us, prepared under the direction of the War and Navy Departments, was introduced in the Senate September 11 and in the House September 18. Upon my own initiative, and acting upon my own responsibility, I came to the conclusion that the Federal Government, so far as possible, should protect the property interests and civil rights of its soldiers and seamen. The bill which I introduced (H. R. 5715) comprises but one section, contains but one paragraph, and is expressed in a single sentence. With all that, it is comprehensive. It provides that no person in the military service "shall be sued in any court of the United States or in the court of any State or served with any summons or other civil process issuing out of any of said courts." Its provisions do not cover insurance or taxes. Otherwise it would give far greater protection to those engaged in military service than will the provisions of the bill now under consideration. For myself, I would go much further than the committee bill goes in preventing suits from being filed against persons in military service. I would prohibit suits from being filed against them. I would prohibit judgments from being rendered against them. By national enactment I would throw around their property, their financial affairs, and their business interests every possible safeguard.

H. R. 5715.

The bill which I introduced, H. R. 5715, in full is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the passage of this act, and during the existing war with Germany, no private soldier or officer in the Army of the United States, and no seaman, marine, or officer in the Navy or Marine Corps of the United States, and no person who has been selected as a soldier in the Army of the United States under the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, shall be sued in any court of the United States, or in the court of any State, or served with any summons or other civil process issuing out of any of said courts.

INDORSEMENTS OF H. R. 5715.

I have received a number of communications indorsing the principle of my bill. By permission of the House, as a part of my remarks, I print the following letters referring to H. R. 5715, introduced by me August 7, 1917:

ST. LOUIS, September 17, 1917.

Congressman MORGAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: We desire to indorse the recommendation of the Retail Credit Men's National Association, amending House bill No. 5715, entitled "A bill to prohibit soldiers in the Army and Navy of the United States, seamen and marine, from being sued."

Respectfully,

KLINE APPAREL CO.,

ST. LOUIS, September 19, 1917.

Mr. MORGAN, Author House bill No. 5715,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We take this means of informing you that we indorse the recommendation of the Retail Credit Men's National Association in reference to House bill No. 5715.

Respectfully,

SONNENFELD MILLINERY CO.,
Per J. E. ERNST.

ST. LOUIS, September 17, 1917.

Mr. MORGAN, Author of House bill 5715,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Our attention has recently been called to House bill 5715, entitled "A bill to prohibit soldiers in the Army or Navy of the United States, seamen, and marines from being sued."

While we are heartily in favor of the general principles of the bill, we strongly urge that an amendment be added so that debts of men in the service may be collected after the debtor has been mustered out or relieved from duty, and therefore the time such debtor spends in the service should not apply to the time known as the statute of limitation, thus preventing the account from being outlawed during the service of the debtor.

Yours, truly,

THE BOYD-RICHARDSON CO.,
By I. F. BOYD, President.

ST. LOUIS, MO., September 18, 1917.

Hon. DICK MORGAN, M. C., United States Congress,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Permit us to recommend amendment of what is known as the Morgan bill so that debts of men in the service may be collected after the debtor has been mustered out or relieved from duty, so that the time spent in the service will not apply to the time known as the statute of limitation, thereby preventing the account from being outlawed during the service of the debtor.

We thank you in advance for the attention we maintain this matter should and will receive.

Very truly, yours,

CADILLAC AUTOMOBILE CO. OF ST. LOUIS,
H. H. WALKER, Secretary.

NEW YORK, N. Y., September 1, 1917.

Mr. MORGAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I would herewith respectfully call your attention to the recommendation of our nationl legislative committee, whose views were indorsed by the Retail Credit Men's National Association at their fifth annual convention, which just closed at Cleveland, Ohio:

"Your legislation committee has a matter brought to their attention, being House bill 5715, entitled 'A bill to prohibit soldiers in the Army and Navy of the United States, seamen, and marines from being sued.'

"After considering this bill carefully we are of the opinion that the purpose of the bill is not to enable unscrupulous persons to avoid paying their just debts, but to prevent the service of the Army and Navy from being hampered by the summoning of the men into courts, and for that reason it is no doubt a necessity.

"We, however, believe that this bill should be amended so that debts of men in the service may be collected after the debtor has been mustered out or relieved from duty, and therefore the time such debtor spends in the service should not apply to the time known as the statute of limitation, thus preventing the account from being outlawed during the service of the debtor, and we suggest these views be communicated to Mr. Morgan, the author of the bill.

"Respectfully,

"D. J. WOODLOCK, of St. Louis.
"W. G. SCHMUS, of Cleveland.
"E. W. NELSON, of Lincoln, Nebr."

The Retail Credit Men's National Association most earnestly recommends the most careful consideration of the recommendation just made, as we believe it will be a means of counteracting the impression that with the passage of the bill without amendment, it would be impossible to recover by due process of law. Furthermore, the adoption of the amendment will aid materially in stimulating business.

Respectfully, yours,

RETAIL CREDIT MEN'S NATIONAL ASSOCIATION,
A. J. KRUSE, Secretary.
W. H. J. TAYLOR, President.

COMMITTEE BILL.

But the bill reported by the committee and now under consideration is, in my judgment, an admirable one. It was carefully prepared by the Judge Advocate General, assisted by a number of highly competent persons who gave the subject careful and conscientious consideration. The authors of the bill were friends of all those in the military service. They were in full sympathy with the men in our land and naval forces, and desired to give them every reasonable protection. Few bills in recent years have been given such careful consideration by the Judiciary Committee as has this one. The original bill submitted by the War and Navy Departments was changed in many important particulars and reintroduced by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF THE BILL.

In the mind of almost everyone the question arises, Is this bill constitutional? For myself, I answer this question in the affirmative.

Congress has the power "to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

It has the power "to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a Navy, to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, to suppress insurrection and repel invasion, and to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers."

Furthermore, the Constitution provides that "the President shall be Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy."

I shall not enter into any lengthy discussion of the constitutional question involved. In my opinion Congress has the power to enact this legislation. The power expressly given to Congress to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a Navy, to make rules for the government and regulation of its armed forces, and to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers granted, clearly gives Congress the power to enact any law which in its opinion will contribute to the success of the armed forces it has called into being, and which it maintains and supports. The general-welfare clause of the Constitution gives ample authority for this legislation. If, in the judgment of Congress, in this hour of peril and danger, when all the forces and all the resources of the Nation must be utilized to insure a speedy and successful termination of the existing war—I say, in this hour—it is for Congress to decide what is necessary and proper to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the people of the United States. The conclusion of Congress upon this question, in my judgment, is final, and the courts will hold legislation along this line constitutional.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. CANNON. I have not read the report on this bill, but I did devote last night to the reading of the bill; I just hopped, skipped, and jumped it. [Laughter.] In the bill I found a provision touching the collection of taxes by State authorities. The gentleman from Oklahoma thinks it is constitutional. I think there is a very serious question about that. I am not antagonizing the interests of our soldiers, by any means, or the proper care of them, but I recollect very well that during the war for the Union various taxes were levied, and one was a tax upon a summons, when you instituted it in court, and so on and so on; and, so far as I recollect, it has been universally held that the Federal Government can not tax one of the sovereigns in one of its necessary functions, which is the levying of taxes, because that would mean that as a so-called war measure you could broaden it. That is just as to the constitutionality of it.

Mr. MORGAN. I will say to the gentleman that this does not take away the taxes due the State or the county or the municipality. It simply defers their payment. It simply provides temporarily that you can not sell a man's property, if he is a soldier, only under certain conditions; only when the court shall make that order. So that it does not take the taxes away, not one cent of taxes, but simply postpones the remedy.

Mr. CANNON. The greater includes the lesser.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. SLOAN. These moratoriums are for the purpose of deferring the remedy instead of interfering with the contract, are they not?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SLOAN. Now, calling your attention to what the ex-Speaker has just mentioned, do we not, on page 21, where it refers to taxes, seek to limit the interest which may be borne, which is less than that provided by a great many States, and therefore attempt to nullify a contract between a State and a taxpaying citizen? I understand that the proposition is—and it is held to be constitutional—that we have a right to delay all these remedies, but when it comes to changing contracts or doing that which amounts to confiscation of values the courts have universally so held. I want to say, of course, that I am in favor of this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. The penalties for nonpayment of taxes is not a part of the taxes. They are simply a means used to encourage the payment of taxes. When nonpayment is due to military service the Government, which demands and secures that service, should shield the soldier from this penalty.

THE BILL H. R. 6110.

Broadly speaking, the object of this bill, H. R. 6110, is to enable the Government to conduct the war more successfully.

To enable us to win this war, our soldiers and sailors should be as efficient as possible. We select the most fit. The young and vigorous manhood of the country is called. We take the best—the strongest physically, intellectually, and morally. We give them the best equipment obtainable. We train them for the severe task before them. We seek to make them, man for man, superior to the soldiers and seamen of the enemy. We send them forth to battle. Upon their efficiency, their courage, their fortitude, their bravery, and their heroism depends the fate of the Nation. And not the fate of this Republic alone; for the deeds of our soldiers and sailors will determine the destiny of the nations of the world. So far as possible these men should be relieved of any encumbrance at home. They should be protected from annoyance, anxiety, and embarrassment about all private affairs. Their financial affairs, their business interests, the welfare of their wives, children, and other dependents should not be a burden upon them, to detract from their efficiency as soldiers and seamen. So as one means of aiding us to win the war we propose to protect these men in their civil rights while they are engaged in military service.

JUSTICE TO THE SOLDIERS.

This bill should be passed as a matter of justice to the soldiers and sailors and their families.

Including the first call of 500,000 of the National Army, we now have nearly 1,500,000 men in military service. About 1,000,000 of these are volunteers. Five hundred thousand have been called under the selective-draft law. If the war goes on, we will soon have 2,000,000 men in our Army and Navy. But the whole Nation is at war. Every citizen is under obligation to do his part. The burdens, so far as possible, should be equitably divided. But the men who leave their business, who leave their homes and those nearest to them, the men who endure the hardships, face the dangers, and make the sacrifices which this war will require, give far beyond anything that will be contributed by those who remain at home. To equalize the burden of the war we should do everything in our power to protect the property, interests, and all the civil rights of our soldiers who are at the front. We can not in the payment of taxes, however high they may be, or in contributions to the Red Cross or other charitable and patriotic purposes, however liberal our contributions may be, or in any other work in civil life, perform a service which calls for the self-denial and sacrifice which military service requires. Then there is something very important in the influence which this measure will have upon the soldiers and marines. The soldier should feel that he is fighting for a Government that appreciates his services.

He should feel that the people at home, for whose rights and liberties he is fighting, recognize the great service he is rendering and are grateful therefor. He can not have this feeling if in his absence we permit him to be annoyed and harassed with lawsuits, allow his property to be sacrificed, and see his wife and children or other dependents suffer while he goes forth to battle for his country. We can not do too much for those who constitute our land and naval forces. They deserve more than we can do. We can not adequately compensate them. After we have done our utmost, we will still owe these men a debt of gratitude we can never repay.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, legislation at the present session has been confined to subjects connected with the war in which we are now engaged. Since the adoption on April 6 last of the resolution declaring that a state of war existed between our Government and that of Germany we have seen in a number of instances a new exercise of war powers under the Constitution. We have passed a conscription act, a food-control act, a trading-with-the-enemy act, a soldiers' and sailors' insurance act, and now we have an act intended to preserve the civil rights of soldiers and sailors while in military service. Each one of these acts was enacted under the so-called war powers of Congress conferred by the Constitution, for whether we are at peace or at war we still exercise our power under the Constitution.

Immediately upon the declaration of a state of war these war powers became effective, and every act done to carry on the war to a successful conclusion is an act done by virtue of the Constitution, which specifically authorizes Congress to declare war.

The Federal Constitution confers upon Congress the power "to provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States" and "to declare war, * * * to raise and support armies, * * * to provide and maintain a navy, * * * to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, * * * to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers." Full and plenary power was thus given Congress to declare and carry on war without any limitations upon the due exercise of the specific grant.

Hamilton, upon this subject, says:

> The circumstances that endanger the safety of nations are infinite, and for this reason no constitutional shackles can wisely be imposed on the power to which the care of it is committed. This power ought to be coextensive with all the possible combinations of such circumstances and ought to be under the direction of the same councils which are appointed to preside over the common defense.

The Constitution being a written instrument its meaning does not alter. That which it meant when adopted it means now. Being a grant of powers to government, its language is general, and as changes come in social and political life it embraces within its grasp all new conditions which are within the scope of the powers in terms conferred. Justice Story declared this view in Martin against Hunter, First Wheaton, page 304, as follows:

> The instrument was not intended to provide merely for the exigencies of a few years, but was to endure through a long lapse of ages, the events of which were locked up in the inscrutable purposes of Providence. It could not be foreseen what new changes and modifications of power might be necessary to effectuate the general objects of the charter, and restrictions and specifications which at the present seem salutory might in the end prove the overthrow of the system itself. Hence its powers are expressed in general terms, leaving to the Legislature from time to time to adopt its own means to effectuate legitimate objects, and to mold and model the exercise of its powers as its own wisdom and the public interest should require.

Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch against Maryland, Fourth Wheaton, page 316, gives expression to the same views, as follows:

> The subject is the execution of those great powers on which the welfare of the Nation essentially depends. It must have been the intention of those who gave these powers to insure as far as human prudence could insure their beneficial execution. This could not be done by confining the choice of means to such narrow limits as not to leave it in the power of Congress to adopt any which might be appropriate, and which were conducive to the end. This provision is made in a Constitution intended to endure for ages to come, and, consequently, to be adapted to the various crises of human affairs. To have prescribed the means by which government shall for all future time execute its powers would have been to change entirely the character of the instrument and give it the properties of a legal code. It would have been an unwise attempt to provide by immutable rules for exigencies which, if foreseen at all, must have been seen dimly, and which can be best provided for as they occur. To have declared that the best means should not be used, but those alone without which the power given would be nugatory, would have been to deprive the Legislature of the capacity to avail itself of experience to exercise its reason, and to accommodate its legislation to circumstances. If we apply this principle of construction to any of the powers of the Government, we shall find it so pernicious in its operation that we shall be compelled to discard it.

Again, an application of this principle to modern conditions will be found in In re Debs, One hundred and fifty-eighth United States, page 564, where the court said:

> Constitutional provisions do not change, but their operation extends to new matters as the modes of life and habits of the people vary with each succeeding generation. The law of the common carrier is the same to-day as when transportation by land was by coach and wagon, and on water by canal boat and sailing vessel, yet in its actual operation it touches and regulates transportation by means then unknown. Just so is it with the grant to the National Government of power over interstate commerce. The Constitution has not changed; the power is the same. But it operates to-day upon modes of interstate commerce then unknown to the fathers, and it will operate with equal force upon any new modes of such commerce which the future may develop.

In pursuance of these principles, the Supreme Court of the United States has from the very beginning declared that the words "necessary and proper," contained in the constitutional grant of power to carry into effect the express powers granted, were not to be interpreted as endowing the General Government simply with those powers indispensably necessary for the exercise of its express powers, but as equipping it with any and every authority the exercise of which may in any way assist it in effecting any of the purposes the attainment of which is within its constitutional sphere. On this subject Chief Justice Marshall, in McCulloch against Maryland, supra, said:

We admit, as all must admit, that the powers of the Government are limited, and that its limits are not to be transcended. But we think the sound construction of the Constitution must allow the National Legislature that discretion with respect to the means by which the powers it confers are to be carried into execution which will enable that body to perform the high duties assigned to it in the manner most beneficial to the people. Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adapted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consistent with the letter and spirit of the Constitution, are consitutional.

In reviewing the effect of this decision, Prof. Willoughby, in his work on the Constitution, says:

It need not be said, of course, that the question as to whether or not the particular means selected is the best possible means that might have been adopted is one for Congress to answer. All that the courts have to consider in passing upon its constitutionality is as to whether it is calculated in any appreciable degree to advance the constitutional end involved.

What, therefore, we have to consider in connection with the proposed legislation now under consideration is as to whether or not it is calculated in any appreciable degree to promote the common defense or to carry on the war to a successful conclusion.

The purpose of this bill, as expressed in its title, is "to extend protection to the civil rights of the members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war," and in the first section it is further declared to be its purpose as to such members "to enable them to devote their entire energy to the military needs of the Nation, and to this end the following provisions are made for the temporary suspension of legal proceedings and transactions which may prejudice the civil rights of persons in such service during the continuance of the present war."

It is not my purpose to discuss the act in detail, for the main thought running through all its provisions is that its sole purpose is to suspend proceedings and transactions during the absence of the soldier or sailor, so that he may have an opportunity when he returns to be heard and to take measures to protect his interests. In effect, therefore, it is what is commonly known as a "stay law." It does not provide for an absolute stay in all cases, but leaves it to the discretion of the court, as a question of fact, to determine whether or not the rights of the defendant will be materially affected by reason of his absence in military service.

In considering these provisions it must not be forgotten that since the passage of the conscription act men are forced to leave their ordinary pursuits of life and to serve their country at a distance of 3,000 miles, where it will be impossible for them to keep in touch with their private affairs. Is the purpose of this bill, therefore, under these circumstances and as declared in the act itself, calculated in any appreciable degree to advance the military ends of the Nation?

During the Civil War stay laws were passed in many of the States, and much conflict of opinion arose as to their validity. In those States where such statutes were declared void it was upon the ground that they impaired the obligation of contracts. But the provision prohibiting the impairment of the obligation of contracts applies only to the States, and there is no specific inhibition laid upon the Federal Government. That Government is forbidden by the fifth amendment, however, to deprive persons of property without due process of law or to take private property for public use without just compensation. In so far as contract rights may be treated as property, they are protected from direct impairment by Federal action. This was definitely declared in the first legal-tender decision of Hepburn against Griswold. However, contracts are not protected from an indirect impairment of their obligation when this incidentally results from the exercise by Congress of a legislative power constitutionally given to it. Thus, in Knox v. Lee (12 Wall., 47), in which, reversing the opinion in Hepburn against Griswold, it was held that, under its power to carry on war and to maintain its own existence, the Federal Government might authorize the issuance of legal-tender notes valid in payment of debts previously contracted, the court deny that the obligation of contracts is thereby impaired; but they go on to say that even if it be held that the obligation of contracts is thereby impaired, there is no constitutional objection.

Nor can it be truly asserted—

The opinion declares—that Congress may not by its action indirectly impair the obligation of contracts if by the expression be meant rendering contracts fruitless or partially fruitless. Directly it may confessedly pass a bankrupt act embracing past as well as future transactions. * * * So it may relieve parties from their apparent obligations, indirectly, in a multitude of ways. It may declare war or even in peace pass non-intercourse acts or direct an embargo.

With reference to the "due process of law" requirement of the fifth amendment, the courts say:

That provision has always been understood as referring only to a direct appropriation and not to consequential injuries resulting from the exercise of a lawful power. It has not been supposed to have any bearing upon or to inhibit laws that indirectly work harm and loss to individuals. A new tariff, an embargo, a draft, or a war may imperatively bring upon individuals great losses—may, indeed, render valuable property almost valueless. They may destroy the work of contracts.

Such laws, however, have never been regarded as void. In one of the earlier State decisions upholding the constitutionality of a State law—Brightenbach v. Bush (34 Pa., 313)—Justice Woodward said:

We have often said that stay laws, exemption laws, and limitation laws are ordinarily constitutional, though applied to existing and prior contracts, and we have followed the distinction which prevails in the Supreme Court of the United States between the obligation of a contract and the remedies furnished by law for enforcing the obligation. We understand the rule to be that while the legislature may not impair the obligation it may modify the remedy. * * * The time and manner in which stay laws shall operate are very properly legislative questions and will generally depend * * * on the sound discretion of the legislature according to the nature of the duties, the situation of the country, and the emergency which needs to be enacted. Cases may occur where the provisions of the law may seem so unreasonable as to amount to a denial of right and call for the interposition of the court.

The question seems to be set at rest, so far as the Federal power is concerned, by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Stewart v. Kahn (11 Wall., 493). In that case it appeared that a resident of New York brought suit against a resident of Louisiana after the expiration of the limitation for bringing such actions provided by the laws of the State of Louisiana. However, the act of Congress approved June 11, 1864, extended such limitation for the period of the war, and the question before the court was whether or not such extended limitation was constitutional. The court held that it was, Mr. Justice Swayne saying:

The Constitution gives to Congress the power to declare war, to grant letters of marque and reprisal, and to make laws concerning captures on land and water, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, and to provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrection, and repel invasion. * * * Congress is authorized to make all laws necessary and proper to carry into effect the granted powers. The measures to be taken for carrying on war and to suppress insurrections are not defined. The decision of all such questions rests wholly in the discretion of those to whom the substantial powers involved are confided by the laws. In the latter case the power is not limited to victories in the field and the dispersion of the insurgent forces. It carries with it inherently the power to guard against the immediate renewal of the conflict and to remedy the evils which have arisen from its rise and progress. This act falls within the latter category. The power to pass it is necessarily implied from the power to make war and suppress insurrection. It is a beneficent exercise of this authority. It only applies coercively the principle of the law of nations, which ought to work the same results in the courts of all the rebellious States without the intervention of this document. * * * The act is within the canons of construction laid down by Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch v. Maryland.

I have stated above that this Congress has largely extended the exercise of war powers. In the food-control act, for the purpose of conserving the food supply of the country, to meet the demands of our Army on foreign soil, every home in the country has been affected. Every article of food was thus impressed into the public service. When the Federal Government conscripts the lives of its citizens for the common defense, are not the property and civil rights of such citizens during the period of their military service impressed into the public service to enable the Government to protect such property and rights during the period of such service? May not Congress, therefore, maintain the status quo of such property and rights during the period for which such citizens have been conscripted? Is not such property "affected with the public interest"?

In German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Kansas (223 U. S., 411), the Supreme Court of the United States, after reviewing the decisions upon this subject, said:

They demonstrate that a business, by circumstances and its nature, may rise from a private to be a public concern and be subject in consequence to governmental regulation. And they demonstrate * * * that the attempt made to place the right of public regulation in the cases where it has been exerted, and of which we have given examples, upon the ground of special privilege conferred by the public on those affected, can not be supported. The underlying principle is that business of certain kinds holds such a peculiar relation to the public interest that there is superinduced upon it the right of public regulation.

In the very notable address delivered by former Justice Hughes before the American Bar Association, after referring to this case, he said:

The extraordinary circumstances of war may bring particular business and intercourse clearly into the category of those which are affected with the public interest and which demand immediate and thoroughgoing public regulation. The production and distribution of foodstuffs, articles of prime necessity, those which have direct relation to military efficiency, those which are absolutely required for the support of the people during the stress of conflict, are plainly of this sort. Reasonable regulations to safeguard the resources upon which we depend for military success may be regarded as being within the powers confided to Congress to enable it to prosecute a successful war. In the words of the Supreme Court, "It is well settled that the Constitution is not self-destructive; in other words, that the power which it confers on the one hand it does not immediately take away on the other." (Billings v. U. S., 282 U. S., 232.) This was said in relation to the taxing power. Having been granted in express terms, the court held it had not been taken away by the due-process laws of the fifth amendment. As the Supreme Court put it in another case, "The Constitution does not conflict with itself by conferring upon the one hand a taxing power and on the other taking it away by the due-process clause." (240 U. S., 24.) Similarly it may be said that the power has been expressly given to Congress to prosecute war and to pass all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying that power into execution. That power, explicitly conferred, and absolutely essential to the Nation, is not destroyed or impaired by any later provision of the Constitution or any of the amendments. These must all be construed so as to avoid making the Constitution self-destructive, so as to preserve the rights of the citizen from unwarranted attack while insuring beyond all hazards the common defense and the perpetuity of our liberties. These rest upon the preservation of the Nation.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEELE. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. May I be pardoned for making this suggestion to the gentleman, who is not only an able legislator but a first-class lawyer, that when the Constitution says that the Congress shall have the power to raise and support an army, that includes just as much relieving them from penalties and obligations as paying them salaries or giving them subsistence in the field.

Mr. STEELE. Absolutely so.

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly that would be as much support as giving immediate and direct subsistence.

Mr. STEELE. Absolutely so. In that same connection there is another thought to which I wish to give expression at this time. That is this: These men are engaged in the service of the country. They have been conscripted to perform that service. They have been taken by the Government, whether they willed it or not, to perform that service. The property which they have, therefore, is connected with them in the performance of that service, and to that extent is impressed with a public service or public duty. The Supreme Court of the United States have, on various occasions, said that private property may be raised from its privacy to a public character, depending entirely upon the character of the service proposed to be rendered. The provisions of this bill can best be exercised by Congress rather than by State legislative authority. It grows out of the war power and the declaration of war thereunder, both of which are Federal powers, and the bill has the additional merit of providing a universal remedy throughout the Union. In my opinion the bill is clearly constitutional, and will do much to promote the efficiency and peace of mind of the citizen soldier, who has been conscripted and forced from the peaceful walks of life to serve his country in time of stress. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MAGEE].

Mr. MAGEE. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee I attended many meetings when this bill was under discussion. It has been given very careful preparation by the Judiciary Committee. I am in favor of the bill. It was reported unanimously by the committee. It is not, in my opinion, a drastic bill. The main purpose, as I view it, of the bill is to give power to the courts to protect the interests of the soldiers while they are at the front; that is, to protect their property rights. If an action is brought against a soldier, the court has the power and in its discretion can grant a stay or do what in the judgment of the court will be best for the interests of all parties concerned.

Now, so far as the constitutional question is concerned, it does not seem to me, from a study of the provisions of this bill, that any valid constitutional objection can be raised thereto. Of course, many States have passed acts, as suggested by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, in relation to the collection of taxes, providing penalties, and so forth, but I am not willing to concede that the exercise of the sovereign power of the Nation is an impairment of a contract authorized by a State, for the reason that if the sovereign power of the Nation has the constitutional right to enact a law, that right can not be taken away from the Federal Government by any action of a State. The State can pass its laws, which can be enforced until such time as the Federal Government may act. But if the Federal Government has never parted with the power, when the Federal Government does act then the Federal statute stands supreme; and, if I read correctly the later interpretations of the courts, especially of the highest courts of the several States and of the United States Supreme Court, an action of that sort on the part of the sovereign power is not regarded as an impairment of a contract.

It seems to me that this bill is a very wise one, and I can not see why anyone should raise any material objection thereto. As stated here, our boys are going abroad under the selective-draft act, and certainly anything we can do in their interest and protection it is our duty to do. [Applause.]

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAINEY). The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the Congress, I shall be brief. The bill in its general provisions has been discussed on both sides of the House. Its terms are simple and easy to be understood. It does not undertake to prevent the collection of debts which may be owed by soldiers and sailors engaged in the military service of their country during the pending war. It merely seeks to delay the hand that would strike the absent soldier's property during the continuation of the war, or such part of that time as the court may see fit. It does not do this if it appears that the soldier or sailor has sufficient property to pay his debts without embarrassing himself or family. This right to stay the creditor's suit applies to a private citizen and the State alike. It says to the State, "You shall not sell for taxes the home roof of a soldier or a sailor serving his country in this hour of peril. Nor shall you overwhelm him with penalties for the nonpayment of these taxes." It delays the collection of them until a better day shall come.

A second provision in the bill will prevent the forfeiture of insurance policies for nonpayment of premiums to the extent of $5,000 policies. It likewise undertakes to preserve whatever rights one may have who has initiated the acquiring of a homestead. In other words, broadly stated, we contract with those men whom we have called to fight our battles that in their absence their rights and their effects shall not be prejudiced nor destroyed.

Since the beginning of the extraordinary session of Congress I have supported two measures that leave with me no regrets. The first is commonly called the soldiers' and sailors' compensation and insurance bill. It says to the soldier and sailor, "In your absence the Government will pay a sufficient sum to keep from want your wife and children and other dependents whose sole support you are." It says more, "that if the soldier is wounded or incapacitated by sickness that it will care for him, and will, so far as money can, compensate him for his sacrifice and suffering." It also provides an insurance policy for him up to $10,000.

This bill is a complement of that. It undertakes to preserve his civil rights, and so far as law can it will put him in the same position at the end of his service as he was at its beginning. It prevents creditors from destroying his estate, from turning his family out of doors, and likewise restrains the State from doing so.

It is far-reaching in its provisions. It will effect the trial of causes in every court in this country. No judgments can be obtained by default in any court of any State until the provisions of this bill shall have been complied with. It makes the courts the guardian of the soldier and gives to them the power to protect his every right. The court may appoint an attorney to defend for the absent soldier, and yet this bill does not empower that attorney to waive any right the soldier may have had. It likewise is liberal in its provisions for setting aside judgments or decrees against the soldier, had in his absence. It will as nearly as possible preserve his rights as they were when his country called him into its service, and during his service it seeks to retain a home roof above the heads of his dependents.

Some have questioned its constitutionality. I do not. It affects no property rights; it merely acts on the remedy. The courts have universally held that no one can acquire a vested right in a remedy or procedure. Therefore the Congress may stay the hand of the law so far as the soldiers and sailors are concerned during their actual military service. No honest man, no patriotic man, no man with the love of his country and of his fellow man in his heart can object to its provisions. If there be others, they should be restrained. This bill will do that.

The bill also prevents the accumulation of penalties against a soldier or sailor for nonpayment of taxes, building and loan dues, or of contracts of partial payments where penalties are provided for nonpayment. It also prevents the retaking of property sold on partial payments, except under such terms and conditions as the court may prescribe, even though the terms are that payments before made shall be returned to the purchaser. There is a provision also to prevent the lapsing of insurance policies now held by men who may go into the service of our country as soldiers or sailors. The Government undertakes to pay premiums on policies in the aggregate not in excess of $5,000 during the continuation of the war. These premiums paid by the Government are charged against the policy. If the insured should lose his life, the Government will be repaid from the policy. If the insured should survive the war, he will be required to pay the premiums advanced for his benefit by the Government.

Another provision will preserve all of the rights of one who has commenced to perfect a homestead on Government lands and provides means by which he may go forward and complete his homestead while he is serving his country in the Army or Navy at the front.

Thus it will be seen that all of these provisions seek only to preserve rights that might otherwise be impaired by reason of calling men from their several walks of life to defend their Nation's honor on the field of battle. My judgment is there will not be cast against this bill a single vote. There should not be. We are requiring men—young men—to abandon homes, give up cherished ambitions and maybe life on their country's, our country's, altar; and they are doing it willingly, and we who make the laws should, so far as we can, protect them, their dependents and loved ones, and their rights. And, God helping us, we will do all that within us lies to discharge this our duty.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is generally agreed that Congress under its war power has authority to suspend the remedies for the collection of debts. That, as I understand it, is an old remedy that has been in use among civilized people whenever there has been a war. I am going to address myself to one feature of this bill in regard to which I have some doubt as to its constitutionality. I realize that it is not popular to express any doubt, but it is only fair to the House, if I speak at all, to give my actual views. I want to say, however, before I proceed, that I am going to support the bill, because whatever doubts I have, I have resolved in favor of its passage. I believe the bill is a good one and ought to pass.

There are two classes of claims in this bill upon which we suspend the remedies. One class is the claims for payment of debts. There is authority for suspending the remedies for their collection a reasonable length of time, but there is another class affected by this bill in a manner which I think comes dangerously near to a violation of the Constitution of the United States. There are two items to which I wish to direct your attention.

One is the provision in regard to leases, which authorizes courts to suspend for three months the right of a landlord to take possession of leased premises, though held under a contract which terminates the lease on failure to pay. The other is the provision which gives the like power to stay the right to terminate a contract of sale upon failure to perform, though the contract expressly declares that it becomes void for such failure and that the vendor is entitled to the possession of the property. Those two classes are entirely distinct from the class where you simply suspend the time for collecting a debt past due. In the case of a debt, the creditor has usually agreed to the amount of credit given. He has fixed the limit and selected his debtor. Postponing payment does not increase the debt or take from the creditor anything to which he has not consented. But what is the offset of the provisions of this bill as to leases or contracts of sale? Take, for instance, leases that provide that upon failure to pay an installment of rent falling due the landlord shall immediately be entitled to regain possession. If this right to possession is suspended, what does it do? In effect it extends the lease and creates a new claim, a new and additional indebtedness, contrary to express terms of the contract and against the consent of the landlord. The use of his property is taken for the benefit of a person that can not pay, and he is deprived of his remedy to collect his claim, as the fear of ejectment is often his best remedy. Take the other proposition—the sale of land where there is a provision in the contract that upon a failure to pay the purchase price the contract shall become void, and the vendor is thereupon entitled to recover the possession of the property. You have very much the same situation; the contract is violated; the vendor is deprived of the property and its rental value, as well as his remedy for forcing pay by a threat of cancellation. It has been urged that Congress may pass laws that offset or modify contracts. It is true that the provision in the Constitution against impairing the obligation of a contract is only an inhibition on the States, but there is another provision that does limit the power of Congress. The fifth amendment forbids the National Government from depriving anyone of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. The Supreme Court, as I read its decisions, has said that is practically the equivalent of the other.

I do not have the time to go into this question fully, but I want to refer anyone interested to the case of Hurtado v. California (110 U. S.), which discusses quite fully the question of how far Congress can go in depriving a person of life, liberty, or property. It is apparent from this case that a statute that singles out a person or a group of persons and forfeits or confiscates their property is not valid, because in violation of this amendment. Does not this proposed law practically take the property of one individual and give it to another? It has generally been conceded in the consideration of this bill that it takes away contract rights. A contract right is a property right, and whenever you confiscate a contract right you have confiscated property.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I must beg to be excused. I have not the time. There is another provision in the Constitution that I think we might consider in connection with these same provisions. The Government is forbidden to take private property for public use. That applies to the National Government. On first blush you would say, of course, this bill contains no provision that will take anything for public use; but stop and think. What are we taking this property for, if it is not for public use? Is the fact that we turn the property over to somebody else conclusive on this question? Suppose we had it turned over direct to the soldier as a part of his pay. Would anybody for a moment say that was not taking private property for public use? It seems to me that as against both of those constitutional prohibitions there is serious question. But there is another phase of the matter to which I wish to direct attention, and that is this: The Supreme Court in the case from 11 Wallace, cited in the report in explaining what are some of the war powers, takes occasion to say that we have a right to protect against the injuries that result from war.

It will be readily conceded that that is the object of this bill. Congress does not only have the power to do anything that may be necessary to carry on the war, but it may in a comprehensive fashion deal with the various evils that grow out if it. It is under this power that Congress may have authority to pass the provisions to which I have referred. It may be urged, though there is authority to the contrary, that the distinction that I have pointed out between suspending the remedy for collecting a debt and the remedy for retaking a person's property is not sound; that in either case the remedy is the only thing affected; that the fact that the loss to the creditor may be less than the loss to the owner of property is not a sufficient reason for making any distinction; and it may even be urged that though there is a substantial difference and property is in effect taken without due process of law, Congress still has the power to pass this bill as a proper method of relieving the suffering caused by the war. It may be said that in view of all the circumstances Congress in passing it determines that this is an appropriate and necessary means of affording this relief. This would not concede that in war the Constitution is suspended. The Supreme Court in the Milligan case, 4 Wallace, put at rest that nefarious doctrine. While I want to do everything I can to help win this war, I want to be sure that when the war comes to an end the rights of our citizens under the Constitution has not been impaired. I realize that our views of what is and what is not unconstitutional has in the months past undergone radical changes. If this bill had been presented some months ago as a measure to be in force in the event of war, I doubt very much that it would have received any serious consideration. It would no doubt have been pronounced as plainly unconstitutional, but we need it now and look at it from a different angle.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

ARTICLE I.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

SEC. 100. That for the purpose of enabling the United States the more successfully to prosecute and carry on the war in which it is at present engaged, protection is hereby extended to persons in the military service of the United States in order to prevent prejudice or injury to their civil rights during their term of service and to enable them to devote their entire energy to the military needs of the Nation, and to this end the following provisions are made for the temporary suspension of legal proceedings and transactions which may prejudice the civil rights of persons in such service during the continuance of the present war.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Speaker, I make this formal motion first for the purpose of complimenting the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and its membership on proposing to this Congress the most generous, the most humanitarian, bill that has ever been proposed in any legislature in the world of like character [applause], more generous in its scope, more far-reaching, more valuable for the purpose of the support of our armies and navies in this war than any bill of like character that has ever been proposed in any parliament or legislature, and I hope it will pass. It is true, Mr. Speaker—and there is no use in disguising the fact—that it does interfere with the validity of contracts; that it interferes with the operations of courts, with the enforcement of the statute of limitation, with the foreclosure of liens and mortgages, and with the enforcement of judgments. It is true that it interferes with all these; but gentlemen should remember that every one of these proceedings, that every one of these provisions, is a creation of government. We have made them, and under certain conditions we have the right to suspend or set them to one side. Gentlemen here have some hesitancy, some of our good lawyers have some hesitancy, in determining whether or not this is within the war powers of the Constitution. I have no hesitancy, so far as my own conclusion is concerned, in believing that it is entirely within the war powers of the Constitution. Gentlemen should understand that when the Constitution gives Congress power to raise and support armies in the field that it is not limited in the nature and character of the action which it may take to accomplish that result. It may not only raise armies, but it may support them in any way that its judgment shall determine to be wise.

It certainly occurs to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is just as much a support of the Army in the field to relieve its members in service by the suspension of the operations of government in the enforcement of debt or in the enforcement of contracts or in relieving them from the operation of penalties on taxation laws as it would be directly to give them money for their pay or to furnish food and clothing for their support.

Gentlemen should remember that it has already been determined by the Supreme Court that in war times we may suspend some of the constitutional prerogatives that are secured to the individual. We may take from them their liberty. We may take from them their property without due process of law. There is no limit to the things that may be done in time of war for the purpose of supporting the war operations of the Government. Just as soon as we get that idea into our heads we will not be troubled with these legal quibbles that are raised in regard to other provisions of the Constitution. It should be understood that preeminent above all powers is the power to preserve this Nation of ours, because without it we do not have the Constitution, without it we do not have Government, without it we do not have laws or citizenship or property rights. So supreme over all these is the power of preservation, and the war powers of the Constitution, in my judgment, are ample for the purpose of the protection and preservation of the Nation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE CONGRESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask the gentleman from North Carolina to suspend for just one moment, until I can introduce——

Mr. WEBB. I will be happy to do so.

Mr. KITCHIN (continuing). To introduce a really nonpartisan resolution. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 25.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session of the Congress by adjourning their respective Houses on Saturday, the 6th day of October, 1917, at 3 o'clock post meridian.

[Applause.]

Mr. KITCHIN. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was unanimously adopted.

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' CIVIL RIGHTS.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, the pending measure is additional evidence of the determination on the part of Congress to promote and safeguard the interest of our patriotic constituents whose names will be carried on the imperishable military and naval rolls of the Republic in the great war to establish a lasting peace, to extend the blessings of liberty, to uphold international law, to firmly establish world-wide humanity and democracy, and to maintain and vindicate for all time the rights of American citizens throughout the world.

No higher honor could fall to the lot of a Member of this House at this trying time than by speech and vote to stand for the honor, glory, and defense of our country, and to leave nothing undone in the way of just and generous legislation for the brave men who will fight on land and sea beneath our starry flag. We are justly proud of the American soldier and sailor. We need no assurance that he will do his full duty on the other side. He will be true to the best traditions of those whose courage and valor fill the brightest and most enduring pages in the history of the Republic. We are determined that our soldier and sailor boys shall have the best this great, rich, prosperous country can afford, that they shall want for nothing which the love, labor, and money of more than 100,000,000 loyal and grateful American men, women, and children can give.

Every Member of this House voted to double the pay of the soldiers and sailors. A unanimous vote was cast for the bill to insure the lives of our heroes, and to provide for their dependents, and to make just provision for those who may be injured in battle.

This last measure—the bill we are now considering—to protect the civil rights of those in the military and naval service of the United States, I predict will receive the undivided support of the membership of this House.

All hail to the brave men who will constitute our great Navy and our new Grand Army of the Republic.

We are honoring ourselves in passing this just, wise, and patriotic legislation in their interest. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

(2) When under this act any application is required to be made to a court in which no proceeding has already been commenced with respect to the matter, such application may be made to any court of competent jurisdiction—Federal, State, or local.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, in line 19, page 4, I move to strike out after the word "court" the remainder of that line and the remainder of line 20. I will say that was inserted before we placed in the bill the definition of the word "court," and therefore it should go out as being surplusage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEBB: Page 4, lines 19 and 20, after the word "court," strike out the following: "of competent jurisdiction, Federal, State, or local."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE II.

GENERAL RELIEF.

SEC. 200. That in any action or proceeding commenced in any court if there shall be a default of an appearance by the defendant the plaintiff before entering judgment shall file in the court an affidavit setting forth facts showing that the defendant is not in military service. If unable to file such affidavit plaintiff shall in lieu thereof file an affidavit setting forth either that the defendant is in the military service or that plaintiff is not able to determine whether or not defendant is in such service. If an affidavit is not filed showing that the defendant is not in the military service, no judgment shall be entered without first securing an order of court directing such entry, and no such order shall be made if the defendant is in such service until after the court shall have appointed an attorney to represent defendant and protect his interest and the court shall on application make such appointment. Unless it appears that the defendant is not in such service the court may require as a condition before judgment is entered that the plaintiff file a bond approved by the court conditioned to indemnify the defendant, if in military service, against any loss or damage that he may suffer by reason of any judgment should the judgment be thereafter set aside in whole or in part. And the court may make such other and further order or enter such judgment as in its opinion may be necessary to protect the rights of the defendant under this act.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I make the pro forma amendment for the purpose of asking a question. Under section 200 and the provision just read, page 5, I will ask the gentleman in charge of the bill where there are a number of defendants and service is not had, as it need not be had in many cases, must there be an affidavit filed in such cases. It would seem so.

Mr. WEBB. Where there are a number of defendants and one is a soldier, you can proceed against the defendants who are not soldiers, but before you can have a default judgment against anybody, in order to protect absolutely the soldier against a default judgment, you are required to file an affidavit that the defendant is not a soldier in the service of his country. Now, we discussed that very carefully around the table, as it looked like a hardship. But I doubt whether there is a man in the United States who has a claim against another who does not know now or will not know hereafter whether he is or is not a soldier, but in order to protect a soldier when he is away serving his country we thought it was better to require it than to take the chances of letting the dependents of soldiers be sold out of their house and home during their absence.

Mr. CANNON. You know two-thirds of our people, at least half if not two-thirds, live in cities where people do not know each other as they do in my district and the gentleman's district?

Mr. WEBB. They rarely have personal transactions with people that they do not know. And I will say to my friend again, if there is any doubt about it, later on in the bill we provide that the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, or some one designated by either, shall answer the question of whether or not the person named is a soldier or sailor, his pay, time of enlistment, and all those things. So a mere letter from the person interested in the suit will bring those things and shall be considered as prima facie evidence.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. On page 5, in line 9, it says:

And no such order shall be made if the defendant is in such service until after the court shall have appointed an attorney to represent defendant and protect his interests.

Now, the question is, Is there any provision made for the appointment of the attorney that is to be appointed by the court?

Mr. WEBB. No, sir; there is not.

Mr. MADDEN. Is he to act without pay?

Mr. WEBB. In most cases, I take it, he will.

Mr. MADDEN. He probably would.

Mr. WEBB. But he is an officer of the court, in the first place, and if the case is such that a lawyer does much substantial work, I think the court could suggest a fee that would be in accordance with the importance of the case, and there would be no trouble about paying it. We feared the idea of putting in the bill that an attorney should be paid fees.

Mr. MADDEN. I was going to suggest that the court ought to have the authority to do it, but it should be left discretionary with the court whether he does it or not. Is there any provision for the payment if the court should decide to pay it?

Mr. WEBB. You are right, and that is just one of those difficulties that we are up against. If we put in here that an attorney shall be paid, the lawyer might tie up the estate of a soldier while he is away.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think any first-class lawyer would do it, but there might be some injustice if the litigation was a long one.

Mr. WEBB. Under those circumstances the court would suggest a fee that would be satisfactory to both sides.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I would suggest to the chairman that the almost universal practice now in most of the State courts is that the court is given the power and discretion to fix the fee of attorneys ad litem, and he can make it nominal or otherwise. And it is usually added to the costs in the case.

Mr. MADDEN. Who pays in a case like this? That is the question.

Mr. WEBB. That is the question. I realize the situation.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Recurring to the question asked by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], I want to direct the gentleman's attention to the fact that under the section that applies to evictions for failure to pay rent, the benefit is given to a soldier's dependents. How is a landlord to know when he makes a contract with certain parties whether they are dependents of a soldier, and how is he to ascertain when they are on the premises and he wants to take action to collect his rent? How is he to know they are in the scope of that protection? I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the dependents may be parents, or may be persons who are not residing with him. The parents may make the contract for rental of premises without any knowledge on the landlord's part that they have a soldier that they may be depending upon.

Mr. WEBB. My friend readily sees that we do not define dependents as we did in the insurance bill. It is almost impossible in this bill to define a dependent, and so we all thought it would be better to leave it in the power of the court, who understands what a dependent means, to say whether or not in this particular case or that a person about to be evicted was a dependent or not.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. How would the landlord know he was proceeding against a person who was a soldier's dependent? It is made a crime under the provisions of the bill to evict him, and if this dependent should even fail to make a defense it seems likely the landlord would be guilty of an offense.

Mr. WEBB. It is a crime in most of the States to evict any person by force. I do not think we have added anything new to this, except we want to bring the matter into court so that a wise judge can do justice between the parties.

The Clerk read as follows:

(4) If any judgment shall be rendered in any action or proceeding governed by this section against any person in military service during the period of such service or within 30 days thereafter, and it appears that such person was prejudiced by reason of his military service in making his defense thereto, such judgment may, upon application, made by such person or his legal representative, not later than 90 days after the termination of such service, be opened by the court rendering the same and such defendant or his legal representative let in to defend, provided it is made to appear that the defendant has a meritorious or legal defense to the action or some part thereof. Vacating, setting aside, or reversing any judgment because of any of the provisons of this act shall not impair any right or title acquired by any bona fide purchaser for value under such judgment.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a pro forma amendment. On page 5, line 23, there is a typographical error. The word "is" ought to be "it." And I move to strike out "is" and insert "it."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEBB: Page 5, line 23, after the word "knowing," strike out the word "is" and insert in lieu thereof the word "it."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEVENSON: Page 6, line 24, after the word "judgment," strike out the period and add the following: "but the owner who has been in the military service shall have the right to redeem the property sold not later than six months after the termination of the war by paying the purchase price paid by such purchaser and interest thereon at the legal rate of the State where located."

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, the reason for offering that amendment is this: There is a provision here for very carefully scanning the granting of all judgments. No judgment will be opened unless a clear case of fraud upon the soldier is shown, evidently because safeguards are thrown around the granting of this judgment.

Now, the provision with which the paragraph closes—that is, "Vacating, setting aside, or reversing any judgment because of any of the provisions of this act shall not impair any right or title acquired by any bona fide purchaser for value under such judgment"—simply renders nugatory the right to have the judgment opened. In other words, he can go to work and will have to show a clear case of fraud before they open the judgment. A man who has committed a fraud on him perhaps has had the property sold for perhaps 25 cents on the dollar on its value. That is the way it happens most frequently in that kind of a case. A man who has done that has the money in his pocket. The innocent purchaser has bought the property at a great sacrifice. The defendant comes in and gets the judgment opened, and when he gets it opened the man who has got his money has gone, or he is not worth anything, and he gets no relief there. The man who has got his property for 25 cents on the dollar is immune, because this proposition says you can not go over his title. It is like one of these successful surgical operations in which the patient dies. That is exactly the situation he is in. Therefore I propose to amend this paragraph so that he can have the same right to redeem that he would have when the State sells his property for taxes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Would not the gentleman, then, proceed on the same theory of redemption as is provided by the States in the case of property sold for taxes?

Mr. STEVENSON. I would have no objection to that, but you will note that in Article V, subdivision 3, the time for redemption of land after it is sold for taxes is fixed at six months after the termination of the war, and I was fixing it so as to make all the provisions conform. Certainly this provision ought to be in here.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Sales for taxes or sales under foreclosure or trustee are different. Now, as to the period for redemption for sale of property under foreclosure proceedings, in many of the States it is 6 months, and in some States it is a year, and in some States it is 18 months.

Mr. STEVENSON. In some States they are not entitled to redeem at all; in fact, in most of the States they are not, and therefore it seems to me that in order to make the whole thing harmonious a man should be allowed to come up and redeem in the same period after the judicial sale as after the tax sale.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBBINS. Is there not a radical difference between a tax sale and a judicial sale? In this case it is a sale of personal property, and if you put a notice on it, legal or otherwise, that this property shall be redeemable in six months, if the soldier redeems it, you do not get any remedy at all, whereas in the tax case——

Mr. STEVENSON. There is no distinction here between the sale of personal property and the sale of real estate, and under the laws of most of the States real estate is sold the same as personal property, and property is sold for taxes just the same. The two are on a parity, except that there is much more likelihood of imposition in this case than in the case of a tax sale. In the case of a tax sale it is the State that has the execution; it is the State that is making the sale. In this case it can be redeemed only after opening judgment, and this bill provides that only when the judgment has been fraudulently obtained can it be opened, and in this case there should be a greater remedy when it is redeemed against a fraud than in a case where the property is sold by reason of a tax sale.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentleman from South Carolina has carefully read the provision of this section; otherwise he would not have made the statement that if the judgment is set aside, the man against whom the judgment is rendered would have no redress for a sale under the judgment. He overlooked the provision requiring the giving of a bond sufficient to pay any damages that may be done the defendant by rendering a judgment against him, or any process that may be issued on that judgment. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEELE] suggested, this is a general provision. All property that may be seized or sold under a judgment, personal or real, is provided for under the provisions of this section. It would therefore be useless to have a judgment and undertake to sell personal property under it if it was tagged with the notice that if the defendant should appear and the judgment should be set aside the purchaser must restore the property. The amendment, if adopted, would destroy the soldier's credit. It would cause the sacrifice of his property, because nobody would buy it. In the next place, I think the gentleman's position is unfair to the soldier in this respect; that it provides that the judgment may be set aside only for fraud. The committee went beyond that. The committee thought that if the substantial rights of the defendant had been sacrificed by reason of his service in the Army, he ought to be given the right to reopen the judgment. For instance——

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the gentleman understand by the amendment that the soldier shall have the right to redeem only when it is set aside for fraud? I understand from the terms of the act that it would have to be practically a fraud before it could be done.

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman is in error. It was thought by the committee that if a man were in the Army some collector of a bad debt—and I think he is the most active individual in the world—might get up a lot of sale accounts, barred by the statute of limitations, and proceed to judgment against the absent defendant.

Well, in a case of that kind the committee thought if he should come home and show the court that he had any defense, meritorious or legal, no harm would be done to put him just where he was when the action was commenced against him. Let him make any defense that he could have made had he been present in person when the suit was tried. In view of the liberal provision for setting aside judgments, it was thought by the committee that the other provision which required, if the court should so decide—and I take it for granted that it would—that the judgment creditor before he can obtain a judgment must execute a bond conditioned that he will pay all damages——

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield once more?

Mr. CARAWAY. With pleasure.

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman will notice that that is the provision where the creditor fails to prove that the defendant is not in such service. It is not where he has to prove that the defendant is in such service and has no application at all to the case I have in mind. The case is this: Unless it appears that the defendant is not in such service the court may require, as a condition before judgment is entered, that the plaintiff file a bond approved by the court, conditioned to indemnify the defendant if in military service; that is, when it is not made to appear affirmatively that he is not in such service.

Mr. CARAWAY. On page 6, in subsection 3, commencing in line 4, is the provision—the gentleman did not read it all—

And in such case—

That is, where it does appear that the man is in military service and an attorney has been appointed to defend him—a like bond may be required and an order made to protect the rights of such person in military service.

So the rights of the defendant, I think, are cared for, and the committee hopes that the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 6, line 21, beginning with the word "vacating," in line 21, strike out the remaining portion of line 21 and all of lines 22, 23, and 24.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I had the same idea in mind that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] had in offering his amendment, but I think my amendment will accomplish the same end more effectively.

Mr. STEVENSON. That suits me. I had rather have it that way.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I can see no reason in the world for having that provision in the bill, because the bill itself in terms expressly provides that this act shall not apply to the man who is not a soldier. If that is true, it should protect the rights of a man who is a soldier; and in order to protect those rights you can not give to an innocent purchaser the privilege of coming in and depriving him of those rights.

Under the terms of this bill there can hardly be an innocent purchaser in the real sense of the word, because the intending purchaser can examine the judgment roll and see whether the records show that the defendant is not a soldier. If they show that, then the purchaser is perfectly safe in going ahead and making the purchase; but if the judgment rolls show that the defendant is a soldier, or that it is not known whether or not he is a soldier, then in order to protect the rights of the soldier you can not permit an innocent purchaser to come in and deprive him of those rights by purchasing the judgment or the property under the judgment. Now, section 200 provides that a bond may be executed, but it does not require the bond to be executed, and, besides, the bond will not protect the soldier, because he is compelled not only to sue to set aside the judgment, but he is then compelled to sue on the bond after he has set the judgment aside. And why can not the purchaser be protected by a bond as well as the soldier? Instead of having a bond to protect the soldier, let the seller protect the purchaser by a bond.

Then, in addition, if an innocent purchaser has intervened, of course the soldier can not recover the property back under the terms of this bill, and in my State there is no redemption of property sold under a judgment. Besides being put in the attitude of having to move twice, in order to obtain his rights, he would be put in the attitude, if the bond was not perfectly good, of perhaps not attaining those rights at all.

I am heartily in favor of this bill, and I want the soldier to have the full benefit of it. If he risks his life for the protection of this country, including all property rights, most certainly the door should not be left open for some smooth shylock to destroy his property rights by assuming the rôle of an innocent purchaser. Under this bill, as drafted, any grasping creditor could by a system of transfers place the property beyond the reach of the very rights which this bill is intended to confer upon him.

The paragraph which the amendment would strike out does not confer any rights, but it provides a loophole for depriving the soldier of his rights. By striking it out you will leave the soldier all of the rights and remedies which are stipulated, and at the same time you will strike down the opportunity of designing ones to nullify those rights and remedies.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. JONES of Texas. You may.

Mr. CARAWAY. If you strike out these lines, do you not leave your defendant absolutely without any remedy at all?

Mr. JONES of Texas. I do not think so. I think you leave him with his remedy. This bill provides the remedy, while the part I seek to strike out would deprive him of his remedy, by letting an innocent purchaser intervene.

Mr. CARAWAY. You simply say he may set the judgment aside, and then you do not say what may happen to it. You leave him without any remedy.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If the judgment is set aside, he can recover his property by paying the debt.

Mr. CARAWAY. You say in your State there is no right of redemption at all after sale under a judgment?

Mr. JONES of Texas. After sale there is not. But this bill provides one.

Mr. CARAWAY. Would not the law of your State, then, govern, and would not the defendant be stripped of any right at all? You simply leave him with the naked right to set the judgment aside, which would do him no good.

Mr. JONES of Texas. After the judgment is set aside, of course a man can pay his debt and take his property.

Mr. CARAWAY. I thought you said he had no right of redemption.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If he can set the judgment aside, he can redeem. This bill gives him the right to set the judgment aside, and having done so, of course he can redeem by paying his debt.

As far as property selling for less than it is worth is concerned, property always sells for less than it is worth under a forced sale, sometimes for 25 cents on a dollar; and if through the guise of an innocent purchaser you permit a fraud to be perpetrated upon him, that perhaps he can not prove is a fraud, and therefore can not set the judgment aside, you practically deprive him of all his rights.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement prepared by Secretary Lane concerning the activities of the several bureaus of his department—the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Reclamation Service, and so forth.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, let me call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to what would be the effect of his proposed amendment. In my State the right of redemption from a judgment sale of real estate is permitted. As a consequence the property hardly ever sells for much of anything except to the judgment creditor. If your amendment is adopted you will sacrifice the property and deprive the soldier from having a fair amount bid at the judgment sale.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman admit that the only protection to the soldier would be in the right to have a stay in the rendition of the judgment?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This bill provides for such stay. It gives ample power to stay the judgment. We ought not to sell a soldier's property under such conditions that it is sacrificed. If we adopt your amendment it seems to me that is what you are going to do.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman think there would be more harm by people selling him out when he is not there and then having a sale to an innocent purchaser?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is a question of what is the practical thing to do. Will the soldier suffer more by the method proposed by the gentleman or by the one that is in the bill? I believe, in all fairness, it is much better for the soldier and for the person who is dealing with him to accept the provision in the bill. After you have stricken out by your amendment this provision in the bill, suppose you set aside the judgment, in what condition would you be? Would not the purchaser still be in a position to insist that he had purchased it in good faith and secured good title? He would, I believe, in my State. It seems to me that we ought to make the rule uniform in all the States by leaving the bill as it is drawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FERRIS). The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas by the way of substitute.

The question was taken, and the amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I want to pursue the question raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] in regard to attorney's fees. I had intended to offer an amendment, on page 6, line 9, but will defer to the judgment of the chairman of the committee in regard to it after he hears my statement.

Pension attorneys are now allowed a statutory fee, I think, of $10. Probably it is a wise provision of law to fix a limitation on the fee. Whether it will be a wise thing to do in this case I do not know, but since jurisdiction over many of the matters that will arise under this bill will be had before justices of the peace and magistrates who may appoint attorneys, it seems that there ought to be some limitation.

I had prepared an amendment to be submitted, on page 6, line 9, to read like this:

Nor shall he receive any compensation for his services in excess of $10 in any case unless authorized by a court of competent jurisdiction.

That might be modified by striking out the amount so that it would read:

Nor shall he receive any compensation for his services in any case unless authorized by a court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. SUMNERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I will yield.

Mr. SUMNERS. No attorney's fees could be taxed up against a defendant unless by order of the court.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The court appoints the attorney to take care of the interests of the defendant.

Mr. SUMNERS. Yes; but the attorney's fees are not taxed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Suppose it happens to be a justice of the peace in some congested community where individuals are striving for their rights, or where there is little sympathy for those in adversity, and a favorite attorney of the court or of the justice of the peace or the magistrate is appointed and all matters are turned over into the hands of one attorney. Does it not seem to the gentleman that there ought to be some limitation upon the power of a minor court to appoint attorneys where folks in distress do not know their rights under the law or may never know that this law existed?

Mr. SUMNERS. I will say, if the inquiry is addressed to me, that the legislatures of the several States, of course, will undertake to take care of these conditions which obtain within the State. These soldiers who will be brought before the court will have their friends there, and the court is charged with the responsibility to protect them. The committee felt in drafting this bill that it was going as far as it could afford to go in controlling the discretion of the local tribunal. We felt that the soldier would have the protection and the local sympathy and local interests of the courts.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That may be. The question of sympathy and patriotism is all right, provided the patriotism does not make money out of patriotism, and provided that those that have sympathy for the unfortunate do not attempt to turn it to their own profit and advantage. There are lawyers in some communities who specialize; they organize to capture certain lines of business, and some of them have the reputation of being very close behind the ambulance when the victim of an accident is taken to the hospital. I know this is not good practice, but we often hear of it.

It seems to me that the question of fees ought to be determined by some court, and I will ask the gentleman if he will consider either one of the amendments suggested.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not urge his amendment. I stated before why the committee did not go into the question of lawyers' fees, and I fear if we should adopt the amendment suggested by the gentleman that in every case where a poor soldier has a little matter in court the judge will allow some lawyer a $10 fee. I think it would almost amount to a command to allow a lawyer $10 for something he could do perhaps in a few minutes. I do not think we ought to adopt it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman accept an amendment, if I should offer it, in this form:

Nor shall he (the attorney) receive any compensation for his services in any case unless authorized by a court of competent jurisdiction?

Mr. WEBB. That is what the law is now. It leaves it to the discretion of the court. That is the law in every State.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why not give notice now that we do not propose to tolerate ambulance chasers in this soldiers' relief business?

Mr. WEBB. I think we have left that to the discretion of the wise judge, and I do not think he will permit it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I question whether you have done that in the bill specifically.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is the law and practice in every jurisdiction. Fees would not be allowed except by order of the court.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to do so in the gentleman's time, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Page 6, line 9, after the word "acts," strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "nor shall he receive any compensation for his services in any case unless authorized by a court of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I hope that that amendment will be voted down. I think it would authorize every court to give the lawyer $10.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SIEGEL: Page 5, line 15, after the word "bond," insert the following: "in such a sum as the court shall fix, and to be."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I can not consent to that, because the next language covers it, for it provides that it is in the approval of the court. The court fixes the amount of the bond and the conditions. I do not think it is necessary to insert this provision.

Mr. SIEGEL. With all due respect to the gentleman who framed the bill, it simply says now that he shall file a bond approved by the court. It does not say who shall fix the amount, and every statute that I have seen always states that the amount of the bond shall be fixed by the court.

Mr. WEBB. Does the gentleman think that the court would approve a bond of a dollar when $500 of property is involved?

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to say to my friends that when one of our colleagues was serving on the bench, and I refer to Mr. Bennet, he had that very question before him in section 191 of our municipal court act, and the act had to be thrown out in our State, because it did not provide that the sum should be fixed by the court. I can not see any objection to it. I ask the gentleman to accept the amendment in order to make it more definite.

Mr. WEBB. As suggested by one of my colleagues on the committee, if we go into that, then we ought to say how many sureties we should have and all that. I suggest that we leave that to the court.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the war-revenue bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the war-revenue bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 202. That when an action for compliance with the terms of any contract is stayed pursuant to this act no fine or penalty shall accrue by reason of failure to comply with the terms of such contract during the period of such stay, and in any case where a person fails to perform any obligation and a fine or penalty for such nonperformance is incurred a court may, on such terms as may be just, relieve against the enforcement of such fine or penalty if it shall appear that the person who would suffer by such fine or penalty was in the military service when the penalty was incurred and that by reason of such service the ability of such person to pay was thereby materially impaired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by inserting after the word "pay," in line 21, page 7, the words "or perform."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 203. That in any action or proceeding commenced in any court against a person in military service, before or during the period of such service, or within 60 days thereafter, the court may, in its discretion, on its own motion, and on application to it by such person or some person on his behalf shall, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the defendant to comply with the judgment or order entered or sought is not materially affected by reason of his military service.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the period should be stricken out in line 6, on page 8, after the word "service," and a colon inserted in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

ARTICLE III.

RENT, INSTALLMENT CONTRACTS, MORTGAGES.

SEC. 300. (1) That no eviction or distress shall be made during the period of military service in respect of any premises for which the agreed rent does not exceed $50 per month, occupied for dwelling purposes by the wife, children, or other dependents of a person in military service, except upon leave of court granted upon application therefor or granted in an action affecting the right of possession.

(2) On any such application or in any such action the court may, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, on application, unless in the opinion of the court the ability of the tenant to pay the agreed rent is not materially affected by reason of such military service, stay the proceedings for not longer than three months, as provided in this act, or it may make such other order as may be just.

(3) Any person who shall take part in any eviction or distress otherwise than as provided in subsection (1) hereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punishable by imprisonment not to exceed one year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both.

(4) The Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, is hereby empowered, subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, to order an allotment of the pay of a person in military service in reasonable proportion to discharge the rent of premises occupied for dwelling purposes by the wife, children, or other dependents of such person.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 20, after the word "shall," insert the word "knowingly."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to that.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, in the time I am allowed in offering this amendment I desire to state that I am in favor of the bill and indorse its provisions, and I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD showing my position in favor of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 301. (1) That no person who has received, or whose assignor has received, under a contract for the purchase of real or personal property, or of lease or bailment with a view to purchase of such property, a deposit or installment of the purchase price from a person or from the assignor of a person who, after the date of payment of such deposit or installment, has entered military service, shall exercise any right or option under such contract to rescind or terminate the contract or resume possession of the property for nonpayment of any installment falling due during the period of such military service, except by action in any court.

(2) Upon the hearing of such action the court may order the repayment of prior installments or deposits, or any part thereof, as a condition of terminating the contract and resuming possession of the property, or may, in its discretion, on its own motion, and shall, on application to it by such person in military service or some person on his behalf, under a stay of proceedings as provided in this act unless, in the opinion of the court, the ability of the defendant to comply with the terms of the contract is not materially affected by reason of such service; or it may make such other disposition of the case as may be equitable to conserve the interests of all parties.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOLSTEAD: Page 10, line 20, strike out lines 20 and 21 and all of line 22 except the words "in its discretion."

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I just want to call attention to the fact that that language is entirely unnecessary, that the last part of the section gives the court the right to do anything that it legally can do. This language attempts to confer a power that I am very doubtful we can constitutionally confer. It is one feature of this bill about which I have more doubt than any other. It does not seem to me the amendment takes from the court any power that it needs or that we can legally confer upon it. The general power conferred in the last part of this section is as broad as the Constitution. If I thought this amendment would weaken the bill, I should not offer it, but I do not think it does. It leaves it intact for all practical purposes and removes one serious question as to its constitutionality.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I regret to differ with by good friend on the committee, and I think we should make a mistake to strike out the language which he proposes to strike out. I believe it will be regrettable both for the soldier and for the installment man or the man who sells on installments. We ought to keep the language in the bill because, unless we do authorize it, the court of the local forum may not have the authority to order repayment. Now, there is an organization in New York City represented by able, acute lawyers and when they saw this section in the newspapers they sent their representatives down here. They understood they were not going to be permitted to retake any property at all. They had scanned this section over and over and when they came to the committee room, and we explained what we were providing, they had no objection because we only take away from them the right to go summarily into a soldier's home, when nobody is there but his wife and little child, probably, and take the piano or the bedstead. As it is, he has to go to court to do it, where a judicial officer can supervise the proceeding. When he gets into the court, if the judge finds that by the seller paying back a certain amount and taking the property it would put him, the defendant, in status quo, if I may use the word; let the court do so. I think it would be unfortunate to strike out the provision, as I said, both for the man who sells the property, the buyer, and the soldier. The poor people especially buy on installments, and very often a judge can make a very equitable and just arrangement requiring that the man who sold the property on the installment plan pay back to the person buying a little of the amount paid and take the property over.

Mr. ROBBINS. Or forfeit the installment.

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I will yield.

Mr. TOWNER. The first paragraph of section 301 is for the benefit of the soldier or sailor because it says that no forfeiture shall be declared except by the court. Now, the provision that the gentleman from Minnesota asks to strike out is really the provision by which an equitable settlement may be made between the parties. If you take that away then the court would perhaps have no jurisdiction or authority to do that which is proposed by this section to be done—to say that upon repaying a part of the payments that have been made they might then obtain possession of the property.

Mr. WEBB. I think my friend has the idea exactly, and I should dislike very much to see this language go out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, before the Clerk reads I would like to move to strike out the word "any," in line 18, page 10, and insert in lieu thereof "a"; after the word "court" strike out the period and insert "of competent jurisdiction." That language is a little too indefinite, so that it will read "by action in a court of competent jurisdiction."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WEBB: Page 10, line 18, after the word "action," strike out the word "any" and insert in lieu thereof the word "a"; and after the word "court" strike out the period and insert "of competent jurisdiction."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEBB. Now, Mr. Speaker, in line 25, the first word, "under," is manifestly a typographical error, and it ought to be "order."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 25, strike out the word "under" and insert in lieu thereof the word "order."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEBB. Now, I offer an amendment which I would like to have reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WEBB: Page 10, under section 301, after subsection (1), add a new paragraph, as follows:

"(a) Any person who shall knowingly resume possession of property which is the subject of this section otherwise than as provided in subsection (1) hereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by imprisonment not to exceed one year or by fine not to exceed $1,000, or both."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, this same provision we have in reference to unlawful eviction of soldier dependents. Now, in those cases where property is bought on the installment plan we propose to require the man who sells it—because he usually makes a big profit—before taking the property from the woman whose husband is absent at the front, that he shall take it under this provision, and if he does not he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. I yield to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Would it not be better, instead of making that a subsection of this subsection, to renumber the subsection and make that "2" and this "3"?

Mr. WEBB. That can be done. There will be no objection to that.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I want to call attention to this language, if I caught it correctly—"anyone who shall resume possession." How? He may get it peaceably; he may get it when it is abandoned, when there is no one who cares for it. Now, you would not punish a man by a court fine and imprisonment for that. It seems to me you ought to have something in that besides simply "resuming possession."

Mr. WEBB. So far as I am concerned, I am in favor of making it apply to any man, no matter how he gets hold of it, if he does not take it under the provisions of this section.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There may be some property that may have been abandoned before the soldier entered the service.

Mr. WEBB. It is easy to talk about abandonment. I believe that there are sharks——

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I did not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WEBB. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is not fair to call a man a shark under these circumstances. Suppose this property had been abandoned before the soldier enters the service, and he simply takes possession of it peaceably, as he has a perfect right to do? You punish him if he does not bring a suit in court for the purpose of getting possession of it. It seems to me you ought to put in some provision there to show that he is taking advantage in violation of somebody's rights.

Mr. WEBB. Did not my friend agree to the section about eviction from the premises?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Eviction is a different proposition in most cases. You are putting somebody out. You are not putting anybody out by this. I am perfectly willing to put in the provision you have got if you will put in language there so as to put the man in the wrong. But it seems to me your language is entirely too broad.

Mr. WEBB. I can imagine that a soldier's wife may go to the front to visit him and leave his property at home, and the installment agent would go and "peaceably" take it. I would believe in punishing him for it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 409. That the bonds so delivered shall be held by the respective insurers as security for the payment of the defaulted premiums with interest. To indemnify it against loss the United States shall have a first lien upon the value of any policy receiving the benefits of this article, and no loan or settlement shall be made by the insurer on such policy which may prejudice the security of such lien.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, we are going so fast that I sort of slipped there. I want to ask a question of the chairman of the committee as to section 409. I want to ask him whether he does not think there ought to be a provision there that would also protect the Government against a first lien and also on judgments? Did you think of that feature of it?

Mr. WEBB. I think under this language the United States has the first lien. I could see how the insurance company may have loaned some money on the policy and probably claim a prior lien. But when an attachment is levied against a policy taken care of under this act the Government of the United States would have a prior lien under this language.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is what I think it ought to be. The Government ought to have a prior lien on it, and the amount should be limited on which it had a prior lien also.

Mr. WEBB. No attachment will hold against this policy after the insurance is taken care of by the Government, because, eo instanti, the lien takes place and no subsequent attachment would have priority over the Government's lien.

Mr. ROBBINS. I wanted to know whether that had been considered by the committee or not.

Mr. WEBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBBINS. It ought to be carefully guarded.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 414. That this article shall not apply to and policy which is void or which may at the option of the insurer be voidable, if the insured is in military service, either in this country or abroad, nor to any policy which as a result of being in military service, either in this country or abroad, provides for the payment of any sum less than the face thereof or for the payment of an additional amount as premium.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I observe another typographical error, at the end of line 10, on page 19. The word printed "and," at the end of line 10, should be changed to "any."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 19, line 10, by striking out the word "and" and inserting the word "any."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking a question on the insurance section generally.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. ROBBINS. What does the committee figure this will cost the Government to carry on and maintain this section of the bill?

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend from Pennsylvania that we tried to get the most expert insurance men we could get before our committee, and we have had the very best. There is no way to figure it, except to say that it is going to be unusually small. Practically every insurance policy that will be carried by the Government under this provision will be 3 years old or over, and all those policies will have some reserve.

Mr. ROBBINS. Accumulated reserve value or cash surrender value?

Mr. WEBB. Cash surrender value, which will protect the Government for two or three years, and by that time I hope the war will be over. We have figured it very carefully, and I think that as it is finally worked out the country will be surprised to find that an unusually low amount will be required. Only in few cases will the soldier permit a policy to lapse that has the Government back of it. If he does, the Government will pay off the policy if it lapses, and that winds up the business. I am glad my friend asked that question.

Mr. ROBBINS. I am glad to learn that that is the fact, because it has not been made apparent what the cost will be, and that is one of the features of the bill. I can see that if the policy has not run any considerable time, has not any paid-up value at the time of settlement, the Government might be compelled to pay considerable.

Mr. WEBB. My friend is right about that. But every policy that has been issued in the last three years, either by the fraternal organizations or by the old-line insurance companies, has in it a war-risk provision, providing that if the policyholder goes to war the policy becomes void. We provide that no premiums on such policy shall be paid or carried by the Government, because in these cases the soldier should wind up that kind of a policy and take out insurance from the War-Risk Bureau.

Mr. ROBBINS. That is the increased premium caused by the extra hazard?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; on account of the increased premium due to the extra hazard. We do not believe those policies should be continued or carried by the Government. We think it wise for that reason.

Mr. ROBBINS. The soldier can take out insurance under the other act?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. ROBBINS. He can convert that after the war into other insurance?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBB. Certainly.

Mr. FESS. There is no provision in the bill authorizing the expenditure of money, is there?

Mr. WEBB. Yes. We authorize the deposit of bonds with insurance companies, and after the policy is finally wound up, after the war is over, we authorize a settlement, which may require the payment of money by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. FESS. This bill, then, provides for a certain obligation on the part of the Government?

Mr. WEBB. Yes; contingently. If the soldier, when he comes back, refuses to pay up the premiums which the Government has advanced, then the Government is subrogated to the rights of the soldier, and if there is anything remaining due, the Secretary of the Treasury will have to pay it.

Mr. FESS. How is it that we are in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. WEBB. Simply because there is only an indirect or contingent charge on the Government carried in the bill. There is no direct certain charge, although possibly in some cases there will be, though there may never be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 415. That this article shall apply only to insurance companies or associations which are required by the law under which they are organized or doing business to maintain a reserve, or, which if not so required, have made or shall make provision for the collection from all those insured in such insurer of a premium to cover the special war risk of those insured persons who are in military service.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Why did the committee limit the real estate to real property occupied by dwelling or for business purposes?

Mr. WEBB. I will say to my friend why we did it. We thought if the Government took care of the soldier's home and the business from which he fed the inmates of his home we were going far enough. We thought that we should not go so far as to reach out and affect his investments. We thought that in all probability his military service would not affect those investments, and therefore we thought it best to leave that out.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Let me put this case to the gentleman: Supposing one of these men had bought a lot, on which he had intended to build a house for his own personal use. That would not be included?

Mr. WEBB. No.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That would be sacrificed?

Mr. WEBB. I do not know that it would be sacrificed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It might be sacrificed. At least it might be sold.

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And he would have to redeem it later.

Mr. WEBB. But under the general provisions of the bill, if it appeared that his military service made him less able to pay, why, he would probably be protected.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And would not that provision also prevent the abuse of this privilege by men who had a large amount of vacant land for investment purposes? Does not the gentleman think that is a pretty narrow provision?

Mr. WEBB. No; I think not. We went over it very carefully, and we felt that the Government ought not to go out into the business of protecting rich men who are in the Army, who have got tens of thousands of dollars invested for profit. But we wanted to protect the man who needs protection, the man who has got nothing but a home and a business. But beyond that, when it goes into his investments, his military service is not going to affect that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does not the next paragraph absolutely demand that a man's military service shall render him less able to pay?

Mr. WEBB. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. And would not that prevent any man from taking any undue advantage of such a provision?

Mr. WEBB. Undue advantage?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. WEBB. I do not know that I catch the gentleman's point.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Suppose a fairly rich man wanted to be exempt from his taxes. He would have to make affidavit to the fact that his military service rendered it impossible or impracticable for him to pay.

Mr. WEBB. No; that his ability to meet his obligation had been materially affected by reason of his military service.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No rich man could take advantage of that.

Mr. WEBB. He ought not to take advantage of it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Of course not.

Mr. WEBB. No.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But it seems to me that a poor man who had bought a lot on which he intended to build a home ought to be protected.

Mr. WEBB. He can be, but not from taxes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Not under this provision.

Mr. WEBB. He can be protected by a stay, if his ability to meet his obligation has been affected by his military service.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No, because it applies only to land that is used for his own dwelling or for business purposes. It would not apply to a vacant lot in that case.

Mr. WEBB. It is not his home or his business, and that is as far as the committee thought they ought to go.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think it is a little too narrow.

Mr. WEBB. It may be. I am not contentious about it. But you will see, if you go beyond a man's home and business, what a wide field you begin to wander in. You can see other things that might be covered, and the committee thought we ought to stop there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 501. That no right to any public lands initiated or acquired prior to entering military service by any person under the homestead laws, the desert-land laws, the mining-land laws, or any other laws of the United States, shall be forfeited or prejudiced by reason of his absence from such land, or of his failure to perform any work or make any improvements thereon, or to do any other act required by any such law during the period of such service. Nothing in this section contained shall be construed to deprive a person in military service or his heirs or devisees of any benefits to which he or they may be entitled under the act entitled "An act for the relief of homestead entrymen or settlers who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war," approved July 28, 1917; the act entitled "An act for the protection of desert-land entrymen who enter the military or naval service of the United States in time of war," approved August 7, 1917; the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," approved August 10, 1917; the joint resolution "To relieve the owners of mining claims who have been mustered into the military or naval service of the United States as officers or enlisted men from performing assessment work during the term of such service," approved July 17, 1917; or any other act or resolution of Congress: Provided, That nothing in this section contained shall be construed to limit or affect the right of a person in the military service to take any action during his term of service that may be authorized by law, or the regulations of the Interior Department thereunder, for the perfection, defense, or further assertion of rights initiated prior to the date of entering military service, and it shall be lawful for any person while in military service to make any affidavit or submit any proof that may be required by law or the practice of the General Land

Office in connection with the entry, perfection, defense, or further assertion of any rights initiated prior to entering military service, before the officer commanding in the branch of the service in which the party is engaged, which affidavits shall be as binding in law and with like penalties as if taken before the register of the United States Land Office.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word, in order to ask the gentleman a question. How are you going to enforce a provision that requires an affidavit to be made, as provided in line 7, page 23, before the commanding officer of the branch of the service in which the party is engaged? If the man was in the military service, the commanding officer might be stationed at some distance. If he was in the naval service, he might be stationed at a very great distance. Why ought not the provision to say "the officer in immediate command holding a commission"? It could be taken before a lieutenant, a captain, or a major, as the case may be.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This is a copy of the present statute and we have applied it to the present conditions. I do not think it will work badly. It has been on the statute book for a great many years.

Mr. ROBBINS. I am looking at it from a practical standpoint, that it might be impossible to take the oath before an officer of that branch of the service. If he was serving with a division in France, the commanding officer of that division might be stationed 50 miles from where he was; he might be stationed for the time being in England or Italy. If he was serving in the Navy or the Marine Corps or the Coast Guard Service, the commanding officer would not be on the boat where he was except on rare occasions. It does not seem to me to be a practical provision. It ought to be an officer in the immediate command holding a commission.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBBINS. I will yield.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the suggestion is a proper one, and I see no reason why it should not be accepted by the committee. The reasons have not existed in the past that now exist, because we have never had any such foreign service. The conditions now are such that the commanding officer will be at a great distance all the time from the soldiers in the field.

Mr. ROBBINS. I have had some knowledge of military service myself, and conditions are changed in this far-flung battle line that we are entering upon. I think the act ought to be made as practical and simple as possible as far as the soldier is concerned.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, this was added to the bill after we practically had agreed on the other sections, at the request or suggestion of gentlemen from the West—I think the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] and the gentleman from Oklahoma now in the chair. They said that was what they wanted and the way the committee wanted it. As far as I am concerned, I am willing to accept any amendment in that particular. Does not my friend think it means an officer immediately in command?

Mr. ROBBINS. It does not say that. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by adding, on page 23, line 7, after the word "officer," the words "in immediate command holding a commission."

Mr. Speaker, this act, which is to be known hereafter as the "soldiers' and sailors' civil rights act," is enacted for the protection of the soldiers and sailors during the war.

The present Congress has made every honest and faithful effort within its knowledge and power to properly care for our soldiers and sailors entering into this war for the defense of our flag and our country.

After passing the selective-draft act and compelling the soldiers to enter the military service, it is right and proper that everything should be done for their comfort and protection and care during the war and after it is over.

We first enacted the bill doubling the pay of the private soldier.

We then passed a bill providing for insurance and payment of annuities to the soldier during service, and also for the payment of annuities and money should anything happen to him or after his return from the service. This bill is intended to take the place of pensions and is a more liberal bill and more suited to the times in which we live.

Now, we are enacting a civil-rights bill, the purpose of which is, among others, to grant a sort of a moratorium or stay of all legal proceedings that may be entered against the soldier in the courts, or on any contracts that he may have made, during his absence in the service of his country. This bill provides that no soldier while in the military service shall be sold out for debt, or upon a lease, if thereby his property would be sacrificed or those dependent upon him placed in distress or want. Neither on a simple debt, nor on a lease, nor on a mortgage, is his property to be taken away from him. This act is notice to the world, so far as the United States soldiers are concerned, that the Government is protecting them and those dependent on them while they are in the military service and for three months thereafter.

It also protects their insurance contracts and stays the hand of the insurance companies, whose contracts are binding and forfeitable until the soldier returns, and then he can decide whether he wishes to resume payments or take some other course provided in his contract of insurance. More than this, Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to stay even the collection of taxes. In fact, the General Government becomes the next friend and guardian of those who are in the military service of their country while they serve and for three months thereafter.

The law also protects the soldier in many other particulars, but the details of this bill I will not pause now to discuss.

A mere reflection upon the circumstances will indicate how just this bill is. Our soldiers are taken for foreign service. Those in the Navy will be scattered along our vast coast line, or in the hostile waters surrounding Europe, and it may be for great periods of time they will be outside of the usual routes of communication. Our soldiers will be fighting no one can safely predict where; probably in France or Belgium, probably in Austria or Turkey, maybe in far-away Russia; they will be, Mr. Speaker, wherever duty calls them and wherever the flag leads them.

These young men, all between the ages of 21 and 31, are starting in life. Thousands of them have bought homes that are yet unpaid for. Great multitudes have little homes, with furniture, in some instances bought on the installment plan. Others may be living in leased premises, holding fine positions, drawing good salaries, meeting their financial obligations regularly. In the twinkle of an eye this is changed. The strong arm of the Government takes them, and willingly and patriotically they go. Their salaries are cut down; their incomes are diminished. The means of meeting their financial obligations are taken away. It would be, indeed, a cruel government that would not step in and take care of them and their families and their financial obligations while they are fulfilling the patriotic call of their country.

This, Mr. Speaker, the United States proposes to do.

Heretofore the States passed bills limiting the running of the statute of limitations, but, Mr. Speaker, how far short of a complete remedy such enactment would be at this time.

The United States with 100,000,000 people and with its vast wealth can not afford, and will not afford, to send its soldiers forth unless everything is done to aid, comfort, and sustain them while fighting for their country and preserving our institutions and our wealth.

It is no time to argue constitutional questions in the face of such great emergency as this. Under the general war-making power contained in the Constitution Congress has the right to do anything that would contribute to the common defense, and to the comfort, security, and safety of the Nation's soldiers. The Constitution expressly confers upon Congress the power to declare war, and the power to declare war our Supreme Court has held involved the power to prosecute it by all means, and in any manner in which war may be legitimately prosecuted, and in providing for the general defense nothing could be more potential than to provide for the contentment, happiness, and care of our soldiers and their dependents, and that this bill proposes to do to the fullest extent.

Mr. Speaker, may each American soldier go forth feeling and knowing that all his contracts and obligations at home are stayed. That no avaricious creditor can levy execution and sell him out by sheriff's sale or other compulsory legal process, and that all of his contracts and obligations will be kept in force, and that his wife and children will be undisturbed in the possession of his home, be it humble or be it great, and that standing by him as a father and friend is the great Government of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 7, after the word "officer" insert the words "in immediate command holding a commission."

Mr. ROBBINS. And strike out the word "commanding," which is superfluous.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to speak on the amendment. I direct the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as well as the chairman of the committee, to the fact that yesterday the House passed a bill introduced by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE], which makes provision for the protection of the rights of these men in substantially the same language as is included within the last five lines of this section, page 23.

Mr. WEBB. If my friend will permit an interruption, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] consulted me, and I told him I had no objection if the House wanted to pass it, but that we had included it in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. I thought, in view of that action, the committee might want to strike this out.

Mr. WEBB. The gentleman from Colorado said that he felt that he could get his bill through the Senate, and if he could not he would take his chances along our bill.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me unwise to have two bills on the same subject.

Mr. WEBB. If the bill of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TIMBERLAKE] passes the Senate, the Senate, of course, will strike this provision out of this bill.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, if we do not fix this law in some way it will be very confusing, because if you are going to file a claim required by law it ought to be modified by making the provision so that the soldier could comply with the terms of it.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 600. That where in any proceeding to enforce a civil right in any court it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that any interest, property, or contract has since the date of the approval of this act been transferred or acquired with intent to delay the just enforcement of such right by taking advantage of this act, the court shall enter such judgment or make such order as might lawfully be entered or made irrespective of the provisions of this act.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. I take it that the provisions of the last two lines are inserted in order that the court may make such an order in that class of cases as it would make if this measure were not enacted. It seems to me, however, that it is not very well worded. It says "irrespective of the provisions of this act." I think a simple provision to the effect that the party in such cases would not be entitled to the benefits of this act would be better.

Mr. SLOAN. I suggest "the provisions of this act to the contrary notwithstanding."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think that would be better.

Mr. WEBB. I think it is a choice of language. We have no pride about the language. If the gentleman desires to offer such an amendment I shall offer no objection to it.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out after the word "made," in line 20, page 23, the word "irrespective of the provisions of this act," and insert in lieu thereof the word "the provisions of ths act to the contrary notwithstanding."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 23, line 20, after the word "made," strike out the words "irrespective of the provisions of this act" and insert "the provisions of this act to the contrary notwithstanding."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 601. (1) That in any proceeding under this act a certificate signed by The Adjutant General of the Army as to persons in the Army or in any branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Army, signed by the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department as to persons in the Navy or in any other branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Navy, and signed by the Major General, Commandant, United States Marine Corps, as to persons in the Marine Corps, or in any other branch of the United States service while serving pursuant to law with the Marine Corps, or signed by an officer designated by any of them, respectively, for the purpose, shall when produced be prima facie evidence as to any of the following facts stated in such certificate:

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the word "facie" be correctly spelled in line 8, page 24.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

It shall be the duty of the foregoing officers to furnish such certificate on application, and any such certificate when purporting to be signed by any one of such officers or by any person appearing upon the face of the certificate to have been so authorized shall be prima facie evidence of its contents and of the authority of the signer to issue the same.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out in line 21, page 24, the word "appearing" and inserting the word "purporting."

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, we have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WEBB. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill as amended to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WEBB, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS LITTLE RIVER, ARK.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 2938) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Little River, in Poinsett County, Ark., at or near the section line between sections 35 and 36, township 11 north, range 6 east, and for its present consideration, which bill I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Poinsett County, Ark., is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across Little River, a tributary to St. Francis River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the section line between sections 35 and 36, township 11 north, range 6 east, fifth principal meridian, in Poinsett County, in the State of Arkansas, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CARAWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

A similar House bill, H. R. 6045, was ordered to lie on the table.

PORT OF ENTRY AT NORTHGATE, N. DAK.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill S. 2203, a bill to establish a port of entry at Northgate, N. Dak.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2203) for the establishment of Northgate, in the State of North Dakota, as a port of entry and delivery for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman if this bill has been reported by a committee?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. It was reported by the Committee on Ways and Means on yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the privileges of the first section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement be, and are hereby, extended to the port of Northgate, in the State of North Dakota.

The bill was ordered to be read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act for the establishment of Northgate, in the State of North Dakota, as a port of entry for immediate transportation without appraisement of dutiable merchandise."

On motion of Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PRINTING OF THE SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' INSURANCE BILL.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Wisconsin rise?

Mr. ESCH. To make request for unanimous consent in regard to the soldiers' insurance bill. In the absence of the chairman of the committee, I ask unanimous consent that the printing clerk secure a copy of the soldiers' insurance bill, H. R. 5723, and have it printed with Senate amendments numbered, so that the bill may be available when it is sent to conference in the morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the soldiers' insurance bill be printed with Senate amendments numbered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DAY OF PRAYER FOR THE SUCCESS OF THE AMERICAN ARMIES.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up Senate concurrent resolution 12 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the concurrent resolution by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 12, providing for the setting aside of a day of prayer for the success of the American armies in the pending war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the concurrent resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the people and the Government of the United States are now engaged in the greatest war of history, which in its determination is fraught with great results for good or evil, not only to the people of this country but to the people of the whole world, and which is the greatest undertaking upon which this country has ever embarked; and

Whereas this country is about to engage in preparing for war and will soon be sending abroad to the theater of war great numbers of our young men, there to take part in the sanguinary conflict and offer their lives in defense of their country's rights; and

Whereas it is in accordance with the customs and traditions of this country as a Christian Nation, and has heretofore been the practice of this country upon engaging in war to set aside a day, by official proclamation, for prayer for the aid of the Almighty: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is, requested by Congress to issue a proclamation designating a day of prayer and calling upon the people of this country on such day to assemble in their various places of worship and there offer prayer to Almighty God for the success of our armies and victory for our cause in this great conflict.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the concurrent resolution.

The question was taken, and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

CHAPLAINS AT LARGE, UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer this resolution and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which he sends to the Clerk's desk. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 167.

Resolution requesting the Senate to return to the House of Representatives H. R. 5271, being an act authorizing the appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army.

Resolved, That the Senate be, and hereby is, requested to return to the House of Representatives H. R. 5271, being an act authorizing the appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

CHAPLAINS AT LARGE FOR THE UNITED STATES ARMY.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2527, providing for chaplains at large for the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the further consideration of the bill S. 2527, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2527) authorizing the appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire what is the necessity, after the other bill, of undertaking to pass a bill that has not been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. SIEGEL. The Committee on Military Affairs has considered the bill and has reported the bill back with an amendment, striking out everything after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the language of my bill, which we passed here on September 11 last. The reason the resolution is offered was to overcome some objection which one gentleman seems to have fearing that the two bills would pass.

Mr. WINGO. This House has passed two bills already.

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, no. I want to say to the gentleman we passed only one bill.

Mr. WINGO. We passed one bill, and we had the Senate bill up the other day.

Mr. SIEGEL. Which was objected to.

Mr. WINGO. Which the gentleman said was the same thing.

Mr. SIEGEL. Which was objected to, and which we did not pass.

Mr. WINGO. And you have just secured the consent of the House to recall the one we passed, and now you propose to pass the one the Senate has passed. Is this the one that calls for 20 chaplains?

Mr. SIEGEL. Twenty chaplains.

Mr. WINGO. Why has not the Senate taken up our bill and passed it?

Mr. SIEGEL. The situation is as follows: One of our friends here in the House seemed to think this resolution ought to pass first, and that we ought then to take up the Senate bill, because the Senate bill as amended by our Committee on Military Affairs contains the same language as my bill. I have been over to the Senate, and after consulting several of the members of the Military Committee I was advised to take the procedure which I am taking here now.

Mr. WINGO. Why do they not pass the House bill and stop the controversy?

Mr. SIEGEL. The row arises from the fact that they can not get the full Military Committee together over there and Senator CHAMBERLAIN is away on account of sickness.

Mr. WINGO. Let the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2527) authorizing appointment of chaplains at large for the United States Army.

Be it enacted, etc., That the President alone may appoint for the period of the existing emergency not exceeding 20 chaplains at large for the United States Army, 12 as representing religious sects not recognized in the apportionment of chaplains now provided by law, and 8 for service in base hospitals, and such number of chaplains as he may determine to be necessary for service at training camps, cantonments, recruit depots, and in the National Army, selected from prominent clergy and ministers who have served at the front with the allied armies, but who have passed the age limit prescribed by law for appointment in the Regular Army.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all of the matter just read, after the enacting clause, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the President may appoint for service during the present emergency not exceeding 20 chaplains at large for the United States Army representing religious sects not recognized in the apportionment of chaplains now recognized by law."

Mr. WINGO. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman this: As I understood it, the Senate proposed an amendment?

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, no. This is as offered by our Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WINGO. This will make language identical with the House bill already passed?

Mr. SIEGEL. Word for word.

Mr. WINGO. Now, if you pass this bill, it will have to go back to the Senate and the Senate will have to consider the same thing?

Mr. SIEGEL. The Senate, from what I have been told by the Members over there on the Military Committee, will concur in our bill.

Mr. WINGO. There is no restriction restricting the President to appointment of citizens of the United States?

Mr. SIEGEL. The rules and regulations of The Adjutant General's office provide for it, and in addition provide that they shall be ordained ministers.

Mr. WINGO. Those rules and regulations can be changed overnight, as they have been heretofore.

Mr. SIEGEL. I want to say to the gentleman that, so far as I know, such names as will be submitted will be names of citizens of the United States.

Mr. WINGO. If the bill is now to be considered, will the gentleman object to an amendment limiting the appointment to citizens of the United States?

Mr. SIEGEL. Let me say to the gentleman this, that in the regular chaplaincy bill providing for chaplains there is no such provision.

Mr. WINGO. That is not the question.

Mr. SIEGEL. Personally, I have no objection to it, except I do think this, that if we add that language now we are going to have difficulty in the passage of the bill.

Mr. WINGO. I do not think any Senator will openly take the position that we should appoint a man chaplain in the United States Army who is not a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SIEGEL. I have no objection to it. That is the law now.

Mr. WINGO. The law as to chaplains is a separate law from that covering the other commissions, I am advised. I think we ought to have no question about it. I think the law as to chaplains ought to be the same as that as to Artillery officers or any other officers in the United States Army. They ought to be restricted to citizens of the United States. I have no objection to the bill. I am in sympathy with it.

Mr. SIEGEL. I have no objection to such an amendment, I believe they should be citizens.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will agree to that, I shall have no objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SIEGEL. I do.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is the law now. There is no question about that proposition.

Mr. SIEGEL. That is true; but there is no objection to adding the proposed amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I looked it up, and I am satisfied that that is the law. No appointments of chaplains are made of aliens; none but citizens of the United States. I see no reason for inserting here something that is already in the law.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman opposes such amendment, I will object to the consideration of the bill. I want that understood.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] going to offer an amendment?

Mr. WINGO. When we come to the consideration of the committee amendment, I will offer an amendment to the committee amendment. That will be the simpler procedure.

The SPEAKER. That is what we are doing now.

Mr. WINGO. Then I offer this amendment, Mr. Speaker. I suppose the best way would be to add it to the end of the committee amendment as a proviso: "Provided, That no person shall be eligible to such appointment unless he be at the time of his appointment a citizen of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. That is satisfactory to the gentleman?

Mr. SIEGEL. It is thoroughly satisfactory to me.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, while the Clerk is writing it down I want to ask the gentleman a question. I do not understand how you are any better off in sending over to the Senate a Senate bill with a House amendment when they already have before them an amendment to the House bill.

Mr. SIEGEL. I am told that if this bill goes over to the Senate now, the amendment will be concurred in immediately.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. I may be able to enlighten the gentlemen. The House bill was sent over to the other body, but the Senate Committee on Military Affairs has had no meeting to consider that bill. The Senate committee, however, has reported this bill and acted upon it, and the Committee on Military Affairs of the House has acted upon it by reporting the amendment, and when it goes over to the other body they will either accept the amendment or ask for a conference——

Mr. MONDELL. Or agree to a conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; ask for a conference.

Mr. GILLETT. In other words, the Senate preferred to pass their own bill instead of the House bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; and not only to pass their own bill, but to pass it after the House bill had been passed by the House and messaged over to the Senate two or three days before the Senate bill was presented for consideration. That is the reason why I objected originally to the Senate bill being considered while the House bill was before the Senate.

Mr. MONDELL. That is a very common practice on the part of the other body.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In a short time the gentleman from Wyoming will understand why that is done. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I hope the Senate will be enlightened on that subject. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WINGO to the committee amendment: Page 2, line 7, after the word "law," insert the words "Provided, That no person shall be eligible to such appointment unless he be at the time of his appointment a citizen of the United States."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SIEGEL, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. SIEGEL. I also move, Mr. Speaker, that we ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Agree to it, or ask for it?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill. It comes over to the House and is referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The Committee on Military Affairs of the House reports it with an amendment. The Senate has had no opportunity whatever to act upon the House amendment. There is plenty of opportunity to ask for a conference after the Senate has had opportunity either to accept or disagree to the House amendment.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, in order to please the gentleman from Wisconsin, I will withdraw my request.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has just said in his statement that the Senate is going to accept it.

The SPEAKER. The matter is not debatable.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a few appropriate remarks concerning the death of a former Member of this House, Hon. David Kemper Watson, who died at his home recently in Columbus, Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some remarks concerning one of his predecessors, Judge Watson. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks by printing in the RECORD a brief table showing the amount of taxes which will be paid by certain corporations under the new revenue law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a table concerning taxes to be paid under the revenue law, and so forth. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Sheppard resolution.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that a resolution relating to prohibition?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; the resolution which has passed the Senate already.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House to-morrow for 15 minutes on the subject of "Fair play in war time."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LONDON] asks unanimous consent to address the House not to exceed 15 minutes to-morrow, after the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] concludes his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman already has permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the topic "Common sense and war." Is this to take the place of that extension, or is this in addition to it?

Mr. LONDON. I want to talk to living men. I do not want to talk to the printer.

Mr. MADDEN. Regular order!

Mr. LONDON. It is the same thing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, October 5, 1917, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, October 5, 1917.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee in the midst of the bewilderment of our times, not knowing what a day may bring forth. We can not clearly read Thy way in human history. We can not see the end from the experience we have had of Thy touch and word upon human life. But we are sure in the center of our own lives of the pureness of our purpose and way, and our faith bridges the chasm of uncertainty that lies before us and anticipates the prize—the prize of the calling of God in this great Nation. Grant us Thy continual blessing and presence and guidance. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Tuesday, October 2, 1917, when, on request of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PETITION OF HANNIS TAYLOR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a petition to the Senate and House of Representatives prepared by Hannis Taylor touching certain constitutional questions with reference to the National Army. The Chair is in doubt as to where it ought to be referred, whether to the Committee on Military Affairs or to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I suggest that it go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so referred, then.

PETITIONS AND PAPERS SENT TO VICE PRESIDENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to make an observation and would like to have the advice of the Committee on Rules by the first day of the next session.

There has grown up a practice of sending to the Chair communications and copies of communications that are also sent to Senators of the United States. The Chair has no desire to avoid any responsibility nor to prevent any citizen of the United States from petitioning the Congress of the United States. That is the inherent right of an American citizen. But the present occupant has very serious doubts as to whether it is the business of the Chair to be made the medium of presenting to the Senate of the United States all sorts of petitions that citizens desire to send. Each State in this Republic is represented here by two Senators, and the Chair is slowly gravitating toward the opinion that the citizens of the several States should present their petitions to the Senate of the United States through the Senators from those States rather than impose the duty and responsibility on the Chair of doing those things.

I do not know what the right is or the duty is. I wish before the next session of Congress that the Committee on Rules would formulate some rule on the subject of the presentation of petitions. My mail is loaded with all sorts of things that I do not get either the time or the opportunity to examine, and that I do not think I ought to examine.

The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2938) to authorize the construction, maintenance, and operation of a bridge across Little River, in Poinsett County, Ark., at or near the section line between sections 35 and 36, township 11 north, range 6 east.

THE COASTWISE TRADE.

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment House bill 6175, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the title of the bill.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 6175) giving the United States Shipping Board power to suspend present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade during the present war and for a period of 120 days thereafter, except the coastwise trade with Alaska.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to know if this bill is unanimously reported?

Mr. FLETCHER. It is unanimously reported from the Committee on Commerce. It passed the House unanimously.

Mr. CURTIS. Will the Senator make a brief statement as to the purpose or object of the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. The purpose of the bill is to admit vessels of foreign registry to engage in the coastwise trade and to admit foreign-built vessels to engage in the coastwise trade during the war and for not exceeding 120 days thereafter.

Mr. CURTIS. Is that expressed in the bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. That is expressed in the bill.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I will state that I am not in favor of opening our coastwise trade to foreign-built ships under ordinary conditions; but I think, upon the showing made as to the necessities, that this measure is fully justified now, and that the interests of our coastwise shipping are amply protected by the limitations in the bill. It is limited to this war and 120 days thereafter, and ships can not come in except upon permits from the Shipping Board, specifying the limits within which they shall operate, and so forth.

I do not like to see legislation of this kind, but under the circumstances I think this legislation, as it is, is amply justified. I should like to see a provision inserted in it with reference to the employment of American officers in ships wherever they are available; but I recognize that to attempt to amend the bill now would defeat it, so I am not going to do that.

As I say, I think the bill is fully justified under the present circumstances and is properly guarded.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that as a general proposition we would not think of entering upon this policy, but under present conditions it seems to me that it is almost necessary for us to do this.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that during the present war with Germany and for a period of 120 days thereafter the United States Shipping Board may, if in its judgment the interests of the United States require, suspend the present provisions of law and permit vessels of foreign registry, and foreign-built vessels admitted to American registry under the act of August 18, 1914, to engage in the coastwise trade of the United States, provided that no such vessel shall engage in the coastwise trade except upon a permit issued by the United States Shipping Board, which permit shall limit or define the scope of the trade and the time of such employment, and provided further that in issuing permits the board shall give preference to vessels of foreign registry owned, leased, or chartered by citizens of the United States or corporations thereof, and provided further that the provisions of this act shall not apply to the coastwise trade with Alaska or between Alaskan ports.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOST OR DESTROYED PROPERTY.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 5647) to provide for the reimbursement of officers, enlisted men, and others in the naval service of the United States for property lost or destroyed in such service. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Paymaster General of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reimburse such officers, enlisted men, and others in the naval service of the United States as may have suffered, or may hereafter suffer, loss or destruction of or damage to their personal property and effects in the naval service due to the operations of war or by shipwreck or other marine disaster when such loss, destruction, or damage was without fault or negligence on the part of the claimant, or where the private property so lost, destroyed, or damaged was shipped on board an unseaworthy vessel by order of an officer authorized to give such order or direct such shipment, or where it appears that the loss, destruction, or damage of or to the private property of the claimant was in consequence of his having given his attention to the saving of the lives of others or of property belonging to the United States which was in danger at the same time and under similar circumstances. And the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to such articles of personal property as the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation of the Navy Department, with reference to the personnel of the Navy, or the major general commandant of the Marine Corps, with reference to the personnel of that corps, in his discretion, shall decide to be reasonable, useful, and proper for such officer, enlisted man, or other person while engaged in the public service in line of duty, and the certificate of said chief of bureau or major general commandant, as the case may be, shall be sufficient voucher for and shall be final as to all matters necessary to the establishment and payment or settlement of any claim filed hereunder; and the action of the said chief of bureau or major general commandant, as the case may be, upon all claims arising under this act shall be final, and no right to prosecute a claim or action in the Court of Claims or in any other court of the United States, or before any accounting officer of the United States, or elsewhere, except as herein provided, shall accrue to any person by virtue of this act: Provided, That the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to such articles of personal property as are required by the United States Naval Regulations and in force at the time of loss or destruction for such officers, petty officers, seamen, or others engaged in the public service in the line of duty: Provided further, That with reference to claims of persons in the Marine Corps filed under the terms of this act the paymaster of the Marine Corps shall make the reimbursement in money, and the quartermaster of the Marine Corps shall make the reimbursement in kind herein provided for: And provided further, That all claims now existing under this act shall be presented within two years from the passage hereof and not thereafter; and all such claims hereafter arising shall be presented within two years from the occurrence of the loss, destruction, or damage: And provided further, That the term "in the naval service" as herein employed shall be held to include service performed on board any vessel, whether of the Navy or not, provided the claimant is serving on such vessel pursuant to the orders of duly constituted naval authority: And provided further, That all claimants under this act shall be required to submit their claims in writing and under oath to the said Chief of the Bureau of Navigation or major general commandant, as the case may be: And provided further, That claims arising in the manner indicated in this act and which have been settled under the terms of previously existing law shall be regarded as finally determined and no other or further right of recovery under the provisions hereof shall accrue to persons who have submitted such claims as aforesaid: And provided further, That sections 288, 289, and 290, Revised Statutes, and the act of March 2, 1895 (28 Stat., p. 962), are hereby repealed: And provided further, That reimbursement for loss, destruction, or damage sustained and determined as herein provided shall be made in kind for such articles as are customarily issued to the service and shall be made in money for other articles at the valuation thereof at the time of their loss, destruction, or damage: And provided further, That in cases involving persons in the Navy reimbursement in money shall be made from the appropriation "Pay of the Navy," and reimbursement in kind shall be made from the appropriation "Outfits on first enlistment," and in cases involving persons in the Marine Corps reimbursement in money shall be made from the appropriation "Pay, Marine Corps," and reimbursement in kind shall be made from the appropriation "Clothing, Marine Corps," respectively, current at the time the claim covering such loss, damage, or destruction is paid: And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall apply to the personnel of the Coast Guard in like manner as to the personnel of the Navy, whether the Coast Guard is operating under the Treasury Department or operating as a part of the Navy, and all of the duties which, under this act, devolve upon the major general commandant of the Marine Corps with reference to the personnel of that corps shall devolve upon the captain commandant of the Coast Guard, and in cases involving persons in the Coast Guard reimbursement in money shall be made by a disbursing officer of the Coast Guard from the appropriation "Coast Guard" and reimbursement in kind shall be made by the captain commandant from the appropriation "Coast Guard."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN NEVADA.

Mr. PITTMAN. From the Committee on Public Lands, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 27) to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of Nevada, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 170) thereon and ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. I will state that the bill has passed the Senate twice and gone to the House, and I should like to send it there again.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the bill be read first.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to grant to any citizen of the United States, or to any association of such citizens, a permit, which shall give the exclusive right, for a period not exceeding two years, to drill or otherwise explore for water beneath the surface of not exceeding 2,560 acres of unreserved, unappropriated, nonmineral, nontimbered public lands of the United States in the State of Nevada not susceptible of successful irrigation at a reasonable cost from any known available source of surface water supply: Provided, however, That not more than one such permit shall be issued to the same citizen or the same association of citizens within an area 40 miles square: And provided further, That said land shall not be fenced or otherwise exclusively used by the permittee except as herein provided: And provided further, That said land shall theretofore have been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as subject to disposal under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, on application or otherwise, to designate the lands subject to disposal under the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That where any person or association qualified to receive a permit under the provisions of this act shall make application for such permit upon land which has not been designated as subject to disposal under the provisions of this act (provided said application is accompanied and supported by properly corroborated affidavit of the applicant, in duplicate, showing prima facie that the land applied for is of the character contemplated by this act), such application, together with the regular fees and commissions, shall be received by the register and receiver of the land district in which said land is located and suspended until it shall have been determined by the Secretary of the Interior whether said land is actually of that character. That during such suspension the land described in the application shall not be disposed of; and if the land shall be designated under this act, then such application shall be allowed; otherwise it shall be rejected, subject to appeal.

SEC. 3. That any qualified applicant for a permit under section 1 of this act shall file with the register or receiver of the land district in which said land is located the application for such permit and shall make and subscribe before the proper officer and file with said register or receiver an affidavit that such application is honestly and in good faith made for the purpose of reclamation and cultivation and not for the benefit of any other person or corporation, and that the applicant is not acting as agent for any person, corporation, or syndicate in making such application, nor in collusion with any person, corporation, or syndicate to give them the benefit of the land applied for or any part thereof, and that the applicant will faithfully and honestly endeavor to comply with all of the requirements of this act and shall pay to said register and receiver a filing fee of 1 cent per acre for each acre of land embraced in said application, and such applicant shall then be entitled to receive such permit after the lands embraced therein are designated as provided in section 2 of this act.

SEC. 4. That such a permit shall be upon condition that the permittee shall begin operations for the development of underground waters within six months from the date of the permit and continue such operations with reasonable diligence until water has been discovered in the quantity hereinafter described, or until the date of the expiration of the permit. Upon the presentation at any time of proof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior that any permittee is not conducting such operations in good faith and with reasonable diligence, or has violated any of the terms of the permit, the Secretary shall forthwith cancel such permit, and such permittee shall not again be granted a permit under this act.

SEC. 5. That on establishing at any time within two years from the date of the permit to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that underground waters in sufficient quantity to produce at a profit agricultural crops other than native grasses upon not less than 20 acres of land has been discovered and developed and rendered available for such use within the limits of the land embraced in any permit the said permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced in the permit, such area to be selected by the permittee in compact form according to the legal subdivisions of the public-land surveys if the land be surveyed, or to be surveyed at his expense under rules and regulations established by the Secretary of the Interior if located on unsurveyed land.

SEC. 6. That the remaining area within the limits of the land embraced in any such permit shall thereafter be reserved from other disposition and may, within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be sold at public auction to citizens of the United States under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe and in such farm units not less than 40 acres in area as he may prescribe to the highest bidder for cash or for amounts payable in annual installments not exceeding five.

SEC. 7. That the receipts obtained from the sale of lands under the provisions of section 6 hereof shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act.

SEC. 8. That all entries made and patents issued under the provisions of this act shall be subject to and contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal and other valuable minerals in the lands so entered and patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same. The coal and other valuable mineral deposits in such lands shall be subject to disposal by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the coal and mineral land laws in force at the time of such disposal. Any person qualified to locate and enter the coal or other mineral deposits, or having the right to mine and remove the same under the laws of the United States, shall have the right at all times to enter upon the lands entered or patented, as provided by this act, for the purpose of prospecting for coal or other mineral therein, provided he shall not injure, damage, or destroy the permanent improvements of the entryman or patentee, and shall be liable to and shall compensate the entryman or patentee for all damages to the crops on such lands by reason of such prospecting. Any person who has acquired from the United States the coal or other mineral deposits in any such land, or the right to mine or remove the same, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining or removal of the coal or other minerals, first, upon securing the written consent or waiver of the homestead entryman or patentee; second, upon payment of the damages to crops or other tangible improvements to the owner thereof, where agreement may be had as to the amount thereof; or, third, in lieu of either of the foregoing provisions, upon the execution of a good and sufficient bond or undertaking to the United States for the use and benefit of the entryman or owner of the land, to secure the payment of such damages to the crops or tangible improvements of the entryman or owner, as may be determined and fixed in an action brought upon the bond or undertaking in a court of competent jurisdiction against the principal and sureties thereon, such bond or undertaking to be in form and in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be filed with and approved by the register and receiver of the local land office of the district wherein the land is situate, subject to appeal to the Commissioner of the General Land Office: Provided, That all patents issued for the coal or other mineral deposits herein reserved shall contain appropriate notations declaring them to be subject to the provisions of this act with reference to the disposition, occupancy, and use of the surface of the land.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe the necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada if this bill was referred to the Interior Department, and whether or not there has been a report in regard to it?

Mr. PITTMAN. Yes, sir. This bill was passed first, I think, in the Sixty-second Congress. It went to the House and died with the Congress. It was again introduced and reported on favorably by the Department of the Interior and passed during the Sixty-fourth Congress. It passed the Senate after debate and amendment in this body.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to know if the bill in its present shape is as recommended by the department? In other words, were the amendments recommended by the department agreed to by the committee?

Mr. PITTMAN. Every one of them. Not only that, but I will state further to the Senator from Kansas that the bill in its present shape is also in the form in which additional amendments were placed on it by the Public Lands Committee of the House. I incorporated all of those amendments in the bill, so that there would be no conflict of any kind.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I assume that this applies locally to the State of Nevada?

Mr. PITTMAN. Purely; it applies to no other State. It is simply to encourage artesian development on such lands as the Secretary of the Interior may designate as being of that character. The minerals are all reserved and are not allowed to be fenced or utilized at all. The bill simply authorizes prospecting for artesian water.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 2974) to provide for the development of water power and the use of public lands in relation thereto, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 2975) for the relief of Katherine Macdonald; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 2976) granting an increase of pension to Delos Neer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 2977) granting an increase of pension to William F. Mullin;

A bill (S. 2978) granting an increase of pension to William I. Jones; and

A bill (S. 2979) granting an increase of pension to William A. Hacker; to the Committee on Pensions.

FARM-LOAN BOARD.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 2921, Order of Business No. 128, reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], be recommitted to the committee. This is done with the full understanding and agreement of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. The bill involves a very important principle and has not been considered by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PUBLIC LAND ENTRIES AND MILITARY SERVICE.

Mr. KING. Out of order, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 2918, Order of Business No. 130.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know what it is. I should like to have it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2918) providing that the forfeiture provisons of the land laws shall not apply in case of persons in the military or naval service during the present war.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, this bill was introduced at the request of persons who made an investigation as to whether or not persons in the military service who were squatters upon the public domain and who were entrymen upon certain public lands would lose their right by being absent from the lands during the period that they were in the war.

Mr. CURTIS. I understand it is simply to protect them while they are away.

Mr. KING. While they are in the war and for six months after the war is over.

Mr. CURTIS. They will not be compelled to make payment in case of their absence in the service.

Mr. KING. Not at all.

Mr. WARREN. I shall probably have no objection, but may we have the bill read?

Mr. KING. It is unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no right to hold, occupy, or enter any public land initiated or acquired under any public-land law of the United States by any person in the military or naval service of the United States during the existing war prior to the commencement of his military or naval service shall be lost or forfeited by reason of his absence from the land or of his failure to perform work or make improvements thereon, or do any other act required by the law under which initiated during his service in the present war and until six months thereafter: Provided, That each such claimant shall, within six months after the passage of this act, or within six months after he is mustered into the service, file in the local land office of the district wherein his claim is situated, a description of his claim, a notice of his muster into the service of the United States, and of his desire to hold his said claim or claims under this act: Provided further, That during the present war and until his discharge from the service, any person serving in the armed forces of the United States who is a claimant, applicant, or entryman under any of the land laws of the United States, or who has prior to enlistment filed a contest with a view to exercising preference right or entry thereunder, may make any affidavit required by law or regulation of the department affecting such claim before his commanding officer, as provided by section 2293 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to deprive a person in the military or naval service or his heirs or devisees of any rights or benefits to which he or they may be entitled under the public acts of the United States, Sixty-fifth Congress, No. 32, approved July 28, 1917; No. 36, approved August 7, 1917; No.

40, approved August 10, 1917; public resolution, Sixty-fifth Congress, No. 10, approved July 17, 1917, or any other act or resolution of Congress; nor shall anything herein be construed as abating any contest filed against the claim of any such person prior to his entrance into the military or naval service of the United States for failure to comply with the law prior to such entrance, or as validating or reviving any claim, application, or entry upon or in connection with which such person failed to comply with the applicable law or laws to his entrance into the military or naval service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. I desire that the title be amended to conform with the suggestion made by the Interior Department, and that the title as amended read as follows:

A bill providing that the forfeiture provisions of the land laws shall not apply in case of persons in the military or naval service during the present war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The title will be so amended.

PRODUCTION OF GRAINS AND CEREALS.

Mr. MYERS. Order of Business 122 is a resolution which was introduced by the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. The Senator from South Dakota has gone home, and he wrote me a letter asking me to call up this resolution and ask for the consideration of it. It was reported out favorably by the Senate Committee on Public Lands. It merely calls on the Secretary of the Interior to furnish some information. It does not enact any legislation whatever; it merely wants the departmental information. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be read, it is brief, and then I will ask consideration for it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 129 directing the Secretary of the Interior to make inquiry relative to the use of public lands for the production of grains and cereals during the war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to hear it read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That for the purpose of increasing the production of grains and cereals within the United States during the period of the present war with Germany the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to make an inquiry into the feasibility and practicability of the Government of the United States putting in a state of cultivation such parts of the uncultivated areas of the public domain and unpatented Indian lands situated therein as he may deem most suitable for growing food crops and to report thereon to Congress on the first day of the next regular session thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move to amend by striking out the word "directed" and inserting the word "requested."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

COAL LANDS IN WYOMING.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 730) granting certain coal lands to the town of Kaycee, Wyo. It is a bill which has once before passed the Senate, but failed to pass the other House. It has just been reported from the Committee on Public Lands by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. It is purely a local bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill named by the Senator from Wyoming?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following-described coal lands, or so much thereof as the town of Kaycee, Wyo., may apply for within six months after the approval of this act, is hereby granted to said town as a source of coal supply for the use of said town and for the use therein of the inhabitants and industries thereof, to wit:

In section 26, the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, in township 44 north, range 81 east, of the sixth principal meridian, containing 160 acres, more or less, upon the following conditions, that is to say: That said town shall, within two years from the approval of this act, open a workable vein of coal upon said land and shall continuously thereafter develop and operate a practical coal mine thereon for the purpose aforesaid; shall not assign or transfer said land or any interest therein; shall comply with such rules and regulations as may from time to time be prescribed by the United States Bureau of Mines and approved by the Secretary of the Interior for safeguarding the health and safety of the employees engaged in mining or handling coal therein; for the prevention of waste of the mineral resources thereof; for securing full reports from the town of the Secretary of the Interior as to the mining and disposal of coal mined in said lands, including construction, maintenance, and operation costs, amounts used for municipal purposes, amounts sold, purchases, and amounts of receipts from sales: Provided, That if the said town shall at any time neglect or fail to perform any of the conditions aforesaid or any part thereof, and shall continue such neglect or failure after reasonable notice by the Secretary of the Interior, the said land hereby granted shall revert free and clear of all incumbrances to the Government of the United States.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, is this a Senate bill or a House bill?

Mr. WARREN. It is a Senate bill which, as I have stated, has previously passed the Senate, but failed to pass the other House. I am hoping to have it passed at this time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Has the bill been previously passed by the other House?

Mr. WARREN. The bill has heretofore passed the Senate, but failed to reach the other House in time for consideration.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This particular bill, as I understand, has not passed Congress, but it is confined to lands in Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. It is confined to one piece of land for one particular town, far away from the railroad, which it is proposed shall get its own supply of coal from the public domain under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COL. L. MERVIN MAUS.

Mr. JAMES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1766) to authorize the President to appoint Col. L. Mervin Maus to the grade of brigadier general in the United States Army and place him on the retired list. The bill was called up on the calendar in my absence, and passed over on the objection of the Senator from Utah. I have talked to the Senator, however, in regard to the matter, and I think he now has no objection to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the President to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, Col. L. Mervin Maus to the grade of brigadier general in the United States Army and place him on the retired list.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is there a report of the Committee on Military Affairs on the bill?

Mr. JAMES. The bill was unanimously ordered to be reported favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs, as I understand, at this session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JAMES. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD immediately following the passage of the bill the report of the Committee on Military Affairs on the bill giving the facts in regard to the case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Military Affairs, having fully considered the bill to authorize the President to appoint Col. L. Mervin Maus to the grade of brigadier general in the United States Army, and place him on the retired list, report the same to the Senate with the recommendation that it pass without amendment.

Col. Maus was appointed assistant surgeon November 10, 1874; was promoted to be captain, assistant surgeon, on November 10, 1879; to be major and surgeon, December 4, 1892; lieutenant colonel, Deputy Surgeon General, April 7, 1902; and colonel, Medical Corps, May 10, 1907. He was retired on May 8, 1915, by reason of having reached the age of 64. He served as lieutenant colonel, chief surgeon of Volunteers, from May 9, 1898, to April 21, 1899.

These facts are all set out in a letter from the War Department, filed herewith, dated February 23, 1916, and sent to the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate. This letter of the department withheld its approval of S. 4570 on two grounds, viz:

1. His use of political influence to secure advancement was the subject of rebuke by the Secretary of War under date of February 5, 1914.

2. Nothing is apparent in Col. Maus's record which would justify his advancement to the grade of brigadier general on the retired list over scores of other colonels on the list equally deserving.

From that adverse report Col. Maus appealed to the Committee on Military Affairs for a hearing on the ground that it subjected him to injustice, hardship, and wrong. This hearing was granted and the testimony printed and filed herewith.

The committee is of opinion that the rebuke set out in the letter of the War Department was unjustified; that while the rebuke was administered as reported, the answer of Col. Maus was not reported. In that answer Col. Maus denies the use of social or political influence to secure advancement, and that if such influence was used it was entirely without his knowledge or consent. The friends of a man certainly have the right to ask advancement for him, without subjecting him to the charge of using social or political influence to secure advancement. In this case the facts show that whatever was done was done by Col. Maus's friends, and without his knowledge or consent.

The committee is further of opinion that Col. Maus is entitled to the promotion set out in the bill, for the following reasons:

His service in the Army numbered 41 years, and in 1907 had reached the rank of colonel, in line for promotion as Surgeon General with the rank of brigadier general, which he had every reason to expect by reason of his seniority in rank and length of service. In January, 1909, January, 1913, and in January, 1914, appointments were made to the office of Surgeon General of men whose length of service was less than that of Col. Maus.

He was recommended for a medal of honor by Gen. William P. Carlin, and honorably mentioned in orders by the War Department for meritorious service during an Indian campaign November 5, 1877, on which occasion he saved his command from massacre.

During the Spanish-American War he was given by President McKinley a volunteer commission as chief surgeon of the Seventh Army Corps under the command of Maj. Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, and with this corps served in Florida, and was the first regular medical officer to reach Cuba, and was largely responsible for the first thorough cleaning of Habana under American occupancy. Through his initiative Spanish barracks, castles, prisons, hospitals, and public buildings were thoroughly disinfected against yellow fever and other contagious diseases, thus contributing to the health and safety of Government troops that occupied them subsequently.

In 1899 he was ordered to the Philippines and served on the staff of Gens. MacArthur, Wheaton, Bates, Wade, Wood, Weston, and Mills, as chief surgeon. He served in active field work in northern Luzon during the Aguinaldo campaign. Following this duty in the field he was called on to do most important sanitary work among the natives of northern Luzon, vaccinating between 300,000 and 400,000 of the natives.

When the first civil government was organized in the islands in 1901, Gov. William H. Taft appointed him commissioner of public health of the Philippine Islands; in pursuance of this appointment he organized a health bureau, which dealt with the well-being and health of more than 7,000,000 natives, including the domestic animals; he eradicated the bubonic plague from the city of Manila; wrote the principal health laws for the Philippines; wrote the law for compulsory vaccination and put it into operation; made a most successful fight against Asiatic cholera, widely prevalent at that time; took a census of the lepers and selected an island for their segregation—over 4,000 in all; organized hundreds of municipal and provincial health boards throughout the Philippines, besides performing other sanitary work which greatly reduced the mortality of the natives and saved thousands of lives, both among the natives and foreign population.

For this splendid work Col. Maus was commended by all of his military commanders; Maj. Gen. Arthur MacArthur, who was the last governor general of the islands, in 1901, afterwards stated officially:

"The exemplary, vigorous, and efficient manner in which you conducted the affairs of your office impressed me from the beginning and relieved me of all anxiety on account of medical matters, and I have no hesitation in declaring now that the work you accomplished was a model of field medical administration."

Other recommendations of the highest nature were given by Maj. Gen. Lloyd Wheaton, Brig. Gen. J. M. Lee, Brig. Gen. Wm. S. McCaskey, and Maj. Gen. C. L. Hodges.

Acting Gov. Luke E. Wright, afterwards Secretary of War, makes this statement:

"During the period of his connection with the civil government as commissioner of public health he has rendered exceedingly zealous and efficient services. Aside from the ordinary duties of his position, which involved the organization of the entire health department, he has been compelled to combat bubonic plague and an epidemic of cholera. His executive ability and devotion to duty have been most commendable and have been productive of excellent results."

Dean C. Worcester, secretary of the interior for the Philippines, has called attention to the unusual energy and singleness of purpose which Col. Maus brought to his work, bringing about numerous radical reforms, his fight against the bubonic plague, for the census of the lepers of the islands, and for the establishment of a leper colony.

The evidence sets out in full the petition of the members of the Philippine Assembly to the President of the United States requesting that Col. Maus be appointed Surgeon General of the Army for services rendered as commissioner of public health for the Philippine Islands.

Twenty of the leading physicians of Manila attest these services in strong language, as do 46 resident Americans, the principal business men of the city of Manila.

The Chamber of Commerce of Manila, July 21, 1902, passed the following resolution:

"Whereas Lieut. Col. L. M. Maus, Deputy Surgeon General, United States Army, has been relieved from duty with the civil governor and in the Division of the Philippines as commissioner of public health, which office he has held during the past year; and

"Whereas during his incumbency of the office he has distinguished himself by his splendid services in the eradication of bubonic plague, with which the city was infected until recently; in the suppression of a malignant epidemic of Asiatic cholera; by his intelligent work in cleaning up the city and placing it in a sanitary condition; and in securing the passage of the city health ordinances:

"Resolved, That the American Chamber of Commerce extends its thanks for the work done under his administration and that a copy of this resolution be transmitted, through official channels, to the Secretary of War, and that it be also spread upon the minutes of this meeting.

"(Signed) A. P. TONTELLI,
"Secretary and Treasurer, the American Chamber of Commerce."

For these reasons, and the further reason that Col. Maus has never received a single advanced promotion for his services in the Spanish-American War, the Philippine insurrection, or Indian wars in which he served, the committee respectfully recommends the passage of the bill without amendment.

DEPENDENTS OF NAVAL OFFICERS AND MEN.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 6306) to provide for the payment of six months' gratuity to the widow, children, or other previously designated dependent relative of retired officers or enlisted men on active duty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. CURTIS. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the paragraph of the act approved August 22, 1912, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes," as amended by the act of March 3, 1915, which provides for the payment of six months' gratuity to the widow or children or other previously designated dependent relative of a deceased officer or enlisted man on the active list of the Navy and Marine Corps, be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting after the words "on the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps" a comma and the words "or of any retired officer or enlisted man serving on active duty during the continuance of the present war."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. I inquire of the Senator from Virginia if the bill was reported unanimously by the committee?

Mr. SWANSON. The bill was reported unanimously. I will say that it simply gives to the widow, children, or designated dependents of retired officers or enlisted men in the Navy who are serving on active duty during this war six months' pay as a gratuity. The same amount is given to the dependents of officers who have not been retired.

Mr. CURTIS. It makes the same provision for the dependents of deceased retired officers and enlisted men in active service during the present war as for the dependents of deceased officers and enlisted men who have not been retired?

Mr. SWANSON. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. The gratuity is only given in case of death.

Mr. SWANSON. Only in case of death, in which event six months' pay is given as a gratuity to the widow or children or dependents designated.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROHIBITION IN THE NAVY.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6362) to promote the efficiency of the United States Navy.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in construing the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of the selective-draft act approved May 18, 1917, the word "Army" shall extend to and include "Navy"; the word "military" shall include "naval"; "Article of War" shall include "Articles for the Government of the Navy"; the words "camps, station, cantonment, camp, fort, post, officers' or enlisted men's club," in section 12, and "camp, station, fort, post cantonment, training, or mobilization place," in section 13, shall include such places under naval jurisdiction as the President may prescribe, and the powers therein conferred upon the Secretary of War with regard to the military service are hereby conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy with regard to the naval service.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Virginia to explain what this bill seeks to accomplish, and whether or not it has been unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. SWANSON. The bill has been unanimously reported by the committee. A portion of the provisions of the selective-draft act of the present session regarding the sale of intoxicants to men in the military service covers the Navy and a portion is ambiguous as to whether it covers the Navy. The Attorney General thinks that the language is broad enough to cover the Navy as part of the military forces; but in order that there may be no doubt about the same rule applying both to the Army and to the Navy this bill simply provides that in that act, which purported to cover both branches of the service, wherever the word "Army" is used it shall be construed to include the Navy also.

Mr. WARREN. It makes no difference in application, except that it includes both services.

Mr. SWANSON. It makes no difference between the two branches of the service, but puts both on the same basis.

Mr. WARREN. That is what I understood.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL COURTS-MARTIAL AND DECK COURTS.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6363) to provide for the service of officers of auxiliary naval forces on naval courts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. I ask that the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That when actively serving under the Navy Department in time of war or during the existence of an emergency, pursuant to law, as a part of the naval forces of the United States, commissioned officers of the Naval Reserve Force, Marine Corps Reserve, National Naval Volunteers, Naval Militia, Coast Guard, Lighthouse Service, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and Public Health Service are hereby empowered to serve on naval courts-martial and deck courts under such regulations necessary for the proper administration of justice and in the interests of the services involved, as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That so much of the act approved August 29, 1916 (39 Stats., 556), as reads as follows:

"That when serving under the call of the President officers of said Volunteers may serve on courts-martial for the trial of officers and men of the United States Naval or Naval Militia or of said Volunteers, but in the cases of courts-martial convened for the trial of officers or enlisted men of the United States Navy or Marine Corps the majority of the members shall be officers of the regular naval service, and officers and enlisted men of the said Volunteers may be tried by courts-martial, the members of which are members of the regular naval service or of said Volunteers, or any or all of the same," is hereby repealed.

Provided further, That so much of the Naval Militia act of February 16, 1914 (38 Stats., 283), as reads as follows:

"That when in the service of the United States officers of the Naval Militia may serve on courts-martial for the trial of officers and men of the Regular or Naval Militia service, but in the cases of courts-martial convened for the trial of officers of the Regular service the majority of the members shall be officers of the Regular service; and officers and men of the Naval Militia may be tried by courts-martial the members of which are officers of the Regular or Naval Militia service, or both," is hereby repealed.

And provided further, That any act or parts of acts in conflict with the provisions hereof are hereby repealed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMUTATION PRICE OF NAVY RATION.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5646) to amend section 1585 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

Mr. CURTIS. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1585 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and it is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1585. Forty cents shall in all cases be deemed the commutation price of the Navy ration: Provided, however, That after January 1, 1918, the commutation price shall not exceed the average cost of the ration during the preceding six months, not to exceed 40 cents."

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Virginia if the bill has been unanimously reported by the committee?

Mr. SWANSON. It has been unanimously reported by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RATINGS IN THE UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. SWANSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5648) to establish certain new ratings in the United States Navy, and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the ratings of engineman, first class, engineman, second class; blacksmith, first class, blacksmith, second class, coppersmith, first class, coppersmith, second class; pattern maker, first class, pattern maker, second class; molder, first class, molder, second class; chief special mechanic and special mechanic, first class, be, and they are hereby, established in the artificer branch of the Navy with the following rates of base pay per month: Engineman, first class, $45; engineman, second class, $40; blacksmith, first class, $65; blacksmith, second class, $50; coppersmith, first class, $65; coppersmith, second class, $50; pattern maker, first class, $65; pattern maker, second class, $50; molder, first class, $65; molder, second class, $50; chief special mechanic, $127; special mechanic, first class, $80: Provided, That the base pay of machinists' mates, second class, and water tenders be, and it is hereby, increased from $40 to $45 per month: Provided further, That all the aforesaid rates of pay shall be subject to such increases of pay and allowances as are, or may hereafter be, authorized by law for enlisted men of the Navy: And provided further, That appointments or enlistments in the said ratings may be made from enlisted men in the Navy or from civil life, respectively, and the qualifications of candidates for any of said ratings shall be determined in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I judge from the reading of the bill that it is to equalize pay. Is that its purpose?

Mr. SWANSON. The bill creates certain new classifications of petty officers; in other words, it divides existing classifications. For instance, in the case of blacksmiths there has only been one class heretofore. This bill proposes to create two classes, a first class and a second class. The same is true in the case of carpenters of the Navy. The effect of this bill will be, according to the statement of the Paymaster General of the Navy, to increase the pay of petty officers in the Navy about $240,000 or $250,000 a year.

Mr. CURTIS. It applies to enlisted men?

Mr. SWANSON. It applies to enlisted men, to petty officers. In addition to the commissioned officers and warrant officers of the Navy, there is a third class, called petty officers. We have heretofore enacted legislation affecting the commissioned officers and warrant officers. This bill applies to petty officers, to carpenters and blacksmiths, and the aggregate increase, as I have said, of pay to that class will be about $250,000 per annum.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OFFICERS' RESERVE CORPS.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 6350) to authorize the issuance of Reserve Corps and National Army commissions in the lower grades of Staff Corps and to remove the fixed age limits requiring the discharge of Reserve Corps officers.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the bill be read, Mr. President.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, That during the existing emergency the President is authorized, in addition to the grades now authorized, to appoint in the Officers' Reserve Corps and the National Army in the grades of second and first lieutenant in the Quartermaster Corps; second lieutenant in the Ordnance Corps and Signal Corps; second lieutenant, first lieutenant, and captain in The Adjutant General's Department, such citizens as shall be found physically, mentally, and morally qualified for appointment.

During the existing emergency no member of the Officers' Reserve Corps shall be discharged by reason of reaching the age limits provided in section 37 of the national defense act approved June 3, 1916.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will state that this is a bill that is highly recommended by the department, and is in the line of efficiency in the conduct of the war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROVISIONAL REGIMENTS OF FIELD ARTILLERY OR INFANTRY.

Mr. WARREN. I also ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5918) to authorize the President to organize provisionally as Field Artillery or Infantry and to use as Field Artillery or Infantry during the existing emergency such regiments of Cavalry as he may designate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes that during the present emergency the President be authorized to organize provisionally as Field Artillery or Infantry and to use as Field Artillery or Infantry during the existing emergency such regiments of Cavalry as he may designate, provided that immediately after the termination of the existing emergency such regiments shall be reorganized as Cavalry regiments in accordance with the prescribed organization of such regiments.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator if this applies only to the present war?

Mr. WARREN. It applies only to the present war. Not needing so much Cavalry in a foreign force, they are to operate as Field Artillery and go back to Cavalry at the end of the present war and then retain their formation as Cavalry.

Mr. CURTIS. Will this bill, if passed, have any effect on the standing or grade or rank of officers?

Mr. WARREN. None whatever.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STOCK-RAISING HOMESTEADS.

Mr. KENDRICK. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 2493, to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That any qualified homestead entryman may make entry under the homestead laws of lands so designated by the Secretary of the Interior, according to legal subdivisions, in areas not exceeding 640 acres, and in compact form so far as may be, subject to the provisions of this act, and secure title thereto by compliance with the terms of the homestead laws: Provided, That a former homestead entry of land of the character described in section 2 hereof shall not be a bar to the entry of a tract within a radius of 20 miles from such former entry under the provisions of this act, which, together with the former entry, shall not exceed 640 acres, subject to the requirements of law as to residence and improvements, except that no residence shall be required on such additional entry if the entryman owns and is residing on his former entry: Provided further, That the entryman shall be required to enter all contiguous areas of the character herein described open to entry prior to the entry of any noncontiguous land: And provided further, That instead of cultivation as required by the homestead laws the entryman shall be required to make permanent improvements upon the land entered before final proof is submitted tending to increase the value of the same for stock-raising purposes of the value of not less than $1.25 per acre, and at least one-half of such improvements shall be placed upon the land within three years after the date of entry thereof."

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Wyoming state, if he will, just in what particular this bill amends the 640-acre homestead law. This is the first time my attention has been called to this particular bill.

Mr. KENDRICK. Mr. President, I will say for the information of the Senator that this bill is intended to correct what was clearly an oversight in the language of the original stock-raising homestead act. The Senator will recall that it was the intention when that law was framed to permit a homesteader who under one of the former laws had taken up land of the arid character described in the stock-raising act to make such an additional entry of the same kind of land as to give him a total of 640 acres. It was provided that such an additional entry must be made within a radius of 20 miles of the original homestead, but the language of the act was such that if the homesteader could secure for his additional only land not contiguous to his original, he would be obliged to establish a new residence on the additional. On the other hand, if his additional land were contiguous the homesteader would not be obliged to build a new home. Under the law as it is now worded, the Department of the Interior has no choice but to adopt the interpretation that the homesteader who takes up an additional entry of noncontiguous land must not only build and maintain his home on the original, but must begin all over again and establish a residence on the additional as well. It was clearly not the intention of the law that this should be necessary, and the present measure is designed to correct that defect.

Mr. STERLING. This bill dispenses with the necessity of establishing a residence on the additional entry?

Mr. KENDRICK. Exactly—when the entryman owns and resides on his original entry.

Mr. STERLING. It being land coming within the provisions of the 640-acre homestead law?

Mr. KENDRICK. That is the meaning of the bill; and it has the entire approval of the officials of the Interior Department, because, as I have stated, they find it impossible to interpret the law in any other way, as it now reads.

Mr. STERLING. This bill was considered and reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. KENDRICK. And reported without amendment.

Mr. HUSTING. Mr. President, I want the RECORD to show that I, as a member of the Senate committee, dissented from the majority in regard to this bill, and I object to its passage for the same reason that I objected the other day to the passage of the 640-acre homestead bill. In view of the vote at that time, I do not think it would serve any useful purpose for me to reiterate my objections; but I want it to appear in the RECORD that I object to this bill as vigorously as I objected to the other bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate resolution No. 77, providing for the printing of petitions and memorials in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That only a brief statement of the contents, as provided for in Rule VII, paragraph 5, of such communications as are presented under the order of business "Presentation of petitions and memorials" shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and that no other portion of such communications shall be inserted in the RECORD unless specifically so ordered by vote of the Senate, as provided for in Rule XXIX, paragraph 1; except that communications from the legislatures or conventions, lawfully called, of the respective States, Territories, and insular possessions shall be printed in full in the RECORD whenever presented, and the original copies of such communications shall be retained in the files of the Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The resolution is unanimously reported from the Committee on Printing. I ask for its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. POMERENE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 146), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee or any subcommittee thereof may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

Mr. THOMPSON subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted the following resolution, S. Res. 147, which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "The official report of the second inauguration of Woodrow Wilson as President of the United States and Thomas R. Marshall as Vice President of the United States, on March 5, 1917," be printed as a Senate document, with accompanying illustrations.

TUG RIVER BRIDGE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2663) granting the consent of Congress to the Wolf Creek Lumber Co. to maintain a bridge already constructed across Tug River, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the words proposed to be stricken out by the House amendment, insert the following: "which bridge is hereby declared to have been constructed in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906," and the House agree to the same.

MORRIS SHEPPARD,
JOHN K. SHIELDS,
WILLIAM M. CALDER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILLIAM C. ADAMSON, THETUS W. SIMS,
JOHN J. ESCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I present two statements, which I think will be of interest to the Senate and to the country. The first is a statement of the achievements of the most important session of the American Congress, and the second is a statement of appropriations and contract authorizations for the fiscal year 1918. I ask that the statements be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE MOST IMPORTANT SESSION OF THE AMERICAN CONGRESS—SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION.

The present extraordinary session of Congress has been marked by a greater volume of legislation and the enactment of measures of more momentous import than have ever been considered in any similar period in the parliamentary history of the country.

Any criticism, therefore, that has been leveled at the Senate and House growing out of the impatience to place the country upon a war basis at the earliest possible moment, in my judgment, is unfair, and indicates a lack of appreciation or knowledge of the enormous amount of work which the two Houses of Congress have performed.

Responsibilities of long duration and momentous in character have been knowingly, carefully, and, I honestly believe, intelligently assumed by the membership of this Congress. The searchlight of industry and wisdom has characterized their work on each measure, be it large or small.

Congress was convened in special session by proclamation of the President April 2, and has been in session, including tomorrow, 188 days, which includes Sundays and holidays.

Its membership has scarcely taken time to eat or sleep because of the responsibilities which the war has imposed upon them.

It must be remembered that it was a new Congress that met in response to the call of the President, and that at the very outset it was confronted with the necessity of organization, a process ordinarily requiring time and involving many contests. In the present instance, however, the committees of both Houses were named on April 3, the work of selecting them having been done during the vacation period.

At the special session of the Senate, immediately preceding the extra session of Congress, there was passed a modified cloture rule under which public business might be expedited. The adoption of such a rule was accomplished within a few days after its introduction, a result that could not have been attained in any other period of our history short of months of debate, if at all.

I beg to call attention briefly to the most important measures enacted into law at this session of Congress, as follows:

1. Public resolution No. 1, declaring a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and the people of the United States and making provision to prosecute the same. On April 2 the German war resolution was introduced in the House, and on April 6, or four days after the assembling of Congress, the President attached his signature to that measure. No delay was involved in the passage of this resolution, perhaps the most important ever offered, either in this or any other Congress.

2. Public act No. 1, appropriating $68,020 for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

3. Public act No. 2, general deficiency appropriation act, appropriating $163,841,400.52, of which $100,000,000 was for the national security and defense and for each and every purpose connected with the war.

4. Public act No. 3, authorizing an issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes. This act appropriates $3,007,063,945.46 for establishing credits in the United States for foreign governments by purchase of bonds of our allies and expenses incident to preparation and issue of bonds and certificates; authorizes the issue of bonds amounting to $5,063,945,460, of which $3,000,000,000 is for meeting the loans authorized to foreign governments, $2,000,000,000 to meet domestic expenditures, and $63,945,460 to redeem the 3 per cent loan of 1908 to 1918, maturing August 1, 1918; and also authorizes $2,000,000,000 of one-year certificates of indebtedness temporarily to provide revenue.

5. Public act No. 7, authorizing one additional midshipman for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress.

6. Public act No. 11, appropriating $273,046,322.50 for the support of the Army for the fiscal year 1918.

7. Public act No. 12, authorizing the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States. This act authorized a selective draft of 1,000,000 men and contains other important legislative features pertaining to the Army.

8. Public resolution No. 2, authorizing the President to take over for the United States any vessel owned in whole or in part by any corporation, citizen, or subject of any nation with which the United States may be at war.

9. Public resolution No. 3, authorizing the American Red Cross to erect certain temporary buildings in Washington, D. C.

10. Public act No. 17, to temporarily increase the commissioned and warrant and enlisted strength of the Navy and Marine Corps from 87,000 to 150,000 men, in the first instance, and from 17,400 to 30,000 in the second.

11. Public act No. 18, appropriating $1,344,896.18 for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year 1918, and for other purposes.

12. Public act No. 19, amending an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," as amended, in respect of car service, and for other purposes.

13. Public act No. 20, amending the war-risk insurance act and appropriating $45,150,000 to insure vessels and their cargoes and expenses connected therewith.

14. Public act No. 21, appropriating $147,363,928.77 for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1918.

15. Public act No. 22, authorizing the issue to States and Territories and the District of Columbia of rifles and other property for the equipment of organizations of home guards.

16. Public act No. 23, appropriating $3,281,094,541.60 for the Military and Naval Establishments on account of war expenses. Up to this time this is the largest appropriation act known to this or any other country. Among other things, it appropriates $405,000,000 for an emergency shipping fund with which to begin construction of the greatest merchant fleet the world has ever known.
